THE hot debates between some of our learned and phlianthropic citizens lately going on as to who was the most cruel and inhuman to its prisoners during the war of the rebellion, the north or the south, reminds us of the story, of the Irishman who met a Jew and at once proceeded to give him a sound threshing, when asked why he did so, Said. "He killed our Saviour." "Why, that was eighteen hundred years ago" was the reply, to which the Irishman made answer. "Och! it makes no difference. I just found it out."

THE bill introduced by Senator Eaton having for its object the doing away with special legislation by the Minnesota legislature is a good one and deserves the support of all. By special acts too much chance is given for trading off; local bills are rushed through without being understood by the law makers and in the hurry they have no time to look them up, and do not like to oppose them unless they do know about them. If the senator from Wright succeeds in having his bill be come a law he will obviate this difficulty.

SPECIAL LEGISLATION.

Senator Eaton's Bill to Make All Laws General.

From the St. Paul Daily Globe we clip the following:

With but little discussion yesterday afternoon the senate recommended the passage of Senator Eaton's bill prohibiting special legislation. This measure is without doubt the most important introduced at this session, and if it becomes a law the next legislature will be relieved of a vast amount of work, thus affording time for the consideration of general bills. The bill is as follows:

A bill for an act proposing an amendment to section thirty-three (33), of article four (4), of the constitution of the state of Minnesota, prohibiting special legislation.

Be it enacted by the legislature of the state of Minnesota.

Section 1. The following amendment to section thirty-three (33), of article four (4), of the constitution of the state of Minnesota, is hereby proposed to the people of said state for their approval or rejection, which said section when so approved shall read as follows:

Sec. 33. In all cases when a general law can be made applicable, no special law shall be enacted; and whether a general law could have been made applicable in any case, is hereby declared a judicial question, and as such shall be judicially determined without regard to any legislative assertion on that subject. The legislature shall pass no local or special law; regulating the affairs of, or incorporating, erecting, or changing the lines of any county, city, village, township, ward or school district, or creating the officers, or prescribing the powers and duties of the officers of the same; authorizing the laying out opening, altering, vacating or maintaining roads, highways, streets or alleys; changing the names of persons, places, lakes or rivers; for opening and conducting of elections, or fixing or changing the places of voting; authorizing the adoption or legitimation of children; changing the law of descent or succession; conferring rights upon miniors; declaring any named person of age; giving effect to informal or invalid wills or deeds, or affecting the estates of minors under disability; locating or changing county seats; regulating the management of public schools, the building or repairing of school houses, and the raising of money for such purposes; exempting property from taxation, or regulating the rate of interest on money; creating corporations, or amending renewing, extending or explaining the charters thereof; granting to any corporation, association or individual any special or exclusive privilege, immunity or franchise whatever, or authorizing public taxation for a private purpose.

If this bill becomes a law by being made a part of the State Constitution, it will prevent a great many "woodchucks" from crawling into our treasuries, and prevent individuals from procuring "special acts" in their favor and often to the injury of neighbors, while the neighbors know nothing of what is going on. General laws can be brought into use whenever necessary to have any of the things mentioned done; if not as the law now stands general laws can be made to cover those now left out. Then people may become familiar with the law and make use of it to gain or to retain their rights, as against others. As things have been going it was almost possible for an individual to go to the capitol and get through a "special act" to hang a man, one would think, judging from some cases on record. With this amendment to the constitution general laws are apt to be more carefully made as the legislators knowing that they can not log roll through a "special act" for everything they happen to want will look to it that the general law is sound.

THE committee on speakers, of the Republican League soon to convene in Cincinnati, seem to have selected most of the Presidential aspirants of their party but have left off Gresham and the present incumbent from Indiana. Perhaps they think they can get along without the Hoosiers next time. They might at least have given them a chance to be heard.

ONE syndicate, of which H. Disston of Philadelphia, is a prominent member, has 150,000 acres of sugar land in the South, and Mr Disston anticipates that they will be able to produce from it 4,000 pounds of sugar per acre. This will give them $12,000,000 bounty, a nice little sum to given by the government to help out the profits of a wealthy syndicate. But the people will have cheap sugar.—Globe.

GOOD POLITICS.

Ex-President Cleveland has been talking again. This time it was before the Democratic club of Washington, the occasion being a meeting in commemoration of Jefferson's birthday. As usual, the ex-President dwelt at length upon the objects of the Democratic party. In the course of his remarks he indulged himself in a few words of advice, coupled with a warning against strife incubators, which are worthy of attention by men of all parties, as follow:

We cannot win permanent and substantial success by putting aside principle and grasping after temporary expedients. We shall court disaster if we relax industry in commending to the intelligence of our countrymen the creed which we profess; and we tempt humiliating failure and disgrace when we encourage or tolerate those who, claiming fellowship with us, needlessly and often from the worst of motives, seek to stir up strife and discord in the counsels of our party.—St. Paul Daily News.

DEMOCRATIC CLUBS.

Several of Them to Be Organized by Congressman Wilson.

WASHINGTON, April 11.—Hon. W. L. Wilson, of West Virginia, will leave Washington Monday on a tour of the West for the purpose of organizing Democratic clubs. His trip will extend to Tacoma, Wash., and will occupy several months. According to the official announcement, he goes as the representative of the National Association of Democratic clubs, which has perfected a plan of organization which has met with the approval of members of the national and congressional committees. The plan is now being put in operation successfully, and long before the campaign opens there will be a Democratic club in every voting precinct in the United States. Besides the vice president selected for each state, there will be a correspondent and organizer appointed for each county, and the whole will be directed from Washington, with the advice and co-operation of the several state, national and congression al committies.

HORTON IS POSITIVE,

And Coroner Quinn Is Satisfied He Told the Truth.

The remains of little Mabel Horton lay all day yesterday in the undertaking rooms of McCarthy & Donnelly, where they were viewed by quite a number of the morbidly-disposed. Coroner Quinn came around in the forenoon and made a critical examination of the body, as well as the clothing. Shortly after his arrival Walter F. Horton appeared, but did not go back to take a look at his child. He remained in the front part of the store, where he made all arrangements with the undertakers for the shipment of the remains. His face wore the same taciturn expression that usually marks his demeanor, nor did he seem at all disposed to converse much as to the drowning and identification. He gave orders to have the body placed in a neat, plain coffin, the same to be ready for shipment by the 6:30 train this evening to Trempealeau, Wis. Here the mother who met such a tragic fate on that awful night last August lies buried, and the child will be placed by her side. Coroner Quinn interrogated Horton critically as to the latter being positive and sure that the dead child was really his. "Yes, doctor," replied Horton, "the child is undoubtedly mine. I could not be mistaken, for I remember very distinctly the dress, shoes and stockings she wore the last time I saw her." When the coronor heard Horton's story, and being convinced that he was telling the truth, he issued to the undertakers the certificate of death. Horton thereupon left the store, saying that he would return to-morrow and be ready to take the child to Trempealeau.—St. Paul Daily Globe.

Killed By Electricity.

Madison, Ind, April 6.—(Special.)—George W. Varble, a stone merchant, complained of rheumatism in his feet Sunday morning, and purchased a galvanized battery. Although warned by the neighbors, he used it with no attendants While bathing his feet he attached the battery, and the shock, aggravated by his feet being in the water, caused his death. He evidently endured the most horrible and indescribable agony, as the room was littered and the battery broken in pieces.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Church Entertainments.

The church entertainment is the unyielding foe of liberality.

A whole family will hide for months behind a dollar that was paid to take them into a church entertainment.

Think of the children of the King going to the world and begging for money.

It was the mixed multitude that got the children of Israel into trouble. The mixed multitude is always found at a church entertainment.

Wherever you find a church entertainment you will find skulkers.

Thou shalt give unto the Lord thy God according as the Lord thy God hath blessed thee.—Deut. 16:10.

The main reason why churches have to resort to public entertainment is because some of the members have too much of the Lord's money in their pockets.

The church entertainment is a Midianitish woman that the people of God had better beware of.

What is the difference between going to a theater for the benefit of a church and for the benefit of a private individual?

"Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell to gether in unity," is a sight not to be seen when the church is engaged in giving public entertainments.

He that giveth, let him do it with simplicity.—Rom 12:8. Not through the fuss and bluster of a public entertainment.

The church entertainment looks a well watered plain, but there is a Sodom behind it that is full of danger

Every man shall give as he is able, according to the blessing of the Lord thy God which he hath given thee.—Deut. 16:17.

The editor is in receipt of a letter from A. G. Lano merchant of South Haven. Minn., in which he says that he is doing well and increasing trade compelled him to enlarge his store by building an addition to his building 12x40. The HEARALD will keep him informed of Carver County news during the ensuing year."

The above is a clipping from the Valley Herald, of Chaska, and shows that the prosperity of Wright County merchants is known far and wide. Wright is one of the best Counties of the great State of Minnesota.

ST. PETER merchants sell 20lbs of granulated sugar for a dollar, and every thing else in proportion just as cheap.—St. Peter Tribune.

The Tribune must be one of those that takes no stock in the tariff bill. Sugar 20lbs for a dollar! And every thing else just as cheap! all under the McKinley bill!

CORRESPONDENCE

ANNANDALE.

Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Rennie spent a part of last week in Minneapolis and St. Paul. He, on business and she, "on business too?"

Elder Higgins returned from Dassel last Saturday, where he had been, in connection with several other clergymen, attending a church trial.

Alexander Ridgway came in last Saturday afternoon, from Clomtarf on the back of a fine Hambletonian colt for his brother, the doctor. He said some body else might ride the next ninety-seven miles.

Adrian Fourmont has commenced building on his lot that he bought of Doctor Ridgway.

Joseph Cleveland, of Southside, has sold his farm there and is about erecting a residence in this village.

A. J. Harris, Esq., who has operated Mr. Pratt's sugar orchard, for the two previous seasons, reports the flow of sap so far this season, as being exceedingly light, and ascribes it to the drought of the two previous summers but, predicts a good run next season.

Prof. Davis, of Kimble, and a Mr. Atkins are about opening a jewelry and music store in a part of Mr. Linder's building.

The village council has appointed Frank Cleveland for street commissioner and village marshal.

The Rustlers on the back of the Italian government seem to be still erect. Do they expect Italian subjects to be treated, by our government, with any greater consideration than is accorded to American citizens?

The Messrs Huntingtons are opening up a lumber yard and a part of the lumber is already arrived.

Elder Higgins and several other of our young people went up to Fair Haven Tuesday evening to attend a sociable at Elder Ringers.

Cofield & McDonald have enlarged their Furniture ware rooms and propose to offer unusual inducements to purchasers of those wares in future.

Mr. J. J. Rennie started Wednesday morning on a business trip.

NORTH ROCKFORD NEWS.

Nearly everybody is Maple Sugaring.

Two strangers have appeared in this neighborhood; one at Fred Mosher's the other at Fred Lucas's. Both boys, of standard weight. All are doing well.

Chan Herrington came over from Maple Plain, Tuesday. Mrs. Hopkins went home with him for a week' svisit.

The Rev. Blackhurst failed to get here last Sunday on account of bad road.

The Epworth League will give a literary entertainment on Saturday evening. Come everybody.

John Parmeter visited Delano on bnsiness, on Thursday.

Three men to one fish at Mud creek.

Seeding will commence in earnest about Monday next.

The road law is discussed considerably now a-day. The question is, if you cant fence a man off the road; why can't he get a road to the road?

In letter Rev. W. H. Wilson, to your correspondent, informes us that himself and family are well and doing well, we should like to hear oftener from the Rev. W. H. through the Gazette.

Frank Thomas, of Rockford, is visiting and eating maple sugar at Levi Thompson's. The question debated upon two weeks ago "Resolved, that women should have equal right with men" was decided in favor of the negative. JEFF.

Independence Indictments.

Many inquire why docter does not change the name of his paper from Buffalo Gazette to Delano Gazette. They can not seem to understand it perhaps an explanation would be well enough.

The roads are almost impossible but the sun and wind will soon dry them up provided there does not come another storm.

All of the sick are getting better but some of them have had a hard time of it, would be well if the government could ship the grippe and Italians out of this country think the atmosphere would be more healthy.

Styner has finished sawing logs and now will turn his attention to farming.

It is reported there will be a wedding in the neighborhood in a few days. Well, let the good work go on marriage is honorable among all men.

School begun in District 102; on last Monday, Miss Edna Omera, teacher.

Farmers are getting anxious about their seeding. This time, last year seeding was well along.

Wm. Bachelor, the village blacksmith has sold out and it is reported he will look for greener pasture. Mr. B. is a good workman and we believe has given general satisfaction. He has been working here for a number of years.

Some of our farmers that have maple orchards are trying to make maple sugar but think the run will be short and sweet but then it does not cut much of a figure since we have reciprocity with Brazil. Sugar you know now is admited duty free. Can get 20 lbs of granulated for one dollar, but just waite until the trusts combine and form a corner, then up it will go.

It has been thought times would improve after spring opened up but have seen no material change as yet some parties have been in Independence looking for potatoes. They bring a good price now.

The State Legislature has adjourned with high honors.

Some of our farmers are making improvements on their buildings in the way of painting etc, etc.

The S. O. V. of Armstrong have surrendered their charter and disbanded this makes the second time for them.

The G. A. R. will decorate this year again at Maple Plain.

WATERTOWN

The Fair, on Monday, was well attended considering the bad roads and most of our merchants did a good business.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our regular Correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 10, 1891.

Mr. Harrison's new chum and most potential adviser is ex-Representative McKinley, who bids fair to become a monomaniac on the tariff bill enacted by the Billion dollar Congress, and which bears his name. Mr. McKinley who knows that reciprocity, even of the limited kind proposed by Mr. Blaine, would eventually result in the death of the doctrine of a high protective tariff, by causing its absurdities to shine even more conspicuously than they do at the present time, has been working on Mr. Harrison for quite a while to convince him that he must stop Mr. Blaine, even if it was necessary to force him out of the cabinet. Nothing would have suited Mr. Harrison better, but he was afraid of Blaine, and having obtained his promise to stand off and let him get nominated, if he could, he did not care to anger him, but the indications now are that McKinley has fully succeeded, for no cabinet officer ever got a more direct snubbing from the President than Mr. Blaine did when Mr. Harrison positively forbid his receiving any propositions informally or otherwise from the Candian Commissioners who had been invited here by Mr. Blaine.

It would not have injured Mr. Harrison in the slighest or have helped Canadian reciprocity for Mr. Blaine to have kept his engagement with the Canadians and heard their informal propositions, but Mr. Harrison was determined to snub the Canadians as well as Mr. Blaine, and in spite of the diplomatic smiles with which the Canadians received Mr. Blaine's little fib, manufactured for the occasion, about the President wishing to be present when their proposition was submitted, they knew that reciprocity with us was as dead as a door nail as long as Mr. Harrison is President, and that they would never be sent for to submit their propositions to him.

He who thinks that Mr. Blaine will tamely submit to being insulted does not know the man. One of his close personal friends said to me: "Owing to the incompleted condition of a number of most important diplomatic negotiations Mr. Blaine's hands are for the present tied, but when he gets things in such shape that he can leave them without endangering his own reputation, woe be unto Benjamin Harrison, if he shall not before then have made his peace, and if Bill McKinley is'nt careful he will discover that Mr. Blaine wields considerable influence in Ohio."

In resigning from the Senate Mr. Edmunds did not forget his lifelong thrifty habits. He makes it take effect next November, which gives him an opportunity to continue drawing the salary during the recess, without doing any work. There is no doubt here that the whole thing is cut and dried and that the governor of Vermont will, just before Congress meets, appoint Secretary Proctor to fill Mr. Edmunds unexpired term in the Senate.

Secretary Foster has selected ex-Representative Crounse, of Nebraska, to be Assistant Secetary of the Treasury, and he is now wrestling with the friends of several candidates to determine who shall be Supervising Architect of the Treasury in place of Mr. Windrim, who resgined to accept a better place in Philadelphia. Added to this task is the arduous duty Mr. Foster has taken upon himself of compelling the republican machine in New York, through the Federal offices, to favor Harrison for a renomination.

Inventors big and little, rich and poor, have been our honored guests for three days while the one hundredth anniversary of the United States Patent system is being celebrated. There have been meetings addressed by eminent gentlemen, banquets have been eaten, Mount Vernon has been visited and after seeing a military review this afternoon our visitors will return to their usual avocations.

Col. L. L. Polk, president of the National Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union, made a speech here last night at a public meeting held by the local Citizens Alliance that is said to have been one of the strongest presentations of Alliance principles ever made here.

There is nothing bashful about Secretary Rusk, who has cooly appropriated to himself all the credit for getting German embargo on American meat removed, or rather the promise that it will be soon removed.

The trial of C. A. Kincaid for the murder of ex-Representative Taulbee resulted in a verdict of "not guilty."

Interest.

From what I can learn from the published accounts of the proceedings of our legislature there is small prospect of any change in our usury laws.

That borrowers of money should be so stupid as to oppose a reduction of the legal rate of interest is incomprehensible. As I learn the products of the State of Minnesota, over and above a very ordinary subsistance of the producers, is absorbed by interest exactions and such exactions are becoming more and more oppressive year after year and in proportion as the soil becomes exhausted and the crops diminished. And what can be said of Minnesota can be said of all the other new states.

That bankers and money lenders should oppose a reduction of interest is no more than we would expect. But that borrowers should oppose such reduction is not comprehended. True the Bankers appeared before the committee and gave warning that the proposed reduction would drive capital out of the State. Such warning is a mere bug-a-boo to frighten the guileless; the money is here now and salted beneath resurection and where it cannot be recovered, except by a new loan, so I cannot see how it is to be driven out. It is here and here to stay. The eastern capitalist would be well satisfied with six per cent, with good security indeed they hardly realize more now, on first class security, the agents get the surplus.

Then again is it wise to borrow money and promise to pay a rate of interest that is sure, in the end, to bankrupt the borrower, in at least, eight times out of ten. The banker and the loan agent may grow rich out of it but how about the poor borrowers? In the language of an old money lender, "it is a misfortune to most people that they can get money so easily by promising great interest and mortgaging every thing they possess, and even anticipate their growing crops."

We are frequently told of a "scarcity of money for speculative purposes!" In plan English that there is not enough money for gambling purposes; for what is speculating but gambling? What advantage is it to the world that parties can borrow money and enhance the price of provisions after they have left the hands of the producers? Or what odds does it make to mankind whether John Doe or Richard Roe owns the Union Pacific Railroad? Or whether the stock is worth one dollar or one hundred dollars a share? After the producer has sold his wheat at sixty cents a bushel; who is benefited by speculators borrowing money and Bulling it up to a dollar? Certainly not the consumers. REX.

LIQUORS DESTROYED

The Way Huron Officials Have of Punishing Strong Drink.

Special to The Journal.

Huron, S. D., April 16.—Eight hundred dollars' worth of liquors were destroyed here today by order of Judge Cambell, of the Fifth judicial district. The liquors consisted of twe barrels of whiskey. 200 bottles of whiskey, 10 gallons of alcohol, 111 bottles of "B. B." and a quantity of wine, champaign, gin, etc. The stock was seized by the sheriff last January and belonged to Fred A. Lack who kept a "blind pig." Lack was arrested and gave bail for his appearance at the circuit court, but he was not to be found. Besides the liquors, the bar, counter, etc., were destroyed. This is the first instance of the destruction of saloon property under provisions of the state liquor law that has occurred here.

REPUBLICAN LEAGUE.

Arranagements for the National Convention at Cincinnati.

CINCINNATI, April 14.—Tuesday of next week the annual convention of the Republican League of the United States will convene in this city. It is expected the convention will be the largest in the history of the League. There will be 1,019 delegates—two at large from each State organization of the League and two from each Congressional district in which there are one or more permanent Republican clubs, together with the President and Secretary of each State League. All officers of the National League are delegates ex-officio.

Open headquarters for the National League will be established at the Grand hotel Saturday, the 18th. Reduced hotel rates and railroad fares have been secured.

On the evening of April 21 a Republican League mass meeting will be held in the great Music Hall, which has a capacity of 10,000. The meeting will be under the auspices of the league. Among the speakers invited are James G. Blaine, Chauncey M. Depew, John C. Spooner, Senator W. B. Allison, Gen. Russell A. Alger, ex-Gov. J. B. Foraker, Hon. John M. Langston, William McKinley, Jr., and Thomas B. Reed.

A. N. LOCKWOOD, president of an accident association in New York, says that since the accident companies offered an indemnity of $2,500 for the loss of a hand or a foot there has been a great increase in the number of accidents in the left hand; so many, indeed, that it was found that people were maiming themselves to get the insurance. Finally the companies were forced to offer a less sum for the left hand than for the right, since which time there has been a decrease of 80 per cent. in this variety of accidents.

EVERYONE may not know that the Bank of England notes are made from new white linen cuttings—never from anything that has been worn. So carefully is the paper prepared that even the number of dips into the pulp made by each workman is registered on a dial by machinery, and the sheets are counted and booked to each person through whose hands they pass. They are made at Laverstroke, in Hampshire, and are printed within the building, there being an elaborate arrangement for making them so that each note of the same denomination shall differ in some particular from the others.

THE astronomers tell us in their stellar predictions for April that Venus is making her way toward the sun and rises less than two hours before the sun appears above the eastern horizon. As she travels toward superior conjunction, she at the same time recedes from the earth, her semi-diameter naturally decreases, and with it her brilliancy. She has been fair to see for many weeks, and although she will not lay aside her starry crown for some little time to come her rival, Jupiter, is gaining rapidly upon her, and will fairly outshine her before her course as a morning star has been fully run.

THE bulk of P. T. Barnum's property ($5,000,000) went to Barnum Seeley, his only grandson. Barnum paid taxes on about $1,000,000 worth of real estate in his home city, Bridgeport, Conn. When he had by the accumulation of wealth passed all question of financial trouble, he used what his foresight had secured to him for the benefit of the poor people of Bridgeport. He established the system of building houses and selling them to the working people on long payment, and hundreds of the pretty residences now owned by the working class in that city were secured through Mr. Barnum's generosity.

LATER.

Reply to Italy.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—The correspondence between Secretary Blaine and the Italian government since the secretary's note to Marquis Imperiali, acknowledging notice of Baron Fava's departure, was made public to-day. The answer is plain and straightforward. In language as plain as diplomacy will admit, Mr. Blaine informs the Italian government that the country does not insure the lives of foreign people who may be sojourning within its domain. All that it can or will do is to extend to foreigners the same protection that is given to citizens of the Republic.

Upon the question of indemnity the Secretary says: "The Marquis Rudini may be assured that the United States would recompense every Italian subject who might "be wronged by a violation of a treaty" to which the faith of the United States is pledged. But this assurance leaves unsettled the important question whether the question has been violated. Upon this point the president, with sufficient facts placed before him, has taken full time for decision. He now directs that certain considerations in the general subject be submitted to the judgment of the Italian government."

If it should appear that among those killed by the mob at New Orleans there were some Italian subjects who were resident or domiciled in that city, agreeably with our treaty with Italy, and not in violation of our immigration laws; and who were abiding in the peace of the United States and obeying the laws thereof and of the State of Louisiana, and that the public officers charged with the duty of protecting life and property in that city connived at the work of the mob, or upon proper notice or information of the threatened danger failed to take any steps for the preservation of the public peace, and afterward to bring the guilty to trial, the president would, under such circumstances, feel that a case was established that should be submitted to the consideration of congress with a view to the relief of the Italian subjects who had lost their lives by lawless violence.

MINNESOTA LAW MAKERS.

ST. PAUL, April 10.—In the Senate yesterday morning, Senator McHale's celebrated "anti-tights" bill, a bill to prohibit females wearing tights on the stage, was taken up and passed by a vote of 37 to 12. The rest of the day was spent entirely upon local measures.

In the House the entire morning was occupied with hearing reports of committees. In the afternoon only five bills were passed. Among them was Tripp's bill preventing crimes against the elective franchise. The bill received 74 yeas to 25 nays. Long's bill making 8 hours a days' labor on all public works, was passed. Taking it altogether, the day was one of little labor but much talk.

ST. PAUL, April 11—The legislature was hardly in a mood for work. The effects of the gubernatorial banquet was plainly shown by the empty seats in both chambers, when the hour of convening arrived. In the Senate a resolution allowing each Senator to pick out a bill for preference was defeated. But little work was done in the morning. In the afternoon the bill repealing the law taxing mining lands and outputs was discussed and finally recommended to pass. The only bills passed were of a local character.

In the House there was not a quorum present when the roll was called and those that were there took a recess for an hour to let the late sleepers get around. The only thing done in the morning was to accept an invitation to visit the theater and see the Crystal Slipper. The afternoon was spent entirely in passing bills. The bill providing for the forfeiture of unearned land grants was defeated. Among the bills passed was the anti-pool bill. The House met again after the theater but did no work.

ST, PAUL. April 13.—The legislature was in a working mood on Saturday. In the Senate the first thing was the bill amending the law for the taxation of products of mining lands. The measure had been postponed the day before, but it was taken up and Tawney's amendment raising the tax from one to three cents per ton was adopted. The Keyes election law came next. After considerable debate the law was amended by striking out the provision providing for voting for a straight ticket by putting a cross after the name at head of the ticket. An effort without avail was made to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

In the House as soon as the journal had been approved, the body went into committee ff the whole. The first was the Hompe bill regulating railroads, which Currier moved be recommended for passage. This proposition was unanimously adopted. All that remains now is the formality of final passage. Searle's bill for funding the State debt was favorably recommended. Also the bill regulating the killing of game and fish and establishing a game warden. The text book bill brought out a spirited contest but no conclusion was reached.

ST. PAUL, April 14.—The last week of the legislature opened up yesterday with a vim. In the Senate, Eaton's bill prohibiting special legislation was recommended to pass. Senator March's bill abolishing state oil inspector and establishing local or village inspectors was recommended for passage. Searle's House bill regulating the employment of prisoners at the St. Cloud reformatory was passed. After a sharp fight the bill was passed for the employment of one-third of the convicts at stone work.

The House held three sessions yesterday and accomplished a good deal of work. The committee reported back the baking powder bill with all reference to baking powders stricken out and the report was adopted. The morning was spent on general orders. In the afternoon the calendar was taken up. The first bill was Hompe's railroad law which was passed as it came from the Senate with one vote against it, that being Knudson of Blue Earth The bill appropriating $20,000 for a a monument to Minnesota soldiers at Gettysburg was passed, also the bill providing for census of school children every alternate year.

ST. PAUL, April 15.—In the Senate yesterday morning a resolution was adopted directing the finance committee to investigate the cause for increased state expenses. The State's prison bill was taken up and it was not till afternoon that a decision was reached. The bill passed provides for election by the people of the board of managers and also provides for the manufacture of twine. The balance of the session was spent in passing local bills.

When the House met in the morning there was a general rush to get bills at the foot of general orders put upon the calendar. On local bills there were no objections but when members tried to get general bills thrust ahead, a halt was called. In the afternoon the bill prohibiting contract labor in the prisons was after discussion recommended to pass. This occupied most of the afternoon. In the evening there was considerable discussion on H. F. 375, a bill relating to mechanics' liens, introduced by Mr. Gallagher. The bill was recommended to pass after certain amendments had been adopted.

Mr. Zelch's bill, creating a text book commission was also discussed at length. The bill was recommended to pass.

LEGISLATIVE NOTES.

Waht The 27th Legislature of Minnesota is Doing.

ST. PAUL, April 16.—The legislature has three and a half more days to work. For the last six days good progress has been made by the lower house which has held three sessions daily. There is yet much to be done. A hundred or more local bills are on general orders and in hand of the committees are many which will never become laws.

The congressional reapportionment bill has been taken out from the crowd and rush and placed ahead on the calendar. This means that it will be passed in a day or so, as it comes from the Senate.

The great question of lower interest is yet no nearer settlement than a week before. The Bull bill from the House sleeps serenely in the arms of the Senate committee. The Davis bill from the Senate is away down at the foot of general orders in the House with over 200 bills ahead of it. Its chances for seeing daylight are very remote indeed. The majority in the House is willing to let the interest question alone if the blame can be thrown upon the Senate. The Senate looks the same way toward the House.

The feature of the week is the bill introduced by Senator McHale, called the anti-tights bill. When the bill was introduced some time ago it was laughed at in a quiet way and regarded as a harmless little matter which would not be seriously considered. But the senator from Shakopee was conscientious in the matter and earnest withall and he steadily urged the matter forward by stages until on the 9th, it came up for final passage in the Senate and was carried by a vote of 37 yeas to 12 nays.

The bill came to the House and was at once referred to the committee on education. After remaining there for an hour or so it was given to the judiciary committee. The passage in the Senate was a surprise to the State and especially to the managers of the Opera Houses of the cities. In view of the facts and to prove that the ballet of the present day was the correct thing, tolerated and endorsed everywhere, a general invitation was sent to the lower house the day after the Senate's passage, by some theatrical managers, asking the attendance of the legislature to witness an extravaganza in which the ballet was the principal feature. The invitation was received the day after the gubernatorial banquet, when the members felt much more like play than work. The invitation was officially accepted, not however without some great protestations and as soon as it was learned that official acceptation had been made scores of the members loudly proclaimed that they would not attend. How well they stuck to their word is evidenced by the fact that when the hour arrived for distribution of tickets over 100 out of the total number of 114 were taken and fully that number assembled in the evening at lhe Opera House and apparently heartily enjoyed the shapely forms and high kicking of the dancers. McHale's bill is at a discount in the House.

When the House assembled on the morning of the 11th it was generally understood that the Hompe bill regulating railroad traffic would be taken up for consideration so there was an unusually large attendance. As soon as the session had fairly opened, the rules were suspended and the House went into committee of the whole for consideration of general orders. The first bill for consideration was this celebrated bill of Senator Hompe which had been substituted for the Searle bill after the Currier bill had been killed. The bill without discussion was recommended to pass. On Monday it was put upon final vote and passed by 90 yeas to 1 nay, and only needs the governor's signature to make it a law.

Mr. Wahlund secured favorable recommendation and passage of his bill providing for the census of the school children of the state on each alternate July. The census is for the benefit of public schools and does not include charitable institutions.

Mr. Hadland's bill providing that no bonus shall be granted to any railroad except on a two-thirds vote of the voters of a town or village, and then not to exceed 2 per cent of the assessed valuation of the place, was recommended to pass.

Mr. Smout's bill to amend the constitution relating to elective franchise by withholding the right to vote from all persons not full-fledged citizens was voted down by 46 to 18, and when the committee arose the motion to indefinitely postpone the bill was carried by a vote of 50 to 15.

Mr. Steven's bill to amend the constitution so as to prohibit special legislation, which will, it is expected, relieve the legislature from the flood of local bills which hamper it every session, was recommended to pass.

Senator Hompe on the 14th introduced a bill appropriating $15,000 for additional legislative expenses, also the omnibus appropriation bill. Altogether there has been appropriated $165,000 for the expenses of the present legislature.

On motion of Senator John Day Smith the Senate reconsidered the vote by which it had, on the previous day, indefinitely postponed the billl increasing the appropriation for farmers' institutes to $10,000 and making some changes in their management, and placed the bill on general orders.

It is so easy for a man to say that the people dislike him because of envy.

NOVELTIES IN JEWELRY.

AN odd garter buckle in silver represents a broad leaf with a frog upon it.

THE miniature is being employed to ornament cuff buttons and bracelet clasps.

A BOOKMARK is in the form of a mason's trowel, of silver, with an ivory handle.

A HANDSOME shoe horn is made of ivory and has a heavy silver handle, elaborately chased.

A MASSIVE silver girdle is designed to represent a heavy rope. At one end is a large silver hook and at the other an eyelet with the rope apparently spliced and bound with cord.

SILVER brooches and vinaigrettes decorated in emerald are now shown. The shapes are generally plain and in no wise odd or striking; but the enameled designs are very pretty and sometimes even elaborate.

IN a Broadway (N. Y.) jeweler's window a cigarette case and matchbox, evidently made to accompany each other, are shown. They are incased in a neat leather-covered box. They are of silver and are ornamented in enamel. The same design, a bunch of richly colored pansies, decorates both.

"August Flower"

I had been troubled five months with Dyspepsia. The doctors told me it was chronic. I had a fullness after eating and a heavy load in the pit of my stomach. I suffered frequently from a Water Brash of clear matter. Sometimes a deathly Sickness at the Stomach would overtake me. Then again I would have the terrible pains of Wind Colic. At such times I would try to belch and could not. I was working then for Thomas McHenry, Druggist, Cor. Irwin and Western Ave., Allegheny City, Pa., in whose employ I had been for seven years. Finally I used August Flower, and after using just one bottle for two weeks, was entirely relieved of all the trouble. I can now eat things I dared not touch before. I would like to refer you to Mr. McHenry, for whom I worked, who knows all about my condition, and from whom I bought the medicine. I live with my wife and family at 39 James St., Allegheny City, Pa. A BLOW ON THE NOSE.

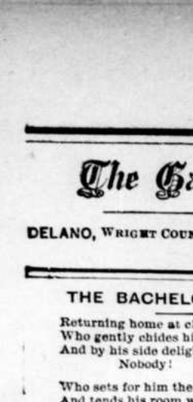
The Romance of a Weather-Door Introduction.

[Writtten for This Paper.]



HUGH RAYBURN was of such a silent, undemonstrative nature that he gave strangers the impression he was morose. Especially was this true of the few women he knew outside of his own family. Even in his callow years he had avoided girls as he would a pestilence. Not that he was a misogymist; but he was so shy. In their presence his powers were fettered and he felt as stiffened as a leaf in the first frost. And up to this day he had never felt the delights of a thaw. He still regarded the society of women as a good denied him because of his inability to please them; when, in fact, he had never once tried!

His mother had always said if ever Hugh married the woman would have to ask him.

Fate at last took him in charge, and gave him a good thump besides, as a gentle reminder that her powers were not to be slighted, and he was as subject to them as any other mortal. The morning she selected for his lesson he went on a seemingly commonplace errand to the post office to get some stamps.

He was not handsome; for he had the usual middle-sized, muscular body, and drab-brown hair and gray eyes of the average American. Besides he had a way of "mooning," as his sister Mary called it. That is, he would walk along with his chin sunk into his breast oblivious of all external things, and this detracted from his appearance.

As he ascended the steps of the post office, hands buried in the pockets of his coat, his mind off at a tangent, he received a blow on the nose that made the blood spurt, and brought tears to his eyes. He instinctively clapped his hand over the injured member, and looked around to see who or what had assaulted him in this violent manner, when he felt a soft rag mopping his nose, and collected himself enough to see a compassionate face looking into his, and to hear a remorseful voice say:

"Oh, I'm so sorry! Indeed I didn't mean to!"

While the tender hand wiped the blood from his mustache.

As soon as he became collected enough, he discovered the cause of the trouble to be that he and a tall young woman had tried to go through the weather door, but unfortunately for him, from opposite directions at the same time. And, as she had the advantage of him in the start, he had come to grief. When he had sufficiently rallied from both shocks, that of having his nose tenderly wiped by a strange hand, moreover a female's, and the pain of the blow, he stammered out: "It's of no consequence whatever!" While his eyes took as good a look as their watery condition would permit at his tender assailant.

She, too, was of the ordinary type, a tall, slender, brown-haired, well-dressed young woman, with an impulsive nature that occasionally carried her out of bounds prescribed by decorum, as she had just proven. She was very apt to do first and think afterwards.

She, having wiped up the "claret," dropped the bloody rag on the steps and went on her way. He turned and looked after her, then stooped and picked up the discarded kerchief, which he hastily thrust into his pocket.

When he got back to his office he sent the boy, who was a handy combination, on an errand which he knew would be executed at a snail's pace, and give him time to think. The boy having departed he spread the handkerchief on the desk and wondered what earthly use such a flimsy thing could be, while it mutely bore testimony in bright red spots, that it had been, and could be, of use, as he, if no one else, should know.

It had been clean and sweet and was still a filmy piece of lawn, daintily embroidered; but now it was as ensanguined a rag as Desdemona's should have been if causes always bore traces of effects. On looking closely he found the name "Elinor Merrill" in one corner.

"So that is her name," he murmured. He dropped into his customary musing state, and might have looked sentimental had not his nose by this time resembled a large "peach-blow" potato, and himself a discouraged pugilist.

His sisters had always said—with the strict impartiality of that relationship—in summing up his good points, that his nose was his strong point. This had been literally proven, for it had just come out of a terrific encounter unbroken, but with a serious loss of shape! The most skillful anatomist would have been unable to decide now its class—Greek, pug, aquiline or what. So much for him. Now for her.

When she hurried off and left him standing on the steps half bewildered she was overwhelmed with regret and shame. But before she had reached State street, by a transition peculiar to female feelings, she was giggling hysterically until her eyes were a watery match for Hugh's.

"Good gracious! how funny he looked! He might have got out of the way, the big stupid! He seemed more scared than hurt, too. I do not like a man to show fear at any time, and to show it for such a trifle is contemptible!" and she called up a look of scorn at his lack of endurance of physical pain.

Then at the thought of actual pain her expression changed to one of compassion, and she said:

"I suspect it did hurt him, poor fellow! It's no small thing to smash one's nose with a big door like that!" and then she laughed again at the unpremeditated turn of her sentence.

That day in her round of duties at the conservatory where she was a pupil and teacher she had fits of abstraction alternated by fits of giggling, but by evening had nearly forgotten the circumstance.

At the close of her day's work her mother asked her what she had been doing. Then she related the misadventure of the weather-door. Her mother said, seriously:

"Elinor, if you do not restrain your impetuosity you will certainly kill some one one of these days."

Elinor was as quick and eager in her movements, and habits of thought and speech, as Hugh was slow and deliberate, and a fair division of their respective faults would have made them models of deportment, at least.

Time went on, as it has an unimpeachable way of doing, till it reached that division marked by man as February. Hugh still kept his trophy and a distinct remembrance of the encounter and the girl. Elinor had an intermittent recollection of the accident, and a very indistinct one of the man. She now, however, took a look before she went through a weather-door. So did he, for that matter.

Hugh's sister Mary had formed a new acquaintance and was at that high pitch of enthusiasm incidental to a new female "fidus Achates." In a stronger gush of admiration than usual she had gone so far as to say to him:

"Oh, Hugh, you ought to know Nell! She's just lovely! So full of go and spirits, she'd stir even you up!"

To this Hugh made no reply other than a grunt and the muttered words: "She'll hardly have the chance!"

One evening as he was leaving the house his sister came in, and with her another girl. He was passing out without stopping when Mary called him back, saying:

"Hugh, wait!" then added: "Miss Merrill, my brother."

He knew her in the dim light of the hallway, but, her eyes being dazzled by the change from outer darkness to inward light, failed to recognize him, which was not so strange, since she had long ago forgotten him and his nose.

After that he met her often, but never once alluded to their first meeting, as he saw she did not in the least remember him. He very seldom spoke to her more than required by common courtesy. She regarded him as rather a "dry" young man, not in the least interesting, but "real good, poor soul," which is perhaps the most damnatory praise a woman can bestow on a man. As she was impetuous and not analytical her opinion was formed on the instant and was unfair to him.

He admired her of course, as she possessed all the qualities in which he was most lacking. But he was analytical, and decided that some of her impulses needed restraining, and a rashness of speech, to which she was given, toning down. Nor would he have objected to the task had it not been for his benumbing timidity.

But fate had not forgotten him. One day she sent him, ostensibly on business, to the tenth story of the Mohawk building. On the ninth was the conservatory where Elinor studied and taught. The business completed, he was returning, and between the tenth and ninth floors the old dame oiled the wheels of the elevator so they glided along perfectly. At the ninth they stopped for a single passenger, and as it had already been ordained, it was she—the she that fate had selected for him and introduced with so much emphasis. The elevator being a good one, moved smoothly on its earthward way, and would have accomplished its task had not fate appointed it to hang, stuck fast between the fifth and sixth floors. The boy in charge jerked up and down, signalled and called, all to no purpose; for there are powers superior to man and mechanism, and there it was destined to stay for a time.

Now was the time appointed for Elinor to recognize and appreciate qualities in Hugh whose existence she had not suspected nor been interested enough to try to discover.

At first the suspension in midair was rather amusing, but after a quarter of an hour had passed and they were yet suspended she began to lose courage.

"Oh, Mr. Rayburn! do you think there's any danger? Will we ever get out of this terrible place?" and she impulsively clutched his arm. They were both standing, and before replying he gently unclasped her fingers, and, holding the trembling hand, said, quietly: "It will be all right. It is only a momentary delay. You would better sit down here."

He seated her and taking a place beside her continued holding her hand, which clung tightly to his, and of which in her terror she was entirely unconscious. He had never clasped a girl's hand so before, and yet he felt not the slightest embarrassment in the situation. Indeed he would have enjoyed it had it not been for her distress. He talked to her soothingly, and she tried to be brave, while the boy pulled the cables frantically, and shouts reached them from above and below. Finally she burst into tears, and without a thought of impropriety, or anything of like nature, buried her face on the shoulder of the now silent Hugh, where she sobbed until her overwrought nerves were relieved and her fears soothed by his gentle words of encouragement. Then recalling proprieties she sat up and wiped her eyes.

"Mr. Rayburn, fate seems to have selected us for companions in misfortune."

He laughed and said: "Yes; and this is not our first encounter with her."

"Our first! What do you mean?"

For answer he drew from his pocket a long business-like pocketbook and opening it took from one compartment a little white scrap. This he gravely unfolded and spread on his knees as he said:

"That is her sign manual."

Elinor, reading the name he pointed to, exclaimed:

"My handkerchief! Where did you get it?"

"I got it, and a blow on the nose, that nearly stove it through my head—at the same time."

She looked amazed and said: "Was it

SHE SAT UP AND WIPED HER EYES.

you? And I've never recognized you all this time!"

He looked at her smilingly, and replacing his treasure, said:

"Yes, I agree with you. I think fate has selected us for companions, but not only in misfortune, I hope."

She blushed and glanced at the boy, whose back was to them, who, with head thrown back and mouth open wide, was vainly gazing upward if he expected to see anything, waiting for help and orders.

"What a time and place to say such a thing," and she moved to the further end of the seat, which action Hugh immediately imitated.

"Say you agree with me, darling," he urged softly in that tone, the sole property of men, and the despair of women to imitate. She must use either a sibilant whisper or a tone perfectly audible to anyone within ten feet of her. Taking her hand again he urged an answer by a gentle pressure of that member, and an appealing look from his handsome eyes.

"Well, yes," she began hesitatingly, and as this was the signal for which fate had waited, the elevator started down with a jerk, which would have thrown her to the floor had it not been for a pair of willing and very ready arms.

A LESSON IN SPELLING.

It Will Also Serve to Test Your Pronunciation.

The most skillful gauger I ever knew was a maligned cobbler armed with a poniard, who drove a peddler's wagon, using a mullein stalk as an instrument of coercion, to tyrannize over his pony, shod with calks. He was a German Sadducee, and had a phthisicky catarrh, diphtheria, and the bilious, intermittent erysipelas. A certain sibyl, with the sobriquet of "Gypsy," went into ecstacies of cachinnation at seeing him measure a bushel of peas, and separate saccharine tomatoes from a heap of potatoes, without dyeing or singeing the ignitible queue which he wore, or becoming paralyzed with a hemorrhage. Lifting her eyes to the ceiling of the cupola of the capitol to conceal her unparalleled embarrassment, making a rough courtesy, and not harassing him with mystifying, rarefying and stupefying innuendoes, she gave him a couch, a bouquet of lilies, mignonette and fuchsias, a treatise on mnemonics, a copy of the Apocryph in hieroglyphics, daguerreotypes of Mendelssohn and Kosciusko, a kaleidoscope, a dram phial of ipecacuanha, a teaspoonful naphtha for deleble purposes, a ferule, a clarionet, some licorice, a surcingle, a carnelian of symmetrical proportions, a chronometer with movable balance wheel, a box of dominoes and a catechism. The gauger, who was also a trafficking rectifier and a parishioner of mine, preferred a wooden surtout (his choice was referable to a vacillating, occasionally occurring idiosynerasy), and wofully uttered this apothegm: "Life is checkered; but schism, apostasy, heresy and villainy, however esoteric and malign, shall be punished." The sibyl apologizingly answered: "There is no allegeable difference between a conferrable ellipsis and trisyllable diæresis."—Pastimes.

FACT AND FANCY.

The Skillful Blending of the Real and Imaginary.

When man knows in part, he is eager to know in full. He is sure to make effort to know. His mind works from the known toward the unknown by varied processes. He reasons. He traces analogies. He imagines. He adds surmises to his certainties. And after awhile one is puzzled to know how much of his story is dream stuff, and how much the substance out of which true history is made.

But thus it has always been. Homer's poems are to such a degree the product of his own fertile and splendid fancy, and of the myths which he found afloat in the air of the world he lived in, that people forgot how much reality had place in the works of his genius. When Schliemann began to unearth the facts of marble, bronze and gold long buried in Greece and Asia Minor everybody was surprised to find so much in the Iliad and the Odyssey that may be called history.

Sir Walter Scott has put his own dream power into the ancient times of which he wrote. One who reads him needs a well-schooled critic and interpreter at hand to distinguish between the historical facts and the creations of fancy which the "Wizard of the North" has so bewitchingly blended.—Bishop John H. Vincent, in Harper's Young People.

DOMESTIC CONCERNS.

—Use tepid water for washing white silk handkerchiefs.

—When making white cakes, use one-half teaspoon more of cream of tartar than soda, as this extra quantity of cream of tartar makes the egg whites stiffer.

—To make those horrid lumps in mush disappear, make the mush pretty thick, then put in one pint of cold water and beat well and let it boil good. There will be no lumps in the mush.

—A Nice Dessert: Take pop-corn and pop it nicely. To three cups of the popped corn use two cups of sweet milk, a little salt, and a lump of butter; bring to a boil; stir occasionally, but do not allow to boil longer than two or three minutes. Serve with sugar and cream. Try these and report.—Ohio Farmer.

—Almond taffy is the latest "sweet." Boil together half a pint of water and a pound of brown sugar for ten minutes; blanch and slice through the middle one and one-half ounces of almonds; stir them in the sirup with two ounces of butter; let it boil hard for ten minutes; pour on a well-buttered dish to the thickness of half an inch.—Boston Budget.

—The small green insects that are so annoying to the winter house-plant may be destroyed, according to a good authority, by plunging the plant into a tub of water heated to 130 degrees. The temperature should be carefully tested by a thermometer. A momentary bath is sufficient, and the most sensitive foliage will not be injured by the process.

—Coffee Cake: Take one generous pint bread dough and work into it one-third cup butter, one-third cup sugar, one beaten egg and one-half cup raisins, stoned and well floured. Put into a buttered pan, let rise till it doubles its bulk, and bake about forty-five minutes in a moderate oven. Remove, brush with melted butter, sprinkle with sugar and cinnamon mixed. Serve either hot or cold.—Boston Globe.

—A receipt for a soap-bubble mixture allows sixty grains of white castile soap to one ounce of soft water. It should be carefully weighed by a druggist. The mixture should be placed in a bottle three times as large as will contain it, and after standing two of three hours, one-half as much glycerine as water should be added. This may be allowed a few hours to dissolve, and then should be thoroughly shaken at intervals to facilitate thorough solution. Large and durable bubbles can be made from this mixture, which should be prepared twenty-four hours before it is to be used.

—Louisiana Tripe: The Creoles of Louisiana have many richly-flavored dishes in which onions and tomatoes play an important part. For one, scald a pound of tripe and cut in strips three by five inches. Fry half a pound of sausage meat until done, frying in the same pan and at the same time a pint of sliced and drained tomatoes and one sliced onion. When the sausage meat is done lay it with the thick part of the tomatoes on the strips of tripe, and tie securely. Make a number of little balls of sausage meat from the remaining half pound and fry done; put a little butter in a pan and brown the tripe rolls quickly. When they are brown pile them up on a dish with the sausage balls in the middle and pour a sauce around them made by pouring a little water in the pan in which the tripe was browned, adding the thin part of the tomatoes, seasoning, thickening and straining.—American Agriculturist.

WHAT TO WEAR.

Some Suggestions Concerning Spring Costumes.

Black is united with almost every color, and jet is peculiarly favored upon tints of pink, yellow and gray. Black serge showing a weaving of graduated satin stripes is in vogue, and is made up so that, as far as practicable, the stripes run vertically. Black and white broken plaids, blocks and stripes in fine serge and camel's-hair are shown, and are becoming to all ages and figures. Rough fabrics are also woven in black and white combination. Mohairs of silk warp, both wide and narrow, plain and shaded, are very pretty in the grays as well as in black and white. As this fabric is light and does not take the dust it is desirable as a shopping and street dress, and the handsome alpacas, now so much worn, are recommended for the same reason.

Among the fancy rough fabrics are cheviots in which are woven invisible checks in neutral browns and grays, dappled with the inevitable knots of white, black or colors. These are more suitable for late spring. Smooth cheviots having grounds of mixed dark colors are also seen with vertical stripes of colored silk. Shepherdess suiting is a soft, twilled fabric resembling plaid camel's-hair, the squares being woven of soft hair to stand out in relief from the ground. These goods are pliable, and can be made up with entire satisfaction by any of the prevailing modes. A new fabric is called mousseline de soie. Black grounds are embossed with black silk figures, and this material is much worn by elderly ladies, or by widows who have laid aside crape.

In cotton challies, the cream-colored ground is the favorite, on which are displayed various shapes of flowers, ferns, moons, crescents, rings, feathers, and borders of blossoms, vines or wide-spreading leaves. The new ginghams are in plaids or stripes and very pretty. The French sateens are of great beauty of design and color. Inexpensive dresses are made of cashmere combined with brocaded silk in contrasting colors. In the newest dresses, shoulder seams are shorter than ever, and the high sleeves make them appear still shorter. The side-form seams reach almost or quite to the shoulder seams, and waists are much longer than heretofore. Foundation skirts are fitted as smoothly as a waist lining, the fullness being taken out by darts at the top of the front and sides, and the fullness of the back massed in the middle in plaits or gathers. —Woman's News.

A Neat Evening Dress.

This is a dress of figured crepe de chine, made in princesse form, with a demi-train. Beginning at the back of the neck is a length of Venus pink satin, which is full and shirred into the waist and the ends knotted in a large bow which falls over the train; a jabot of embroidered chiffon is put with surplice effect upon the front of the waist and descends to the feet; there is a narrow plaiting of white silk upon the front of the skirt; the bodice is filled in with pink silk, which is crossed and left open in a V, the waist being encircled by ribbon; the upper half of the sleeve consists of a full puffing of crepe, while the lower in formed of puffed chiffu separated by ribbon.—Philadelphia Times.

IN THE ELECTRICAL WORLD.

—An ingenious method of applying drugs hypodermically to the human body in which electricity is brought to bear is receiving considerable attention.

—As Howard Hall was starting an electric motor in Bridgeport, Ct., a few days ago, "a bright blaze shot out from the dynamo and burned his mustache off."

—A telegraph operator in Cheyenne, Wy., has invented an electric machine, to be applied to street cars, for indicating the number of business houses and the names of streets while the car is in motion.

—A new feature adopted for the lighting of the new hotel at Tampa, Fla., is the use of incandescent carbons, by which the light can be turned down dim if desired in a sick room, or for other purposes. This is the first hotel in the world lighted in this manner. The new discovery has been used in some instances for footlights of opera-houses. There will be 2,000 lights in all.

—The Bell telephone patent monopoly in England has expired. The patent there was granted for fourteen years. Cheap telephones will now prevail in England the same as in Germany, where Bell failed to obtain a patent. In this country the Bell patent will expire March, 7, 1893, having been originally granted March 7, 1876, for a term of seventeen years.—Scientific American.

—Prof. W. C. Webster, F. C. S., of England, claims to have reduced the process of electrical disintegration or destruction of sewerage to a commercial by economical basis. He has just given figures in a paper showing that 1,000,000 gallons for 24 hours can be destroyed at a cost of $10,000 per annum, with a 37-horse power motor. He failed by his process to produce any residuum that was of commercial value.

—It is learned that the Thomson-Houston Company of Lynn have been making experiments in operating electric street cars in that city with armatures wound on the car axles, with satisfactory results. If this method of car propulsion can be made practicable, it will dispense altogether with gearing of all kinds between motor and axle, and do away with that grating, grinding noise which is the only really objectionable feature of electric cars.

—It seems not unlikely that electricity will be applied to smelting furnaces in the near future. An electrical furnace has been patented in England which is said to have given excellent results in the series of tests to which it has been subjected. The electrodes are blocks of a carbon secured in metal cases, and placed opposite to each other in the walls of the furnace. The metal cases containing the carbons are kept cool by circulating water around them, and the carbons themselves are capable of automatic adjustment to compensate for wear.

IN Eutaw, Ala., last week ten girl babies were born, while a boy baby has not been born in the town in two months. This causes the editor of the local paper to inquire: "Whither are we drifting?"

Progress.

It is very important in this age of vast material progress that a remedy be pleasing to the taste and to the eye, easily taken, acceptable to the stomach and healthy in its nature and effects. Possessing these qualities, Syrup of Figs is the one perfect laxative and most gentle diuretic known.

IT is more natural to a man to lie in bed in the morning and wish he was rich than it is to get up and earn a dollar.—Atchison Globe.

DON'T laugh at your wife when she tries to stone the hens. She may ask you to help her stone the raisins.—Elmira Gazette.

HAVE no equal as a prompt and positive cure for sick headache, biliousness, constipation, pain in the side, and all liver troubles. Carter's Little Liver Pills. Try them.

THE average man would sooner pay dues at a gynasium than saw his own wood for exercise.—N. O. Picayune.

HALE'S Honey of Horehound and Tar relieves whooping cough.
Pike's Toothache Drops Cure in one minute.

THE interest you take in another man's business is never profitable.—Atchison Globe.

BILIOUSNESS, dizziness, nausea, headache, are relieved by small doses of Carter's Little Liver Pills.

THE dude's mission is to sap the foundations of society.—Boston Courier.

BRONCHITIS is cured by frequent small doses of Piso's Cure for Consumption.

THE spotted veil suits freckled faces to a dot.—N. Y. Picayune.

St. Jacobs Oil cures Backaches, Headache, Toothache, and all ACHES PROMPTLY

BEWARE OF THEM.

Cheap imitations should be avoided. They never cure and are often dangerous.

S. S. S. WILL CURE.

My daughter had a case of chronic Eczema, which for over five years had baffled the skill of the best physicians. As she was daily growing worse, I quit all other treatment and commenced using S. S. S. Before finishing the second bottle the scaly incrustations had nearly disappeared. I continued using S. S. S. until she was entirely cured. I waited before reporting the case to see if the cure was permanent. Being satisfied that she is freed from the annoying disease for all time to come, I send you this.

Dirt defies the king.—

If the old proverb be true, SAPOLIO is greater than royalty itself: Try it in your next house-cleaning: Grocers keep it.

DO YOU LIVE IN GREASE?

As a true patriot and citizen you should naturalize yourself by using the best inventions of the day for removing such a charge. To live in Grease is utterly unnecessary when SAPOLIO is sold in all the stores, and abolishes grease and dirt.

GEO. W. BOLTON, Local Agent.

DELANO DIARY.

—Fred Adickes moved his mill into town this week.

—H. Galley has moved his furniture store onto Bridge street.

—Thomas Reichel is building an addition to his residence, on Bridge street.

—John Batdorf, of Independence was in, Saturday, preparing to make maple syrup. He don't expect to make sugar enough to get the benefit of the two cents tariff.

—On Monday Nels Johnson had on exhibition a 16½ lbs pickerel caught in the Pioneer creek, with the spear. Fifty-five were caught by the party fishing but this was the largest.

—On Sunday, last while fishing John Waber received a load of shot in his elbow making quite a serious wound. Mr. Rusick was shooting fish and held the gun which done the injury.

—Officers of the law ought not to allow prisoners under their charge to drink to excess. When a man is in jail he should have the privilege of becoming sober and remaining so, at least till released.

—The school house has begun to leak, badly and will have to be re-roofed soon, as the pattering of water in the pails placed for its reception in several places is not conducive to study, in the average Delano pupil.

—In accordance with the expressed desire of the last annual school meeting the school board have finally voted to continue the school longer than eight months. Nine months will constitute the school year this time.

—Street Commissioner O'Leary is doing a good job of cleaning and leveling up the streets. Before his term expires next Monday it is his intention to have them in good shape for his successor in office. That's right.

—Neighbor Mowatt is having his residence re-sided, some large windows put in, painted and is fixing up fine, generally. If the sidewalk was graded where it should be it would materially add to the appearance of the property.

—The roof on the city hall does not prevent the water from getting inside the building and the council will, doubtless, repair it or get a new one soon. Buildings like the school and the city hall should be kept from leaking else the plastering may come down on some body's head and injure or kill them, and the city or the school district be in for a bill of damage.

—Fairday, last Saturday was a fine day, but the roads were very muddy. The streets were crowded a greater portion of the day, however, and calves and fat cattle found a ready market. Delano is getting to be up to any other place with her monthly fairs. On the first Saturday after the first Monday in every month. Located as it is on the railroad gives good facilities for shipping.

—Superintendent Lindsley kindly handed us a copy of the Governor's Proclamation concerning Arbor Day together with a circular bearing on the subject by. D. L. Kiehl, State Superintendent earnestly urging that it be duly observed throughout the state Our County Superintendent requests us to say that he would earnestly ask that each district in the county try on Friday May, 1st, to observe the day, with appropriate ceremonies and plant trees where they are needed.

—Charles Weise is the owner of a curiosity a calf less than a week old, congenitally minus its caudal appendage, and without the usual anus. Veterinary Surgeon Walter was called and succeeded in establishing the latter necessary adjunct to a long residence on this terrestial sphere; but the former article is yet wanting. The young bovine appears as lively as is common, and otherwise as well developed as any of its tender age. Gus is not sure but it is the missing link Evolutionists have long sought.

—On Wednesday Mr. Eb Brandon had his horse hitched in front of Borsh's store and Sam Murphy, the dray man, was rolling a barrel on the sidewalk from in front of Wittman's drug store which frightened the horse, causing him to break the bridle and run away down to River Street then to Bridge Street and then to Jesse Brandon's barn, no damage done except to the bridle and to Eb's face and hands, which were considerably bruised in trying to stop the runaway. Rolling barrels on the sidewalk will frighten most horses. not used to seeing them.

—The well digging at John Coolen's came to an abrupt termination, on Tuesday morning by, a stone being in the line of the drill. Preparations for getting rid of it, after two drills had been last in the attempt, by using dynamite was made, a cartridge weighing half a pound was thawed out and shoved to the bottom of the shaft and sufficient time given to allow it to explode; but, although an insurance man, two doctors the proprietor's father and another experienced well man were on hand to see what would happen, and John Coolen was on the other side of the street, the pesky thing wouldn't go off. So Tom carried another half pound cartridge, of dynamite over to his residence to thaw it out and try again. Tom believes, in the old adage "If at first you dont succeed, try try again."

—Tim Gleeson says his new pasture is for kids. It is fenced tight enough to hold geese.

—J. D. Young received, on Thursday, a new three seated carriage for his livery business.

—M. A. O'Hair commenced suit against Darius Martin before Squire Billings this week. Martin paid the sum of $15. and cost.

—Coolen and Erickson are the successful architects in having their plan adopted by the Watertown council, for a city hall at that place.

—Delano is getting quite a reputation for Architects and Builders. With the old reliable firm of L. M. Maxfield and the new one of Swedeback & Erieckson they can tackle all the jobs that come.

—Michael Devine was interviewing some of his old customers here on Tuesday. He has associated himself with a young man in Minneapolis and started again in his old business, that of commission merchant under the firm name of F. R. Noonan & Co.

—Potatoes, corn, oats, wheat and most everything the farmer has to sell is in demand at good prices whether this is because the tariff was taken off of sugar or not, it is quite a fine thing for the farmer. If this is the cause why not take the tariff of clothing and other things and histe up the farmer's produce another notch; besides allowing him some good clothes at reasonable rates?

—A young couple came up on the train from Twincitie, on Wednesday evening whose destination, was Long Lake. They came about twice too far and remained over night at Young's Hotel, taking the morning train east. They claimed the stations were not called out, as they did not know when they were at Long Lake. Such things ought not to happen on first class railroads. Perhaps they were too much interested in other things to hear the station called.

—On Thursday, while plowing in the field back of his house Alfred Johnson on the west side left his oxen to rest for a few minutes while he went to look after something else. The steers took a notion to go home and started on the run in that direction, just before arriving at the barn yard the plow which was following them struck a root of one of the large trees and something had to give. In this case it was a heavy soft maple yoke which Alfred would not have parted with for a small consideration. It is dangerous to leave a team standing alone in the field attached to a plow, even if they are oxen.

—Spring has come and people are beginning to build houses, and now is the time the surveyor should be brought to Delano to make a plat of the grade so that people can build their houses and fences where they should be, and the sidewalks can be more level. A sidewalk to the Presbyterian church and one from River Street to second street on Bridge street are felt the need of just now very much. A side walk on the west side from the bridge to near the Lutheran church would be a very useful thing. A street lamp near Mr. Merriman's house would aid people in picking their way home at night, in that end of town where several old gentlemen and ladies live. A sidewalk would be handy also, and much appreciated by citizens on south River street.

—On Wednesday a man from Minneapolis, came to Delano, to buy potatoes and got into one of our saloons and after imbibing too freely of the liquors that intoxicate became quarrelsome and is said to have drawn a revolver threatening to shoot some one, when the proprietor brought his fist into juxtaposition with the man's face in such a manner as to fracture the metacarpal bone of the index finder of the fist and make a bad looking expression on the face. Then the stranger was taken in by a constable, on a warrant sworn out by Len Dedrick and is sued by Squire Bohn, and the case of the State of Minnesota vs. Philip Guhen began. M. A. O'Hair appearing for the State. Defendant saying that he would have no lawyer. Justice Bohn bound the prisoner over to appear at the district court. Being a stranger here, he was unable to give the required $300.00 bond, and was sent to Buffalo to be placed in charge of Sheriff Nugent until the June term.

Street Rights.

It seems as though one of our base ball boys has been asleep for nearly two years and just come to life last week with the rest of the frogs, or else he is telling something which is not true, which likely is the case, as he states in last week's GAZETTE that he saw M. Conzet racing horses on the streets in which he is badly mistaken, as I have not driven a horse faster than any one has a perfect right to for nearly two years unless my horse was frightened by the base ball and become most unmanageable which was the case on April 5th, but I was obliged to take the back muddy streets with my family and let the base ball have the dry streets and hope the counsel will see to the matter to let people who work all week have privileges of the streets at least one day in the week for horses and carriages. The base ball boys all know that I am a lover of ball playing and am one of the first ones to assist in a game. Let it be labor or any thing else I am ready, always have and always shall be, as I don't let one crank disgust the rest of the boys, as I know the one of the base ballists. I don't think that he would allow any one driving on the diamond while there is a game being played, and this is just the way I feel when I drive on the streets. Yours with much respect to the rest of the boys. I remain, C. M. CONZET.

Hi, there! Where are you going, so fast?

I am running away from those cheap HARNESSES, to get a good one of CONZET & STEWART, Delano.

A UNIVERSAL QUESTION.

"How can I get the most for the least money?" This is the almost universal question among Americans. Always in business, usually in pleasure, often in religion, this is the tape and rule by which a new proposition is measured. Not to write a homily, but to aid hard-worked men in finding homes, and seekers of pleasure and health in finding desirable havens, is the purpose of this notice. We make it brief by saying: "Take the Great Northern Railway, from Delano to the Northwest and Pacific Coast." Publications concerning the Northwest sent free and letters of inquiry answered by F. I. Whitney, G. P. & T. A., St. Paul, Minn. The readers of this paper are advised to call and see Agent George Bolton for particulars if a trip for pleasure, business or health is contemplated to any of the United States.

Hezekiah Butterworth, of the Youth's Companion, and author of the famous "Zig Zag Journey" books, is preparing a volume to add to his interesting series, from material gathered on a trip over the Great Northern Railway, through Minnesota, North Dakota and Montana, during the summer of 1890. He thinks the Park Region of Minnesota is one of the most delightful sections of America for a summer outing.

County and Legislative.

In the list of county papers, the Times excepted, taken in Monticello, the Eagle leads, the Journal second, and the Herald a close third.—Wright county Times.

Monticello people must be great readers. The Gazette is taken by quite a number of the leading citizens and of course every body there keeps up with the "Times."

At noon, on Monday, April 20th, the legislature is to adjourn, and its members return to their respective homes, face their constituents and give an account of their votes on the different measures before their honorable body. Tell why they sat down on the reduction of interest? Why they didn't make car fare cheap? Why they didn't make temperance laws, abolish Sunday base ball? Make a law to allow women to vote or help Senator Keller through with his bill to pension school ma'ms. Why they didn't get appropriation for us, and why they allowed the other fellow to get one, as well as to inform the public of their whereabouts when some bills were voted on that their name does not appear on the roll call.

TO THE ASYLUM GOES HALGREN

Peter Halgren, the crazy fellow who shot his sweetheart, was this morning brought before Judge Pond in the criminal court. He presented a most forlorn spectacle and stood trembling before the bar while his case was talked over by the lawyers and the court. It was finally decided that he should be sent to the insane asylum under the committment passed by Judge Corrigan some time ago. This was what his lawyer wanted but a little clause was tacked to the committment which said that Halgren should be turned over to Sheriff Swenson when it came time for his discharge. So he is not to escape the indictment of assault which the grand jury found against him.—The Minneapolis Journal.

This is the man captured by constable John Tracy, near Cokato, soon after the offense was committed.

The Judges Protest.

Judge Lochren, of the district court, has written a strong letter of protest, signed by Judges Pond, Hicks, Smith, Hooker and Canty, against the bill which passed the house last week and is now before the senate, to reduce the municipal courts of the state to the rank of justice courts, making the district court a court of appeal for cases from the municipal court. He says the change contemplated is very undesirable and that it would not lessen the number of appeals from the municipal court. On the contrary, it would increase them. Neither would there be fewer appeals to the supreme court of the cases first appealed to the district court from the municipal court. The litigants would insist upon fighting cases to the court of last resort. Litigation would be increased. Besides, it would fairly overwhelm the district court with work. The municipal court has given satisfaction for twenty years.

NO MORE PENSIONS.

Special to The Journal.

DUBUQUE, Iowa, April 16.—The parade of the grand army encampment yesterday was a very imposing affair At least 3,000 veterans were in line. Commander Mills, is his address yesterday said the Grand Army should cease asking for more pensions. The adjutant-general's report showed 485 posts and 20,324 members. Gen. Veazy and Gen. Fairchild made addresses.

THE HONEST MAN IS KING.

Show me the man that's always true,
Regardless of renown,
Who scorns a cheat, no matter if
The world be up or down;
Who, than to eat dishonest bread,
Would rather starve, or swing,
Can look you frankly in the eye—
I'll show to you a king!

I care not if his cot be coarse,
His hand be brown and rough,
Nor that he own a foot of land—
He's honest, that's enough,
And I would greet him with a zest,
His praises I would sing,
I'd proudly grasp his hand any say—
Long live, long live the king!

His life is not an outward show
Of empty forms and creeds;
True to himself, and with his God,
It blossoms into deeds;
And noble beats his royal heart,
For it is large as two;
The maid who wins it may be sure
'Twill never be untrue.

His country's honor is his own,
He scorns to steal her gold;
Brave for the right, his honest vote
Is never bought nor sold;
His country's trust is safe with him.
Dear as his mother's name,
And sacred as his mother's grave
He guards her hallowed fame.

Lo, head and shoulders stands he o'er
The servile slaves of earth,
And every inch a king is he
By right of royal birth.
Bring forth the robe of honor, then,
And bring the golden ring,
Give him the sceptor, he who stands
Too oft an uncrowned king.

Then give to him the highest place
In heart, and home, and state,
And let the scheming minions see
How honors crown the great.
Whatever be his crade or place,
Loud let his praises ring,
Till sneaking cravens feel how low
Their place beneath a king.

—Martha Pearson Smith.

MR. CLARKSON, of Iowa was elected President of the national Republican league at their meeting recently at Cincinnatti.

THE United States according to late census reports leads the world in the production of iron and steel. Great Britain not accepted.

FORAKER of Ohio is said to have alluded to the government as now being run as the administration of James G. Blaine. Perhaps it is as near as our government will ever come to deserving thet appellation.

EXCEPTING Donnelly, Dedon and La Due Minnesota's Alliance Senators did not vote in favor of the bill paying a bounty on beets and on sugar manufactured in our State.

SCALY legs on fowls is something which no good breeder can endure. It is caused by a small insect and is easily cured. Make an ointment of lard and sulphur and add a few drops of carbolic acid. A few applications will usually cure.—Selected.

MANY farmers sell their eggs and chickens and keep their families on bacon and the cheaper meats. There is no man in the world who has a better right to eat chicken and eggs or even capon than the farmer, and the physician who knows his business will say "more eggs and less bacon."—N. S. Beardsley in Poultry Herald.

WE are in receipt of a marked copy of the DAILY NEWS, of Bristol, Va. & Tenn., in which we find a verbatim report of President Harrison's speech at that place on the occasion of his recent visit, on his tour of a month, in which he is now engaged. The President spoke in high praise of the evidences of thrift, and the spirit of enterprise manifested by the starting up of mining and manufacturing industries in a country where once all manufacturing was done elsewhere.

EXAMINER Kenyon is again after the American Building and Loan Association. He states that forfeited stock is sold to favorite parties to the detriment of the balance of the share holders. It seems strange that men in this intelligent age of the world will invest their hard earned money in any scheme that promises them bigger interest than they can obtain in other places while it offers to loan them money cheaper, at the same time retaining a fair commission for themselves. An individual had as well pay himself the commission and loan his own money to himself, as to give it to an organization offering to do such thing. Better do so.

Captured a Rich Man for a Husband.

CINCINNATI, April 13—Miss Anna Coleman, of Newport, Ky., a teacher in the high school, left last night for Minneapolis, where she is to marry J. W. Nye, of Livingstone, Mont. The couple never saw each other, though they have a mutual friend here. Miss Coleman did not know until just as she was starting that Nye is a man of great wealth and the owner of a number of rich copper mines in Montana.

Carver County Treasurer Weego Resigns.

Short in his Accounts $4500.

From a special to the St Paul Globe, we learn that county treasurer Weego has been found short in the sum of $4,500. by Assistant examiner West, who took him by surprise and went with him to look over accounts. He at once resigned and Gerhard Bongard of Cologne, was appointed by the county commissioners to serve out his time.

Rome Quakes.

A terrific explosion of gun powder in the magazine, at Pozze Pantolea, four kilometers from Rome, exploded at about 7 o'clock yesterday, Thursday morning damaging the fort near by, and shaking up Rome as an earthquake would. Many lives were lost. The cupola of the Parliament House fell. Houses were damaged, chimneys overturned. Fine pictures and works of art were ruined, even the vatican with its splendid stained glass memorials and other things was not spared.

A Poet Gets Square.

"A short time since," says the Keota, Ia., Eagle, "the Richland Clarion issued a call for spring poetry. Last week it published the first specimen, after making a little sport of it, not knowing the thing was loaded. That same little poem was an acrostic, the first letters of the lines reading downward that "the Clarion is no good." The Clarion should never have been sucked in on so old a game. We'll bet that spring poems will get a cold reception around the Charion office hereafter."—Commercial Union.

Business is Business.

A certain Georgia editor who is also a real estate agent, a building and loan association director, an attorney-at-law, clerk of the town council and pastor of the village church, was recently asked to marry a couple. He was in a great hurry, and the couple suprised him in the middle of a heavy editorial on the tariff. "Time is money," said he without looking from his work. "Do you want her?" The man said yes. "Do you want him?" The girl stammered an affirmative. "Man and wife," cried the editor. "One dollar. Bring me a load of wood for it—one-third pine, balance oak."—The Dalles, Ore. Sun.

$500,000 Paid for the Llano Coal and Iron Fields.

By Telegraph to the News, Bristol, Va. & Tenn

NEW ORLEANS, April 14.—The TIMES DEMOCRAT'S San Antonit special says: The Llano iron and coal fields were purchased yesterday by the Wakefield syndicate of Chicago. The cash consideration was $500,000. The company was capitalized at $1,000,000. The ore beds are more than sixty miles from the nearest railway. Four companies have endeavored to make arrangements to build to the Llano. All of them asked for a heavy bonus. The Southern Pacific has been quietly at work and has surveyed the route, which will be finished by September 1st. It will open up the largest marble, granite and iron fields in the United States.

Tariff Pictures.

Rents are a little higher in this country. Why? Because it costs more to build. Who is benefited? The wicked carpenter, for one. Look at this:

England—Average daily wages, sixteen cities, $1.28;
United States—Average daily wages, thirty-two cities (sixty-nine unions or associations), $2.35.

In the above comparison we have included a large number of the smaller towns of the States, where carpenters are only paid from $2 to $2.25 per day. In New York city the rate is $3.25, which would be a fairer comparison with the wages paid in the large cities of England.—The Press.

According to these figures there is only 7 cents more difference between small towns and New York than between England's average and the United States' average. They must have an awful tariff in New York.

THE Western States Commercial Congress, held at Kansas City, last week was attended by many representative men, and twenty-four states had delegates present. A lengthly letter from President Harrison, regretting his inability to be present was read. He wishes it understood that he believes in a home market, as it measurably emancipates the producer in proportion to its nearness, from the exactions of the transportation companies. "If the farmer could deliver his surplus produce to the consumer out of his farm wagon, his independence and his profits would be larger and surer." He might have added if every inhabitant in the city raised his own garden, and kept his own cow, chickens and pigs he would be able to furnish the produce for his own family and measureably emancipate the consumer from the exactions of the transportation companies, the middle men and even the producer. Then the farmer could rig up a spinning wheel and a loom for his wife and daughters to make their own cloth for wearing apparel; do their own sewing and then the transportation companies on land could go along with those on water and people would live at home more and be independent of each other. We dont see how it is to be brought about now, things have gone so far, unless by putting on more tariff and making tariff laws between states such as the recent Minnesota meat inspection law, and between counties, townships and even families, then we are of the opinion it would work.

RECIPROCITY WITH SPAIN

Gives the United States Immense Trade in the Antilles.

MADRID, April 20.—The reciprocity convention between Spain and the United States, as drafted by Premier Canovas de Castillo, representing Spain, and Gen. J. W. Foster, representing the United States, is based, as far as the United States, is concerned, upon the third, or reciprocity section of the new American tariff law. In return for the privilege of free entry into the United States of Antilles sugars, molasses, coffee and hides, and a reduction of the duty on tea, America will obtain exemption from duties on most of her raw and manufactured products and a reduction of the tariff on cereals and flour. The negotitions were protracted upon the question of the entire abolition of the tariff on cereals, flours and oils, including petroleum and lard. The same question in regard to tobacco was also raised, but not coming within the scope of the third section of the American tariff law was put aside. Premier Canovas offered protracted resistance to the abolition of the tariff on flour. Barcelona and Santander traders, who are largely interested in flour shipments, presented energetic protests which fortified the minister in his indisposition to accede to the American proposals. Eventually, representations that American reciprocity would be impossible without the free admission of American cereals induced Premier Canovas to assent to such a reduction of the tariff as will place American flour upon a nearly equal footing with Spanish flour. Santander merchants declare that, taking into consideration the cost of the transportation of Castile grain, of which the bulk goes to the Antilles, American flour will crush out the Spanish product in the Spanish West Indies. Cuba now consumes 500,000 barrels of flour yearly—chiefly Spanish, which enters free of duty—and pays for it $12 per barrel. Trade in American flour, burdened with an extra duty of 20 per cent since 1889, has been completely wiped out, to the advantage of the Spanish product. Under the new convention the entry of American flour, practically free of duty, will lower the price to about $6 per barrel, and will extinguish the importation of Spanish flour, while increasing the Cuban consumption to a million of barrels yearly, all of which will be American product. If the pressure of Spanish interests had not been counteracted by the demands of the Cuban commission of notables, who were determined to obtain reciprocity with the United States, Premier Canovas would have declined to make such concessions. The prospect of a dangerous tension of the relations of Spain with Cuba and Porto Rico, resulting possibly in civil war, obliged the government to sacrifice home industries to colonial interests. Under the new convention America will obtain a kind of zollverein with the Spanish Antilles. Her wheat, beans, flour, lard, petroleum, manufactured products and machinery will enter practically free of duty. Among other Spanish exports, olive oil will be replaced by American lard, and beans, now exported to Cuba in large quantities, will cease to be sent. The advantages resulting to Cuba will be great, but it is impossible to estimate the injury to Spanish trade.

CORRESPONDENCE

Annandale.

Rev. Mr. Higgins officiated in the M. E. Church last Sabbath morning and evening and left Monday morning for Monticello to attend examination for admission to the conference.

Our old-time friend, George Hardwick who has been in the employ of a Minneapolis lumber firm, for several months, past out on the Soo and Omaha Roads, buying lumber, returned here last week, Thursday, on business and to greet his old friends once more.

Mr. J. J. Rennie has recently purchased two business lots on the corner of Oak Avenue and Cedar streets, paying therefor $350. as we understand.

Davis & Adkins, the parties spoken of last week, as about opening up a music store here, have already in store several fine organs, a piano and many other string and wind instruments, also clocks, watches and jewelry.

A. A. Blorn has removed his harness shop into his new building corner Maple Avenue and Spence street.

EX-SENATOR BLAIR.

The rejection of Ex-Senator Blair, by the Emperor of China, to represent the United States at his court, is something unique in foreign diplomacy, especially as the ex-Senator is devoid of National fame, except what he has acquired by persistently championing, session after session, a pet educational scheme to its final ignominious defeat. But that is not the point I would make.

Since the President has been notified by the government of China that Mr. Blair's presence there, as a representative of our government, would be obnoxious to them some one of the thousand and more of our interviewers, has had access to the honorable gentlemen, to learn from him; the interviewer, in common with every body else, being unable to account for the objections, he being, comparatively, an obscure individual. The reply was that, at some time, during a heated campaign, when it was deemed important to the republican party, to carry California he roasted the chinamen, but that was done for partizan effect and ought not be taken seriously by China.

What an admission for a person aspiring to the dignity of a statesman to make! It is not the falsehood itself that is humiliating, for the highest dignitaries in the republican party are not above descending to the lowest depths of partizan tricking and demagogry, but to come out and admit that their declarations were lies and were uttered for purposes of deception is going down below moral tide water and it is left to ex-Senator Blair to make the first descent. His moral vision must be exceedingly dim or he could never have, publicly, confessed the truth, voluntarily. The people of New Hampshire, made no mistake when they retired Senator Blair. His successor may not be any better read up in English grammar but I will venture the prediction that he has got more Horse sense. REX.

Independence Indictments.

Independence, Minn., April 21st, 1891.

EDITOR BUFFALO GAZETTE:—At this writing it is raining and farmers begin to feel blue. Some of them have seeded a few acres only and a good many have done nothing at it yet. But then we read in the good book ever are promised seed time and harvest.

Most farmers are preparing to put out a big crop.

Hardly think sugar making has amounted too much this spring, reciprocity with Brazil has killed sugar making. They tell us we have got cheap sugar, why not give the poor cheap clothing it is a thing very much needed in a cold country like ours.

Quite a number of our farmers continue to ship milk and some have gone out of the business thinking it does not pay.

O. Styner has bought 40 acres of land of H. Lucas, in sec. 16. town of Independence known as the Sam Briley forty.

The roads are in very bad condition again, they were drying up some before these last rains.

Miss Mary Hoisington, of Independence, and Wm. Bradford, of Washington, were married in Minneapolis, on Monday, last and started direct for Washington Mr. Bradford's home. All the good people, of Independence, wish them a long and happy life, they were well known here in Independence and were highly respected by all of Independence best citizens.

This is the time of year people hunger after spring chickens and fish, but according to statute of state of Minnesota, we have a fish law, which prevents people from getting fish out of the lakes and streams at this season of the year, just when people most want them and when they are the best these game and fish laws are made for the benefit of the sporting gentry of the state of Minnesota and not for the poor and industrious class of citizens. God did not make this country merely for a hunting and fishing park but for the honest and hardy toiler who gets his living by the sweat of his brow. Now if these sporting gentry want to hunt and fish would suggest that the state of Minnesota allow them to shoulder their gun, fishing tackle, dog, lunch basket and angle worms and go out west among the Sioux; fish and hunt to their hearts content, but do not think much of a law that will deprive an honest settler of a few fish and birds three times a year. We do not read about them having any fish laws in older times but there was not many sporting gentlemen in those days. But enough on the fish question.

Most all the sick are up and around again and no new cases.

April showers have come, and the earth will soon be robed in green and all nature will be full of life and animation, the flowers will bud and blossom and send their fragrance on the morning air to different parts of the earth.

Spring time is a time of year for thought and meditation.

Brandon & Rader are trying to draw water from the bowels of the earth to supply the much needed want of one George Washington. Should think these tubular well men would soon go deep enough to draw the Chineman through. That would be a short route to this country, or by the short line.

MAPLE LAKE MUSINGS.

There has been but very little seeding done as yet, consequently the farmers are becoming extremely anxious over lateness of the season.

Dr. O'Hair, of Waverly, has been a frequent visitor here recently, attending patients.

Owing to the excellent work of our worthy council in the way of building sidewalks here our new village is fast assuming metropolitan airs.

Under the capable supervision of our efficient street commissioner, Mr. Maddigan everything is progessing satisfacterily.

One of the desideratum of Maple Lake is a summer resort for the pleasure tourists. It is said that Mr. Jee Anderson one of our most popular, enterprising young men is erecting a pavillion on the shore of Lake Ramsey. Enough said it will be a grand success.

J. D. Moore has about completed his large barn for the accommodation of his increasing patronage.

Misses Mary J. and Maggie E. Gorman have returned from the cities where they were looking over the latest fashions.

The Waverly correspondent is as silent as an oyster of late. We presume he is hibernating as usual only for a brief time and we shall again hear the slogan's resound thoughout the length and breath of Wright County and Conemaugh valley.

Station agent R. M. Glynn has been absent, attending a lawsuit.

Miss Anna M. Geary who has been sick for a long time is on the way to a speedy recovery.

The new village cooler is finished but so far has been without an occupant.

Rev. Father Savey who has been quite sick, has recovered sufficient to be around.

Our host, P. Leahy is tempting the finny tribe now-a-days.

O'Loughlin and Tuberty are doing a rushing machine trade.

Mr. Jewett has finished his new residence.

Maple Lake is determined not to be behind the times; has her spring poet and a philosopher.

The dance last Wednesday evening at J. D. Moore's hall was not so largely attended as was expected, owing to sickness

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our regular Correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 17, 1891.

Mr. Blaine has lost none of his old time cunning. He wishes to give the country the impression that he is running the Department of State entirely independent of Mr. Harrison, and to help that idea along he waited until after Mr. Harrison had gone on his grand vote hunting tour before he delivered a copy of the reply of this Government to the last dispatch of the Italian government to Marquis Imperiali, the charge d'affaires in this city, for transmission to Rome, although, I have it on excellent authority, that reply had been entirely written, and approved by Mr. Harrison and the cabinet as long ago as last Saturday.

This reply is one of the longest and most elaborate documents ever sent by this government to a foreign nation and it informs the Italians in unmistakable language that the United States does not propose to interfere with the regularly constituted State Courts under any circumstances, and that when it shall have been proven that any citizen or citizens of Italy were among the members of the "Mafia" lynched at New Orleans it is willing to take up the question of paying to his or their families a money indemnity. It is in short a thoroughly American letter. Mr. Blaine has many faults but lack of Americanism isn't one of them, thank heaven.

"Teddy" Roosevelt is the happiest man in Washington since he found out that his Civil Service commission was to have added to the number of people over whom it tyranizes about six hundred employes of the Indian service, mostly connected with the Indian schools. A non-partisan Indian service may be very desirable, but it will never be accomplished as long as the agents and their employes—not under "Teddy's" supervision—are republican strikers, as they are now.

Another bogus reform is the alleged attempt of Secretary Tracy to clear the navy yards of the country of partisan politics. He has issued an order declaring the positions vacant after June 1, at the New York yard and after July 1, at the Norfolk yard of all foremen and master mechanics, and ordering an examining board of Naval officers to convene at these yards respectively May 11 and June 3, for the purpose of examining applicants for the vacancies. "Why," said a Naval officer, "this thing is fraud on its face, and, in my opinion, is only gotten up to get rid of some men whose open discharge is not desirable. If there are incompetent foremen and master mechanics employed why not discharge them and, if it is the desire of the Secretary, have their places filled by competitive examinations, but what sense is there in requiring men who have proven by years of successful work their competence to take part in competitive examinations in order to demonstrate their fitness for doing the work upon which they have been engaged, in some cases, for half a life time."

The workingmen are after Secretary Tracy with stick, because of what they claim to be a violation of the contract labor law by Commodore Folger, of the Washington Navy Yard, in employing upon the recommendation of an English official, two foriegners as machinists, within a week after their arrival in this country. Secretary Foster will be asked to investigate the matter as soon as he comes back from New York, whither he has gone to brace up the Harrison forces.

The remains of the big hearted democratic veteran, Representative Spinola, who died here Tuesday morning, were taken to New York for interment Wednesday morning, accompanied by a Congressional committee and a delegation of New Yorkers. He will be missed in the House.

The true inwardness of the resignation of Senator Edmunds has leaked out. It is chagrin. There was a time when his word was law with his republican colleagues in the Senate, but at the last session his suggestions were not only ignored, but he was actually snubbed on several occasions by a majority of the republican Senators, and in such ways as to make it plain that his power over them was gone never to return. That was more than the old legislative tyrant could stand, so he resolved to go himself to escape further mortification.

The Hot Springs.

The great plunge bath building on the grounds of Hotel Broadwater, at Helena, Montana, is the finest specimen of Moorish architecture in America. The bath is 300x100 feet in size, and covered with 20,000 square feet of stained glass. The water supply exceeds a million gallons a day, and possesses wonderful curative properties. The water pours in over a cascade, at a temperature of 160 deg., but is tempered to human use. In a sun-lit valley, surrounded by the noble Rockies, it is the finest watering place and resort in the interior of the continent. Reached direct by the Great Northern Railway Line. The trip to Helena over this line will enable the health-seeker, home-seeker and tourist to see and enjoy with the greatest facility and comfort, the Park Region of Minnesota, with its thousand lakes: the illimitable grain ocean of the Red River Valley of Minnesota and North Dakota; Devils Lake, and Montana, with its cattle ranches: the Great Falls of the Missouri, and the wonderful scenery of Prickly Pear Canyon. Publications and information sent free by F. I. Whitney, G. P. & T. A., St. Paul, Minn., or of Agent Geo. W. Bolton this place.

A WRITER describes Kodiak island, Alaska, as larger than either of the New England states, with a genial climate capable of producing many varieties of fruit.

A BOSTON scientist declares that only the microscope can discover the difference between oleomargarine and butter. Few boarding houses can afford microscopes as side dishes.

THE dust collected by a small patch of snow between November 27 and December 27 last indicates that one thousand tons of soot settle monthly on the one hundred and ten square miles of London.

A SCHEME is proposed for building a railway to run over the tops of the houses in New York city. The principal material used in the manufacture of that road will be supplied by a powerful imagination.

ONE of the streets of Palermo is named after President Lincoln. This was done by order of the Marquis di Rudini, the new premier of Italy, who was mayor of Palermo at the time of Lincoln's assassination.

A DOCTOR in New York has discovered that carelessness in his practice is not excusable because he did not expect to get his pay. The court held him guilty of malpractice just the same for the pauper as for the millionaire patient.

A DOWNEY (Cal.) editor is in trouble from having published the following: "Miss Jones, who came here before the flood, is still the guest of her brother." He found it difficult to convince the lady that he meant no reference to her age.

WILLIAM M. ROBERTS, of Liberty, Mo., entertained an angel unawares last December, when Edward Williams stopped at his house, asked for shelter and was given a home. He died the other night without relatives, leaving Roberts a block of brick buildings in Kansas City, Mo., and a large bank deposit.

THE Pall Mall Gazette tells of a doctor on a man-of-war who had a very simple method of treatment. He would tie a piece of tape around the waist of the complaining mariner, and command him to state whether the pain existed above or below the tape. If above, an emetic, and if below, a dose of salts followed as a matter of course.

THE centennial celebration of the patent system in Washington recently was an event of great interest. Unfortunately many of the men, says the Inter Ocean, who devised the plans that brought millions to "the moneyed backer," have passed into obscurity, or death, or had too little money to attempt the luxury of being present. When the true history of patents is written some large names will appear small.

THE formation of the commonwealth of Australia is an event in the history of the world the significance of which is just being realized. There is no separation from England. The commonwealth will have a figure-head governor general, just as has Canada, but a new and great Anglo-Saxon nation has just been christened, a nation which among all those of the world will most resemble the United States. The question of absolute independence is, of course, only a matter of time, or rather of option.

THE bill providing municipal suffrage for women has again been beaten in the Massachusetts legislature. This is the twenty-fifth annual defeat which a female suffrage measure has encountered in that body; and as the adverse vote was quite as crushing as on any previous occasion, the reform seems as far off as ever. However, the Massachusetts reformers are patient and long suffering; and the measure will put in an appearance at Boston annually for many years to come, perhaps until it is adopted.

A NEW perfume delights the olfactories of the opulent. It owes its discovery and was brought to this country by Mrs. Stanley. It is called "Lily of the Nile," and is a distillation of the odors that linger along the great African river. Some enterprising dealer has discovered that its subtle aroma may be easily duplicated from the common lilies which growin marshes, and has put his idea into profitable practice by not only utilizing the scent but also the stalks of this plant, the latter being woven into "Stanley" mats.

HALF DIMES were first coined in October, 1792, and their production was continued at intervals until 1806, and then discontinued until 1828. The issue ceased entirely in 1873. The coining of the three-cent silver pieces, first issued in 1851, ceased in 1873. The five-cent nickel was authorized in 1866, and has been issued regularly to the present time. In 1856 nickel three-cent pieces and a small number of nickel cents were coined. The two-cent bronze pieces were issued in 1864, and discontinued in 1873. The bronze cents issued in 1864 have been coined annually ever since that date.

THE great, arid desert of Sahara has been tapped and found to be full of water. An enormous reservoir only one hundred and twenty feet below the surface has been discovered at El-Golea, a small caravan station in the middle of the desert. The importance of such a discovery can scarcely be appreciated by the people of this country. El-Golea is one of the stopping places in the Sahara desert of caravans which travel across that region, and this discovery is expected to develop greatly the caravan trade. The desert of Sahara may in time cease to be a synonym of all that is vast and desolate.

"JACK" ROBINSON, son of Circusman John Robinson, says that on one occasion his father, his brother Gilbert and himself paid a visit to Barnum at his home in Bridgeport. After some reminiscences Mr. Barnum asked them if they would take a drink with him. They assented, and as Mr. Barnum himself stepped to the sideboard to produce the tipple they expected something particularly fine. "Judge of our surprise," said Mr. Robinson, "when the old showman passed around the iced water." Mr. Barnum could not perhaps have done anything else that would have so impressed his visitors.

LATER.

The Strikers Fight.

UNIONTOWN, Pa., April 22.—Threats have been turned to violence, and violence has again caused death in the coke regions, with the result that Company C has been called to the scene of the tragedy, and all is in a ferment. The Fayette county officers went to Adelaide this morning, where they made two evictions after a great deal of trouble and opposition. They were then overpowered by the strikers and driven away. Reinforced by Sheriff McCormick and a large force, the deputies returned, when a pitched battle took place between the sheriff's posse and about 300 Hungarians, men and women, in which a Hnngarian girl was killed and others injured, among whom were several deputies. The battle occurred about 3 o'clock this afternoon, while the members of Company C were lunching down at the boiler house.

LEGISLATIVE NOTES.

The 27th Legislature of Minnesota Closes Its Session.

ST. PAUL, April 20.—The twenty-seventh legislature of Minnesota is a thing of the past. As one of the members remarked the record is made and by it the members must stand. Saturday the 18th was a day remarkable for the amount of work done and the length of the session. When the members came into the chamber it was noticeable that they had the night before carefully laid away the fighting clothes they had worn for forty-eight hours and appeared arrayed in suits of brotherly love and were strongly imbued with a determined sense to get right down to work by shutting off all verbiage and frown down frivolity.

The session began promptly at 9 a. m. and with the exception of two short recesses for dinner and supper, lasted until 6:15 a. m. on Sunday. The session had been open but an hour when the general appropriation bill as passed by the Senate was taken up and considered by sections. Everything went along all right until the clause appropriating $35,000 for the establishment of a beet sugar factory was reached, and then the Alliance members made a fight which resulted in expunging the paragraph.

The concluding section was reached about 5 p. m. All of the Senate amendments had been fought bitterly but with little avail. Speaker Champlin taking the floor called Mr. Stockwell to the chair, and pointed out that the difference between the original House appropriation bill and the bill returned from the Senate was $354,000. Of this amount $80,000 was additional to the Soldiers' Home, $35,000 for a new binding twine machine and $150,000 for a revolving fund, making a total of $65,000 against which appropriations the House had passed and no objection had been raised. Then the Rochester asylum appropriation had been increased $30,000, against which no objection could be raised nor had been, making $295,000 of the difference. The Senate bill had been amended by striking out the $35,000 appropriation for a beet sugar factory bounty, leaving the difference between the original House bill and the Senate bill only $24,000.

The following sums of money are appropriated out of any moneys in the state treasury not otherwise appropriated belonging to the general revenue fund, for the payment of certain general expenses of the state government, for the fiscal years ending July, 1892 and 1893:

H. F. 934, the bill providing for the levying of a state tax of 2.1 mills, which was amended in the senate to 2.2 mills, was returned from the senate for concurrence in the amendment. After the same old fight with the Democrats a motion to not concur was defeated by a vote of 48 yeas to 60 nays. A motion to concur was carried on a division, and the roll being called on the final passage of the bill it was finally passed by a vote of 64 yeas to 42 nays, after one of the most unruly half hours spent during the session.

The main changes made in the appropriation bill in the house were the striking out of the beet sugar appropriation and the addition of an appropriation to provide for the establishment of a school of mines at the state university. All other alterations were of a minor character. There was considerable discussion over the wolf bounty appropriation, but it was passed. The beet sugar appropriation was opposed mainly by the Alliance members.

The most important bill passed on the calendar was Senate File 76, Senator Hompe's bill providing for the erection of public grain houses and elevators on the right of way of railway corporations. Mr. Currier objected to the bill, alleging that it would, in case the next legislature struck out the proviso as he deemed was probable, place the control of all elevators into the hands of the wheat ring. Other Alliance members took a different view of the matter, and Mr. Currier, after first voting no, subsequently changed his vote to yea. The bill was passed by a vote at 58 to 30.

About seventy general laws were passed, and about 800 special laws will go on record. The famous fights have been on the usury bill, which is disposed of for two years: the Keyes Australian bill, which passed, requiring the voter to mark every name on the ticket, and the Currier and Hompe railroad bills, the former of which gave way to the latter. Radical changes have been made in the prison law, and the binding twine plant at the state prison has been provided for. The state has been reapportioned into congressional districts, and some changes have been made in the election law.

Two constitutional amendments at least will be submitted—one in regard to the taxation of telegraph and telephone lines and the other prohibiting special legislation. Several joint resolutions and memorials to congress have received executive approval, the jury system and the penal code have been amended, and several changes have been made touching the judiciary.

This morning the members nearly all appeared when the Speaker called the House to order looking none the worse for their Saturday's night. It was expected that no attempt would be made to do any work or undo any that had been done. When it came to the approval of the Journal, it was stated that a number of members were wrongfully reported and several changes were made which left the Hompe bill for location of elevators upon railway right-of-way without the constitutional majority. It is not known at this writing whether the bill is lost or not.

The state prison investigating committee made their report regarding recent abuse of prisoners at Stillwater. The report was a strong condemnation of the methods of punishment used. Last week men were hung up by the thumbs for nearly 14 hours without food, The report charged Deputy Warden Lemon with being inhuman and unfit to act in his official capacity.

A resolution was adopted by 112 yeas directing the Prison Board of managers to dismiss the said Lemon from his position. Another resolution was passed directing the board to employ new and milder means for punishment.

Just before adjournment, Mr. Tucker, of Cottonwood, the old man eloquent of the House in behalf of of the members presented Speaker Champlin with the photographs of the members of the Senate and House grouped into a handsome frame mounted on an easel.

At 1:45 by the watches of the members and 12 m. by the House clock, which had not been running for nearly two hours, the honorable Speaker in a few fitting words announced the 27th session of the Legislature adjourned sine die.

Fooled the Joker.

A Brooklyn artist recently got very much the best of a young friend, whose "funny" proclivities prompted him to order an expensive portrait of himself, and who, when the bill was presented, said laughingly: "Oh, my dear boy, I didn't intend that you should paint it for me, but for yourself." The artist appeared not the slightest annoyed, but merely said: "Oh, very well, I will place it in my window; it will attract attention, and later you may be more anxious to take it." That evening the practical joker was attracted by a crowd in front of his artist friend's showcase, and crossing over to ascertain the cause, found to his consternation and chagrin that his friend had added a large, symmetrical pair of donkey's ears to his head in the likeness displayed; he rushed into his friend's studio, and without a word wrote out a check for the amount in full, and the offending likeness was removed.—N. "German Syrup"

A Throat and Lung Specialty.

Those who have not used Boschee's German Syrup for some severe and chronic trouble of the Throat and Lungs can hardly appreciate what a truly wonderful medicine it is. The delicious sensations of healing, easing, clearing, strength-gathering and recovering are unknown joys. For German Syrup we do not ask easy cases. Sugar and water may smooth a throat or stop a tickling—for a while. This is as far as the ordinary cough medicine goes. Boschee's German Syrup is a discovery, a great Throat and Lung Specialty. Where for years there have been sensitiveness, pain, coughing, spitting, hemorrhage, voice failure, weakness, slipping down hill, where doctors and medicine and advice have been swallowed and followed to the gulf of despair, where there is the sickening conviction that all is over and the end is inevitable, there we place German Syrup. It cures. You are a live man yet if you take it. 39

A SPRING O-U-G-H-'D.

We're glad that old winter is through
And springtime has come to renough
Our youth. Mother earth,
Resounding with mearth,
Partakes of our happiness, tough.

Of snow we have all had enough;
We'll shovel no more of the stough,
For summer is nigh,
When, roasting, we'll ligh
Under trees, doing nothing but pough.

With colds we no longer will cough;
We'll leave our fur overcoats ough,
And put up the sleigh—
But not till it's Meigh
Will we our wool underclothes dough.

The horse enjoys pulling the plough,
And even the dignified cough
Doth kick up and laugh
Like its silly young caugh,
And pigs are in the clover just nough.

The wheat, to be made into dough,
Its green is beginning to shough,
And when it gets high,
We'll hide it in sligh—
When the farmer comes out we will gough.

The birds sitting up on a bough
Sing to us grand operas nough;
The hens, which are plagues,
Cackle loudly for eagues
They lay on the hay in the mough.

We'll sit on the banks of the lough,
And fish till our baskets we stough;
The big ones will weigh
Ten pounds, we will seigh,
Though lies of that size always shough.

O, yes! We're glad winter is through,
For flowers a-sparkle with dough
Are nicer than snow
To look at, althow
The pesky mosquitoes come, tough.

BRONCO BREAKING.

Tough Experiences in Taming a Wild New Mexican Horse.

The Savage Animal Kills Two Trainers, But Joe Starling, After a Severe Struggle, Proves to Be the Stronger Devil of the Two.

THERE are few subjects which an Englishman discusses with more vigor than the breaking in of horses, and, as a rule, there are none which he knows less about, says a writer in Macmillan's Magazine. If he have personal experience to add weight to his arguments, he is generally enamored of some theory which he would apply in every case, and is indignant when he hears that a horse has been trained to obedience in any other way. I wonder if any of these good people, who doubtless have substantial grounds for their several opinions, ever saw a bronco of the prairies when he was first brought into contact with a man. I would, therefore, ask all those who wish to understand the task a western breaker of horses sometimes has before him to accompany me upon a little journey of five thousand miles or so, to stand, as I stood some years ago, on the box of an old lumber wagon and peep into the corral of one Col. Jenson, a breeder of horses in New Mexico.

It was early in the afternoon of a warm day in August, but business was was to begin in a few minutes. Col. Jenson's foreman stood beside me in a wagon, and half a dozen cowboys were perched on the stable roof opposite. Below us was the corral, an inclosure about fifty yards square, and in the corral was the horse which was to receive its first lesson in obedience this day. He only stood fifteen hands high, and was lightly built—anything but a formidable beast to look at, the only distinctive points about him being a Roman nose and a restless eye.

I could not help remarking upon his mild appearance to Ezekiel Yates, the foreman. I had been told by Jenson that no better rough-rider lived than Ezekiel Yates. Finally he answered: "What do they teach folk where you come from? I'll try again. This bronco will be broke to-day or killed. Two boys have tried; one was laid out in ten minutes, with his chest like a apple pudding 'cos the pony danced on him. The other stuck to it longer, but was chucked at last and his skull flattened agin the paling there like a bit of soft lead. Now ye see the chances. It's a job for an old hand, and even a man who knows may be tripped by such a demon. So the boss sent for Joe Starling to make it sure, slapped down double stakes—fifty dollars—and there the matter lays." To set all doubt at rest a horseman whom I recognized as the person in question trotted in from the west and in a very short time appeared with Col. Jenson, stripped to shirt and trousers and ready for the fray.

I had heard of Joe Starling. He was one of the wildest characters in the settlement; a dare-devil, reckless customer, the hero and god of lawless men, and the dread — except when wanted—to all settlers fond of peace and property. We left our places and I was introduced to the famous Joe, whom I found to be a slender, long-limbed personage with sandy beard and keen eyes, a modest, unassuming manner and very sparing of speech. I noticed that Jenson, the burliest and most jovial of men, treated Joe with a deference which struck me as odd until I learned from actual observation what kind of business this man had agreed to undertake.

The bronco colt was interested by the proximity of a powerful roan mare held by Joe, and now came close up to the gate and sniffed at us. Joe observed the animal attentively.

"How many hev tried him, kunnel?"

"Two—smashed!"

"Likely. It is in his eye. Shall we make a start?"

He mounted his mare as he spoke and uncoiled a rawhide lariat. Then he looked critically round upon us all.

"I want three—Seth Sincup, Bill Corse and Ezekiel. Put 'em down, boys."

The bars of the corral gate were drawn back and Joe paced in. I had returned to the wagon by this time with Col. Jensen, and we had a capital view of the interior of the corral.

Joe held his lasso in both hands, his bridle hanging loosely on the mare's neck. She was perfectly trained and required neither guidance nor restraint. Slowly she approached the colt, he retreating to the furthest corner of the corral, showing that he well knew the significance of this thin, brown rope and what it could do. The mare drew nearer, step by step, and I fancied that I could see a mocking smile upon her face. Nearer and nearer, until with a snort and shake of the head the bronco sprang forward. Joe rose in his stirrups at the same moment and swept the noose once round his head. A quick turn of the mare, a cloud of dust and a heavy fall and then the colt was on the ground, half choked and helpless. Down went the bars again and the three chosen men rushed in. Two at once sat down in a firm and unconcerned manner upon the head of the fallen one, while Joe and Ezekiel Yates proceeded to strap upon his back a saddle and bridle brought in by the latter. This operation was a delicate one, for the prostrate colt struggled and lashed out desperately. But the men seemed utterly indifferent to the prospect of being kicked into eternity, and accomplished their work in a very few minutes. Joe tightened his belt.

"Git, boys."

Away they went scurrying across the corral and through the gate like rabbits in a hole, the mare having trotted off before this of her own accord.

I watched Joe breathlessly. The bronco, free now of lasso and men, lay still a moment, then raised his head and sneezed. Two seconds passed; he did not move, but sneezed again. Was he hurt? Not he. Now, with a sound like the screech of a maniac, he leaped to his feet in one bound, spun round open-mouthed to find the man and seize him in his teeth. But Joe was not to be caught, and when the dust raised by the colt's movement had subsided we saw him firmly planted in the saddle, as if he meant to stay.

Ezekiel rejoined me now, and laid a hand upon my shoulder.

"Yer have 'em before ye, lad. Two devils. Which is the stickiest? Ah, ah-h! bet on the man this time."

I cannot give a just idea in pen and ink of the excitement of the scene.

The little horse with a wild eye and a big head was a fiend incarnate. He was not trying to rid himself of his rider so much as to destroy him. His eyes glowed like live coals, and at intervals he repeated his shrill scream of rage—a challenge to the man. His first movement, when he felt the pressure of Joe's limbs, was to rear erect and attempt to throw himself backward. A blow between the ears with the butt end of a quirt (a Mexican riding whip) brought him quickly down again. Then he arched his back like an angry cat, gathered his feet under him and "let fly"—as I never saw a horse buck before or since. The strain upon the girths of the saddle was tremendous, but they were new and bore it well, while the rider, resting lightly in his stirrups, held his balance with beautiful skill and coolness, and throughout every twist, and turn, and jump of the bronco kept a firm grip upon the bridle, which he would round the horn of the saddle as sailors secure a rope to a belaying pin. The bucking continued without respite for several minutes, and ended by the horse rearing a second time, and in this instance overbalancing himself and falling heavily backward.

"Trick number one," muttered Ezekiel, in a grim whisper, while I shuddered and cried out, expecting to see Joe crushed by the fall. He had slipped aside in time, however, and was on his feet in a moment. The colt was unhurt also, and, rolling over the ground, set Joe dancing this way and that to escape his heels. Another moment passed and then the bronco was upon his feet again, and for the second time the man just saved his life by extreme agility. More kicking now ensued and clouds of dust rose up, which made it very difficult to see exactly what was happening. All at once I heard Ezekiel gave an exclamation and swear a deep and vigorous oath, and presently I saw that one of the girths, the thinner of the two, had split across. The dangling ends at the bronco's side seemed to infuriate him, and his leaps and kicks sensibly increased. Now came a sharp click on the other side of me, and Col. Jenson spoke.

"Draw, boys, and cover him. We must not lose another life. Fire when I give the word, every one."

There was a quick movement on the stable roof and ten revolvers flashed out of their sheaths and ten fingers were pressed on the triggers, waiting for the word.

It was a death struggle now. If there were a flaw in the remaining girth, if strap or buckle failed, the saddle would go and Joe be at the bronco's mercy, unless their pistols did their work in time. But the girth held gallantly, and at last the bronco began to tire and we began to breathe again. I could see Joe clearly now. The signs of battle had begun to appear. He was one mass of dirt from top to toe. His right arm had received a deep gash, either from the colt's teeth or heels, and was smeared with blood from elbow to wrist. His face was pale and worn, his head bent wearily, as if he were in pain; but his eyes were clear and vigilant, and he sat the enemy as firmly as ever. I began to hope that the worst part of the struggle was over, for Joe had gained a tighter hold upon the bridle and the bronco's head was well drawn in, as if he were yielding to control. He paced backward slowly until he touched one side of the corral, and there he stood a moment panting as if exhausted.

Now a new phase in the struggle began. All this time Joe had played a passive part, allowing the bronco to take him where he would and how he would, feeling at the bridle now and then without making any determined attempt to check his mad frolics. At this point, however, he suddenly seemed to wake into life and action. He drew in the bridle with a powerful wrench, twisted the bronco's head from the wall of the corral, and then for the first time drove in his spurs well. The answer was a violent fit of bucking, and I expected every moment to see the second girth split. It held, however, and the bucking presently subsided. But there was to be no rest now. In went the spurs again, and away went bronco, capering, twisting, spinning round this way and that, leaping, kicking, rearing, as actively as ever. The same process was repeated several times, and after each bout Joe's head bent lower over his saddle-bow, and a look of weariness and pallor crept into his face very painful to see. But he never faltered, and at length the time came when the touch of the spur drove the colt round the corral instead of into the air, and we began to feel that an end would come some time. Once Joe even stooped to stroke the foam-flecked neck of the pony caressingly; and as he did so the animal stood still, his ears pricked forward, his eyes free from vicious devilment. Soon after this, when the colt had been guided right round the corral without bucking once, Joe turned to look at us and spoke for the first time. His voice was so weak and faint that it made me start.

"He'll do. Drop the bars."

There was a rush and a scramble of cowboys to the gate, and a clear way was made. The last critical moment was now at hand. Joe guided the bronco gently toward the gate. At first the animal swerved from it perversely, but once through a new life seemed to rush into his limbs and he began to prance and chafe at the bit. Once again Joe drew himself together, a spasm of pain passed over his face as he straightened his back; then he loosed the bridle, and lightly flicked the bronco on the flank. The pony shook himself and bounded forward; he did not try to lower his head and buck. Another touch of the quirt and a word of encouragement. He reared, gave one last caper and then swept into a long stretching gallop. The cowboys gave a loud cheer; Joe waved his hand as he sped away, and in a few minutes horse and rider had disappeared behind a roll of prairie.

Col. Jenson heaved a huge sigh of relief.

"Off now for twenty miles, and the job well done. By thunder, that cuss is sandy to the backbone. What say to it, friend?"

We spent a merry time for a couple of hours and then sallied out in a body to meet the hero on his return. We had not to go far. Joe had run the bronco until his pace was spent and was now retracing his steps at a walk. He said he was not hurt, but when questioned owned that every joint and muscle of his back and limbs seemed to have been twisted out of shape.

As for the bronco, when Joe had ridden to the ranch, and had been lifted off and carried into bed, for he could not walk, I was ordered to mount—being the worst horseman present—and ride to the stable. This I did with fearful inward qualms, and no London cab horse could have been quieter than our demon of the afternoon.

It must not be supposed, however, that with this the breaking was completed. The bronco was ridden daily for weeks by an experienced rough rider, and more than once the old spirit of devilment flashed out and endangered his rider's life. But Joe Starling earned his fifty dollars well. Before six months that bronco was the best saddle pony in Jack Jenson's stable.

TOMBSTONES OF PRIDE.

Monuments Erected to Convey an Idea of the Wealth of the Relatives.

On a recent visit to one of the great cemeteries near by this city I had as a companion an old, gray-haired dealer in tombstones. In what might be termed the fashionable portion of the cemetery I called attention to the impressive character of the massive monuments of granite, with their brightly polished sides, on which were inscribed the names and ages of those who lay beneath.

"That's right," said the old man, "the effect upon you is just what was intended by those who paid for the big pieces of granite. They were meant to be impressive; that is, to impress outsiders with an idea of the wealth and social standing of those by whom they were erected. Greatness of their grief, did you say? Well, I guess not. You see, I am in the business and can see further into a tombstone than most people. I have to sell those towering obelisks of dull, gray stone, but I don't believe in them. It is merely another phase of human pride. That these tall monuments are not erected through regard for departed dear ones is evident from the fact that not one tender thought or word of loving remembrance is carved on the broad surface of these great masses of stone.

"For my part," said the veteran, "I prefer the old style of tombstone of forty or fifty years ago. A slab of marble upright at the head of the grave, on which, besides the name and age of the dead one, is carved a short summary of his other good qualities while in life, with a line or two of affectionate remembrance from those by whom the stone has been erected. It is fashionable nowadays to make fun of the quaint verses found upon the old tombstones, but to my mind the love which prompted these queerly constructed but expressive lines should shield them from ridicule."—N. Y. Telegram.

Poor Attendance.

Grieveley—Are you the proprietor of this restaurant?

Proprietor—Yes, sir. What can I do for you?

Grieveley (who has been waiting half an hour to give his order)—Not much. I only wanted to know if there was any other waiter at this table exceuting myself.—Judge.

DOMESTIC CONCERNS.

—Pickles of some kind should accompany fish, because of its alkaline nature.

—When suffering from overstrained and tired eyes bathe them in hot water several times a day.

—Halibut is nice for broiling; the steaks should be an inch thick. Cut in small pieces and dipped in eggs and crumbs, it can be fried in boiling fat.

—When making white cakes use one-half teaspoonful more of cream of tartar than soda, as this extra quantity of cream of tartar makes the egg whites stiffer.

—To keep the bread jar and cake box sweet, rinse after washing with boiling water in which a little common soda has been dissolved; then set out of doors in the sun for a few hours.

—Buckwheat Muffins: To two teacupfuls buttermilk take one teaspoonful soda, one teacupful flour, one and a half teacupfuls buckwheat, one tablespoonful molasses and a teaspoonful salt. Mix well together and bake in greased muffin rings or pans.—Orange Judd Farmer.

—Cheese: Cheese that has been cut in suitable pieces for the table and left some time becomes hard and dry. My way of disposing of it in such a case is to grate it and put it in a wide-mouthed bottle that can be corked. It is then ready for use in making patties, omelettes and other dishes.—Prairie Farmer.

—Apple Fritters: Make a batter not very stiff with three eggs, one quart of milk, and flour. Pare and core about a dozen apples, and chop them pretty fine, then mix with the batter. Fry in hot lard as you would doughnuts, and while they are warm sprinkle powdered sugar over them. These are nice served with sauce or sirup.—Prairie Farmer.

—For salmon croquettes use two cupfuls of salmon, well picked with a fork, one cupful fine cracker crumbs and one cupful of cream; mix well and season with pepper, salt and a little grated nutmeg. Form in shapes and roll thin in cracker crumbs, then in beaten egg, and again in cracker crumbs. Let them stand an hour or two, then fry.—N. Y. World.

—An Ornamental Twine Bag: Two shades of any pretty ribbon, one and a half inches wide. It requires three-fourths of a yard of each shade. Then cut into nine-inch lengths, and fringe deeply one end; then sew the ribbon together, lengthwise, all but two inches of the end. Gather the ribbon at the top below the fringe and again at the bottom, leaving the two inches free. Leave a small opening at the bottom, to let the twine through. Open the ball of twine from the center; hang up by baby ribbon same shade as one of the colors used. The bottom may now be finished with fringe also, or turned up at ends to form points, and bangles fastened to the point.—Boston Budget.

TO KEEP THE FEET WARM.

From a Lecture by Dr. J. H. Kellogg, of the Battle Creek Sanitarium.

It is important to health that the feet should be kept warm, but instead of seeking any artifical aid, like taking a soap-stone to bed, it is much better that the feet should be educated to take care of themselves. They should be kept warm in some natural way. People who begin to toast their feet at the fire and shiver closely over it at the beginning of winter grow worse and worse as the season advance, and in thus coddling themselves, the cold weather has a debilitating effect instead of a tonic influence as nature intends. I have noticed elderly people in particular who get closer and closer into the chimney corner day by day, often keeping their rooms at a temperature of 85° or 90°, and still they complain of the cold. In the summer they would consider such a temperature excessively hot. No part of the body will take the trouble to keep itself warm when the work is being done for it. If nature sees that artificial heat is continually applied to the feet, she will cease to make a proper effort herself. Why is it that the face is able to protect itself against exposure? It is because the skin is educated to keep itself warm. The Indian on the plains in his scanty clothing is "all face."

There are some exceptions, as in the case of nervous dyspeptics, whose extremities can not be educated into warmth. Owing to reflex action from the lumbar ganglia upon the vaso-motor centers, the inhibitory nerves contract so vigorously that the blood is shut off from free circulation, and the limbs become like ivory. Such a patient will declare that his circulation is poor, when in reality it is too rapid. If the circulation of the blood were really sluggish, there would be a swollen, dropsical condition of the extremities, and on being indented by pressure they would not readily return to normal shape. The best way to warm the feet is by a little vaso-motor gymnastics. Take two shallow pans, and have one filled with very hot water and the other only a quarter of an inch deep with ice water. Put the feet in the cold water for about ten seconds, and in the hot water for twenty seconds. Change thus from cold to hot and from hot to cold twenty or thirty times, taking the feet last from the cold water and giving them a good, vigorous rubbing. They will then be found warm and in condition to stay warm. It is on this principle that the lumberman pulls off his boots and rubs his feet in the snow when they become cold, thus getting up a strong reflex action. Instead of taking a soap-stone to bed when one is seriously troubled with cold feet, it is better to draw on a pair of good warm bed socks. Feeble people need to dress just as warm during the night as during the day. All clothing worn during the day should be removed and warm, comfortable night-clothing substituted.—Reported by Helen L. Manning.

Employment for Invalids.

One who has had much experience in caring for invalids suggests simple surprises as a successful method of bringing pleasure. A dainty dish of appetizing food is a circumstance of importance in the sick room. When flowers are sent it is a good plan to permit the patient to arrange them slowly in an artistic dish, having made sure that the stems are not damp or cold. The rapid production of new games is a boon to convalescents, who practice all the novelties with an interest quite impossible to those in health, well provided with active amusements. Collections of photographs are welcomed in the sick chamber. Ripping is an excellent employment for invalids, while crocheting and knitting are valuable resources for the occupation of the convalescent's mind.—Boston Journal.

HOW THE WOLF WAS MADE.

An Esthonian Legend Shows What Was the Purpose of Its Creator.

When Allfather had created the world and all the beasts He asked the devil: "Don't you admire my work? Or do you thing there is any important plant, or any useful animal wanting? or the hills are not high enough, or the seas not deep enough?"

This gracious question pleased the devil very much. He took heart and answered: "There is no fault to be found with your work, but still I can't help thinking there is one beast too few."

"What beast?" asked the Creator in surprise.

"Well" said the devil, "a beast to watch and guard the woods, that the shepherd boys may not break the branches of the trees, nor hares and goats nibble the young shoots."

"Have I not put bears and snakes in the wood?" said the Creator.

"No doubt you have," said the evil one, "but these guardians go to sleep when winter comes, and then it grieves me to see the wood without a protector, like an orphan."

Now, what the devil wanted was to make for himself a savage beast to worry God's harmless creatures and do all sorts of mischief.

"What kind of beast do you think is still wanting?" asked the Creator.

"One that I could make myself if you would let me," said the devil, entreatingly.

"So be it," said the Creator. "I won't hinder you."

"But I ask more than that," the devil continued. "I have not the power to give my creature life. If you would tell me how to do that, you would soon see that my beast was as good as any of yours."

"I will grant you that also. When your beast is quite finished, with his eyes and nose in their right places, then say to him: 'Arise and hunt the devil!'"

"We'll see about that," muttered the devil to himself, and went away to a thick forest. Here he gathered together stones and old leather, twigs and moss, and then brought from the village smithy two glowing sparks and a lot of iron nails.

Then he began his work. He made the beast's back of a strong hedge stake, and its head of a tree stump, its breast of twigs and shoe leather woven together, and its loins of bricks. He made its paws of elderwood, and its tail of a bunch of ferns, and in its breast he put a stone for a heart. Then he covered the body with moss, and set the two glowing sparks in its eye-sockets, and with the nails he made claws and teeth for it.

When the devil had made this beast he was highly delighted with it, and called it wolf.

But the wolf had no life.

Then the artist remembered the charm and cried: "Wolf, arise and hunt—!"

At this the wolf raised its head and licked its lips.

This gave the devil such a fright that he could not say another word. But he soon recovered himself and cried: "Wolf, arise and hunt Allfather!"

But the wolf lay still, without so much as a wag of its tail. The devil repeated his charm ten times over, but the wolf paid not the slightest heed.

Then the devil went back to Allfather and said: "You have not given me the right charm, for the wolf will not stir."

"What?" said the Creator; "did you say, 'Rise, and hunt the devil?'"

The evil one had not expected this; he had nothing to say for himself, but was forced to go away crestfallen.

He tried again. Again he said: "Wolf, arise and hunt Allfather!" All in vain.

At last he went a long distance away from the wolf, and shouted: "Wolf, arise!" Then he added in a whisper, "and hunt the devil."

Good heavens, how the wolf sprung up! He was after the devil like the wind, and would certainly have worried him if he had not crept under a big stone.

Ever since the wolf has been the devil's bitterest foe, always looking out for a chance to annoy and hurt him. His backbone is as strong as a hedge stake, his teeth and claws are as sharp as nails, and his hide is covered with thick hair. His eyes shine like coals of fire. His heart is as hard as a stone, for he carries off and kills the harmless lambs. If you throw a stone at him it drives him mad with rage, but if a herd boy manages to strike him with a stick he is so much ashamed that he will not come near that flock again for three whole years. But if ever you see him, in harvest time, sitting in a clearing of the wood with his fiery eyes shining, then you may know that he is lying in wait for the evil one.

What is lacking is truth and confidence.

If there were absolute truth on the one hand and absolute confidence on the other, it wouldn't be necessary for the makers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy to back up a plain statement of fact by a $500 guarantee.

They say—"If we can't cure you (make it personal, please,) of catarrh in the head, in any form or stage, we'll pay you $500 for your trouble in making the trial."

GEO. W. BOLTON, Local Agent.

DELANO DIARY.

—Our base ballists enjoyed a social game on the diamond on the west side, on Sunday last.

--Call on George W. Bolton at the depot and get the Poultry number Great northern Bulletin.

--Delano's council are engaged in the study of Parliamentary rules since Monday evening's dead lock on Street Commissioner.

--Mrs. Stanley has so far recovered from the operation recently had as to be able to come down stairs, on Monday and Tuesday, last.

—The approaches to the road at the ford at the Lyle crossing are in poor condition for teams crossing. You are apt to stick in the mud if you try it.

—Maple syrup is being marketed quite freely this week, and an uncommonly fine article. F. F. Chancellor says he has made forty gallons. The McKinley bill don't seem to have reached the price of this home product which is as usual $1.00 per gallon.

--On Monday, May 4th, at 10 A. M. the Wright county Medical Society hold their regular meeting in the council room at the city hall. An interesting programme has been announced. All regular practitioners are invited to be present, take part in the exercises and become members.

—Warren Merriman who has been confined by sickness to the house for a couple of weeks was visited during the week past by his brother Sam of Minnetrista, and his brothers Horace and Austin and sister and brother-in-law A. W. Clark and wife of Howard Lake.

—Philip Martin is building an addition to his house, on South Third street. Mrs. Lucas has her addition done. Theodore Weisner, on North Third Street is also finishing up his addition. S. S. Ball and W. M. Mowatt are painting. Post master Vorse's residence is being painted and things are being shined up generally.

—The Druidical Lodge elected the officers for the ensuing year, on Thursday, April 16th. For Noble Arch., Martin Nelson; For vice Arch., A. Anderson; For secretary, H. Parslow; For treasurer, O. Erwig.

The retiring officers were: R. M. Bohn, Noble Arch.; Martin Nelson, vice Arch.; Parslow and Erwig, sec'y. and treas. Installation on the first Thursday of May.

—The notice of, "Found" in last week's GAZETTE did the business and the same evening the GAZETTE came out enquiry was made by Mrs Haumonts whose little son "Dutchey" had lost his watch, several days ago. And after one weeks search among the school children and others no trace could be obtained until the GAZETTE informed her that John Schaust who lives in the country and who was at one time a pupil in her school had found a time keeper in front of the Post Office. It did not prove to be Dutchie's, however.

--All are agreed that the street commissioner should be a man that knows how and that will attend to the duties of the office in an efficient and workmanlike manner. Such men are to be found, and it is hoped that the council will procure one for the position. Of course if there is no grade to follow, any one can plow up the streets, and raise a dust, and make matters worse than they are. A grade should be established and worked up to, so that when people wish to build they may do so as it should be, and when a street is once fitted up to grade it will not be necessary to plow it up every year.

—An occasion presented itself on Saturday afternoon, for the interference of the prevention of cruelty to animals society, had there been any of the followers of Henry Berg, in our place. A tank filled with water was to be drawn out of the river. A heavy haul, and one that several teams have previously failed to make, and because it did not come one man lost his temper and being jeered by the crowd on the bridge fell to venting his spleen on the poor dumb brute. Afterwards the plug was drawn, the water let out, and the team went out all right, when a place where firmer footing was had, was sought and the tank refilled.

—William Cooper is the owner of a rooster that takes the cake as a fighter. On visiting that end of town recently we were informed that Mrs. Cooper had had a severe fight with a new rooster, later we heard that Mr. Cooper had also encountered the would-be-cock-of-the walk, and learned that Mr. Cooper had bought him of Mayor Schaffer, a few days ago. On the way home we called on his Honor the Mayor, and learned that he had purchased the chanticleer of a Polander from the country, and that when he went to feed him he showed fight. When he went to sell him he sent August Sieloff out to bring him in for Mr. Cooper, August returned without the rooster and said he could not bring him. Mayor Schaffer then went himself and had a tussel in which he received wounds on the back of his hand the scars of which are quite visible to this day. Mr. Cooper has two fingers quite badly lacerated but Mrs. Cooper exhibits no scars and claims that the rooster is afraid of her ever since she pounded him good with a club. His fighting record is good even if he did get licked once.

--J. D. Young and assistant started out seeding, this morning.

--S. S. Breed is in town to-day, attending the sale of village lots.

—Fred Lindsley with his broncho now. It goes easier than the bicycle, and is not much more apt to cause a "header."

—The most fashionable occupation of the women and children this week seems to be gathering dandelions for greens.

—George Bolton has gone into the building business and is having another room added to his residence, on Second street.

--Mrs. Kaspohl is having a fine new residence built on her farm near the German M E Church on the Montrose road.

--A. F. Morcok got through seeding before the rains, and has been hauling his surplus wheat to town this week. $1.03 was his price.

—Rev. Charles Thayer, formerly pastor of the Presbyterian church here, is to preach on Sunday, at 10:30 A. M. His old friends will be pleased to hear him.

—Frank Brasie came up from Twincite, on Saturday evening and next morning, appeared on the streets aboard a span new $135. bicycle of the Columbia light roadster safety variety.

—Butcher Cramer has as neat a butcher shop as you find anywhere now. Nice new marbletop counter scales, etc, etc. He also has a new horse and buggy. A wife will probaly be next.

—Albert Rewoldt has completed the foundation for the house on River street being built by John Coolen and to be occupied by Mr. Weldelee, father-in-law of John. Building has commenced in earnest in Delano.

—Wheat is coming in now-a-days quite lively. The reported short crop in foreign lands tends to raise prices, over a dollar has been paid this week. A dollar a bushel has been the cry. Now we have it. Times must be good —Mrs. J. D. Young visited her brother Melville and family on the first day of the week, returning home in the afternoon with her father and mother Mr. and Mrs. J. Fletcher Powers, who are receiving the hospitalities of Young's Hotel this week.

—One of the finest farms on the Montrose road is that of J. B. Quinn, Sr, and as the old gentleman, with his silver locks, sallies forth at even time, to gather in his lowing herds and bleating flocks, wends his weary steps homeward amid the gambols of the frisky lambs, one is reminded of the stories of Pastoral days, and the Patriarchs of old.

—The council, on Monday night voted to make a dumping ground of the low place, on Elm street, near J. F. Power's residence. This is from a hygienic point of view, the wrong place. The health officer was present at the meeting and advised against it. Being in a central locality it will, if all refuse is thrown there, prove a source of annoyance unless kept covered with abundance of dirt.

—On Monday morning, at about six o'clock, rain began to fall, lightly at first but during the forenoon, in showers; the afternoon was almost one continuous rain. Farmers who were rigged for putting in their crop this week and prepared to get an early start on Monday morning were disappointed and compelled to delay that important matter.

—Rev. Blackhurst gave one of his best sermons, at the M. E. Church on Sunday evening to a fair sized audience. Subject missions. Many a city audience would be proud to have Mr. B's equal to expound Gospel truths to them. He holds the attention of his audience, not only for a part of his sermon but from first to last, not only occasionally but every Sunday evening. Delano may well be proud of her Methodist sermons while he lives here.

—On Wednesday evening one of our city officers was so unfortunate, so the story goes, as to encounter a couple of female street venders of souvenirs, at the back door of one of the places were the "wine that man loveth" can be had. For some cause the peddlers became offended at the official and pounced on to him and, notwithstanding his portly form, prostrated him to mother earth, and he, not being sure whether he was to be scalped or feel the keen edge of the stiletto of the Mafia cried lustily, for help, which soon arrived and ended the melee. The women although prepared to remain in town over night took the tram west which came along soon after the fracas,

PERSONALS.

Len. Dedrick took a trip to Twincite, on Thursday evening.

Tom Shaw is figuring on going to Morris, on Saturday or Sunday.

Dr. Woodard of Howard Lake visited Mrs. Smith, of Delano, on Saturday.

W. E. Culkin, of Buffalo, came in on the early train, Tuesday morning.

Mr. Jennings of Watertown says there is some mud between there and Delano.

Mr. Bartlett, of Minneapolis, was looking our village over one day this week

George Cunningham of Watertown passed through town on his way home on Tuesday.

Harry Marshall, of Fountain Lake, made a business trip to Delano, on Thursday.

W. M. Young, the popular landlord of Montrose visited Delano for a few minutes to-day.

Mrs. John Jacobs and daughter, of Greenwood were among those doing shopping in Delano.

John Whittaker, of the Cokato Observer, was among those taking observerations in Delano on Saturday, last.

H. Galley got down town, on Thursday. He is getting around again after quite a siege. He is bound to spring out well.

Mrs. Jos Craig and family returned, on Monday morning, from Maple Plain. Her aunt, Mrs. Smith came with her for a visit.

Mrs. Fannie Rice and her mother in-law were guests of Wm Lewis on monday night. They returned to their home, Wisconsin on Tuesday.

I noticed the "Street Rights" in the GAZETTE. Mr. Conzet says one of the base ballists just come to life, last week, with the rest of the frogs. Is he one of the rest? And was he showing life by racing? We saw Mr. Conzet racing his horse every evening last summer. He complained of ball playing because he wanted the people to pay their attention to his racing instead of ball playing. He claims that his horse was frightend by the base ball on April 5. It is not true as I know. I batted the ball for the boys while Mr. Conzet was driving on Street, his horse was NOT FRIGHTENED. He says "I am a lover of ball playing and am one of the first ones to assist in a game," he is NOT but wants to show off. Yours truly,

ONE OF THE BASE BALLIST.

Village Council Meeting.

The village council held a regular meeting in their room at the City Hall, on Monday evening. Present Schaffer, Wittman, Eppel, Brandon and Hitz. After allowing several bills they heard reports of standing committees; one that the bridge had been tightened up; one that sidewalks had not yet been built but should be, on Bridge street. Commitee on streets was instructed to order side walk on Bridge street from Third to Fourth, and from River street to Second. It was voted to instruct street commissioner to give five days notice to parties to repair sidewalk; in case of failure to do so, to have it done. It was moved that the committee on lamps look into the necessity of having more street lamps. Voted that the Recorder purchase a new docket for village Justice Billings. Voted that a light be kept burning in the fire engine room at night. Voted to repair the doors and front of engine room. Moved that the chief of the Fire Department be ordered to parade the Fire Company and try the hose. On motion a standing committee of two was appointed, on Public Buildings. Wittman and Hitz were appointed. Moved that the committee on buildings be authorized to repair the roof of the City Hall.

Moved committee on Public Ground be instructed to fence the park on R. R. Ave., and seed it down and replace dead trees. Moved that if $100. will buy land on east side of River between the wagon bridge and Anderson's shoe shop, Secretary buy it. The low place on Elm Street, near Mr. J. F. Power's residence was, on vote, made the dumping ground of the village.

For Street Commissioner the names of William Eppel, John Steffes, J. W. Ball and J. D. Brandon, were presented and on balloting several times no election was had, and as a dead lock was imminent after three ballots had been taken a motion to adjourn was made and carried. So Con O'Leary is still street commissioner by holding over.

DIED.

HAYNES.—On Wednesday, April 15th, at Genoa, Wis. Mrs. Elizabeth Haynes, aged 60 years, at the home of her sister, in Wisconsin. Deceased was mother of William Haynes, of Rockford, and of Mrs. Fannie Rice, whose home is in Wisconsin. Mrs. Haynes was one of the early settlers; her remains were buried, on Sunday, at Rockford.

County and Legislative.

His Excellency, Governor Merriam has affixed his signature to the bill providing for a re-apportionment of the state into Congressional Districts making seven districts. Wright is in the sixth. This will give the State nine Pesidential Electors, in 1892.

Our Republican friends have been re-arranging their forces in this county and are preparing for a hot campaign. Chairman J. N. Stacy, of the county committee elected last fall by a few votes over O. L. Billings, has been deposed and his place taken by W. E. Culken, ex-County Attorney. This, of course, is supposed to be in the interests of peace and harmony, but whether it will have the desired effect, that of a soothing balm to the wounded feelings of many of the once G. O. P. remains to be seen. In the meantime it stands democracy of Wright in hand to be on their guard, and look well to their principles.

PLEASANTRIES.

"COMPANY IS COMING."

Bend your knee at worry's shrine
In intense devotion;
Set the house, from cellar to
Attic in commotion.

Start the engine, get up steam,
Set the wheels a-humming,
Make them whirl and whir and whiz,
"Company is coming!"

Raise a dust in every room,
See the atoms flying;
Scold the children, rout the cat
In the corner lying

Rap those restless baby hands
On the windows drumming;
Every window must be clean;
"Company is coming!"

Leave no object in the house
In condition normal,
Make the very cradle look
Prim and stiff and formal.

At the oven sorch your face,
Have the stove just "booming"
"Fix up" something "good to eat;"
"Company is coming."

Fire the boiler, keep up steam,
Keep the wheels a-humming;
Scrub and scour and bake and stew;
"Company is coming!"

Labor till a "nervous" pulse
In your head is drumming,
Till you ache from head to foot;
"Company is coming!"

When your guests arrive it will Make their pleasure double
To perceive you've put yourself
To a world of trouble.

Then, although you feel you've done
More than you were able,
Fail not to apologize
For your house and table.

This is hospitality—
That the wheels be humming,
Rest and comfort banish, when
"Company is coming!"

—The Methodist Herald.

GEN. HORATIO P. VAN CLEVE, of Minneapolis, died, April 24, aged nearly 90 years. He was the first colonel of the 2nd Reg. Minn. Vol.

GEN. VON MOLTKA, Germany's great general, died, at Berlin, April 11. He was considered one of the greatest warriors of his day.

DISPATCHES from Chicago April 30. say Ex-Senator Blair in obedience to a dispatch from Secretary of State Blaine, returned to Washington, saying that his diplomatic future was somewhat problematical, now and that had he not received orders from Blaine he would have proceeded to China Emperor or no Emperor. He seems quite sandy, but Blaine probaly considers disrection the better part of valor.

SOLDIERS lynched a civilian at Walla Walla, Wash., April 24th, for killing a comrade of theirs. The murderer was a gambler it is claimed. Lynch law should stop. It is bad enough for the rabble to indulge in such lawlessness, but it does seem as if well disciplined soldiers could be restrained from enforcing law in so summary a manner. Our laws might be enforced a little more to the letter perhaps and obviate the necessity of turning loose murderers or indulging in lynch law. Let Lynch law stop.

Tariff Pictures.

Well, an increase of 84 per cent. in the price of oats is not bad.

Oats per bushel in 1889, 23.0c.
Oats per bushel in 1890, 42.4c.

How the free traders would howl if any manufactured goods had advanced at this rate. And yet it is better for the country that the farmer should receive a fair price for his products.—N. Y. Press.

Large quantities of oats are now used in this country for human food. Rolled oats and ground, or cracked oats form no small parts of many meals. Unless the McKinley bill has from prohibiting by its high tariff rates many articles of food from use in this country compelled people to live on oats, thereby creating a demand and raising the price of horse feed we do not see how they can accuse Mr. McKinley with having raised the price.

Nail This on the Door.

In 1875 we began to manufacture wire nails. At the time they cost ten cents a pound, and the duty was one cent a pound. The duty was insufficient. In 1883 the wicked Tariff Commission put it up to four cents per pound. From that day we began to make wire nails in dead earnest. The price stiffened a little, but soon dropped to a lower rate than they had ever been sold for before. From 50,000 kegs of 100 pounds in 1882 the output went up to 3,500,000 in 1890. And as the product increased the price decreased from 8.32 cents in 1882 to 2.10 cents per pound at the present time. The duty has been reduced to two cents per pound. If the Bowery parrot's theory of "the tariff is a tax" be true the present duty if removed would leave the price of wire nails at exactly ten cents per keg of 100 pounds. Organs of free trade, how do you like this nail story?—N. Y. Press.

We dont like the tariff part of it. The increase of production making the price less is all right. But when you say that if the tariff was deducted according to free traders, nails would be ten cents per keg it is not much harder to believe than that the 4 cents a pound tariff brought down the price to $2.00 per keg. If it did bring down the price why did you take off the tariff? Are nails like the coats President Harrison speaks of, "too cheap."

AN IRONCLAD BLOWN UP.

BUENOS AYRES, April 25.—Advices from Valparaiso, Chili, say that the ironclad, Blanco Encalada, the flagship of the insurgent fleet, has been blown up and many lives lost.

The work was accomplished by the officers and men of the government ironclad Almirante Lynch, which attacked the Blanco Encalada in the port of Caldero with torpedoes.

The Doctor Who Succeeds.

A physician who understands human nature, who plays with the baby, makes friends with the children, and listens to the woes of the good wife and mother, says a medical journal, is the fellow to whom the master of the house most cheerfully pays the largest bills. It isn't the medicine that's bottled up, but it's the comfort and consolation that are unbottled that mark the broad line between an unsuccessful and a popular physician.—Scientific American.

Hindrances to Inventive Progress

From the last number of the SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN we clip the following article concerning patents, which may be of interest to many of our readers:

What are the chief discouragements to inventive progress? One of these is the hindrance imposed by the existence of inferior methods for accomplishing works of the same class to which improved means would apply. To this is allied the suppression of valuable patented devices in the interest of labor, and the competition among inventions themselves. Great as the influence of the patent system has been and is, in the encouragement of invention, it has nevertheless been very considerably abused in enabling the purchase and suppression of valuable inventions by parties interested in maintaining methods that the new means would otherwise supplant. Persons controlling corporations, or exerting, either directly or through connections, a powerful influence therein, are often enabled to secure a preference for one device over something that may be far superior. Great corporations enjoying monopolies of their business are likely to be indifferent to the improvement of their service in the interest of their patrons and the employment of better means for the convenience of the latter, unless they have been thoroughly taught that it is for their interest to do so. The telegraph and telephone monopolies in this country are instances of this; the former resting upon the assimilating capacity of a large accumulation of capital in one enterprise, and the latter upon the proprietorship of a basic invention. The practical adoption of any improvement in the telegraph or telephone would not at present be possible without the consent of these companies. The supplanting of one form of machinery by an improved form, and the injury or destruction of enterprises with their capital invested in the old, is one of the greatest elements of cost or waste in modern production, and manufacturers are obliged often to figure very closely to see whether it would profit them to adopt some improved method.

It frequently happens that no sooner has a new way of doing something been perfected and set in operation than some one else comes forward with still another means of reaching the same result, and either by his competition prevents the other from reaping fully the anticipated harvest of his skill, or supersedes the former method entirely and ruins the enterprise. The opposition of labor to the introduction of new inventions is very old. From the early days of the power loom and the railway down to the present time the story has been the same—on the part of the workers the most strenuous opposition to the employment of labor-saving devices, for fear of being thrown out of work. Experience has shown us that, on the whole, there has been no loss of occupation for the working classes from this cause, since the increased production attendant upon the use of labor-saying machinery and the creation of new industries causes a demand for labor under the new conditions at least equal to that existing before. Yet nearly every mechanical device that does the work formerly performed by several persons can hardly fail to effect great injury to many individuals, and even to large classes of workingmen, by reducing them from the ranks of skilled to unskilled laborers, and disturbing the equilibrium of industry.

The progress of invention would be, doubtless, very much more rapid were it not for this opposition on the part of labor, and production would be correspondingly cheapened. Organized labor has of late years exerted a powerful influence against the substitution of mechanical processes for the more slow and costly hand work. That strong organization in the boot and shoe industry, for instance, the laster's union, forbids the employment of machinery to do any part of the work within its province, and, in consequence, some very costly devices in shoe shops have been compelled to stand idle. Owing to the objection of the Knights of Labor, the use of power presses in the engraving department of the National Bureau of Engraving and Printing at Washington is not allowed, although the cost of production is enormously increased to the government by the employment of hand presses. Labor cannot be blamed for this opposition in its own behalf, any more than capital can be blamed for combating any measures that tend to limit its liberty of action.—Sylvester Baxter, in the Cosmopolitan for April.

CORRESPONDENCE

ANNANDALE ANNALS.

The flour mill of the Messrs Klatts is now completed for flouring; the mills and machinery all new and of the most modern and approved inventions, and with a miller, in the person of Mr. Craig, who has had more than fifteen years of practical experience at milling of wheat, proprietors claims their ability to equal Pillsbury's Best Flour.

There is a good deal of building going on in the village at this time. James Oberson Joe. Cleveland and Mrs. Gordon are each erecting a dwelling house on Cherry Avenue and John Thompson is building on Excelsior street.

The Huntingtons are erecting a lumber shed and stocking up a lumber yard, which, with Cofield, & McDonald's yard offers better inducements to purchasers thanany other place in the county.

The Superviors are about opening up, to the town line, the new road laid out from this village to French Lake.

Leroy Ritchie has moved into the building lately remodeled over into a workshop and dwelling and proposes to keep on hand a stock of coffins and caskets, as we are informed.

Supervisor Huntington and Mr. J. J. Rennie made a call at Buffalo last Tuesday. The former on official business.

Mrs. Ridgway, of Minneapolis, mother of Doctor, is visiting her son here and is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Rennie, the son being of that class of persons denominated "old Bachelors."

Mr. Llwelly n Williams has bought out the drug business of J. J. Rennie and now has the store fitted up in first class style and is stocked up with a full stock of drugs and medicines and claims that his shop is not excelled in its appointments by any other outside the cities.

MAPLE LAKE MUSINGS.

Beautiful weather indeed.

The farmers are nearly through seeding. Wheat wedding and lawsuits are NON EST.

Miss Mammie Wren who begins her spring term of school in Albion, Monday, Sundied with her friend, Miss M. J. Gorman.

Farmers' Alliance meet at J. D. Moore's Hall next Saturday night.

The Republican press of the state is indulging in wholesale abuse of the Alliance members of the legislature because they failed to exhaust the entire catalogue of reform legislation. The people should be reasonable and recognize that those poor fellows had the Herculean task of renovating the Augean stables of the accumulated corruption of 31 years of Republican misrule before they could proceed with reform legislation. Furthermore, were it not for the sins and iniquities of the dominant party there would be, there could be no Alliance.

Our spring poet and itinerant musician was the first to grace the interior of the new village cooler, not however, until his money was all gone.

There is a likelihood that Maple Lake parish will lose their Pastor Rev. Father Savey, as he is soon to leave for California, for the good of his health.

It seems that the bankers of Wall street and the manufacturers of the east still dictate the financial policy and system of taxation for the great west and northwest.

ROCKFORD RIPPLES.

Farmers are busy finishing seeding, the ground is in good condition.

Tony Benner and Fred Allers, of the Ficur city, visited in Rockford over Sunday.

Geo. Irving has layed in a supply of buggies and all kind of agricultural impliments. Any one intending to purchase any machinery, will do well to call on him and get prices before purchasing.

The school meeting held, on the 24th to argue the question of a division of the district. The question was argued and when your correspondent left they were arguing that C. M. Johnson had been over the road from Rockford to Delano more times than Mr. Dorman. D. R. Farnham was not present being as it was prayer meeting night.

Of those who visited the city, on Tuesday were Geo. Irving, C. M. Johnson and E. Miller.

J. Haggerty visited his brother over Sunday.

Hugh McGuire lost a valuable horse, the other day it was worked too hard and got the lock jaw.

J. N. Moore is painting his house and papering it.

D. D. Ames painted his work shop, it improves the looks very much.

D. R. Thompson has been in Buffalo on county commissioner business for three days, this week.

Independence Indictments.

Weather fine and farmers are improving the time. Most of them will finish seeding the present week.

The roads are getting dry and dusty but are very rough.

Earl Hoisington has gone to Nebraska, on important business. Will be gone ten days or two weeks.

Sugar making is over, a very short run this spring. No use for maple sugar now since the McKinley bill took effect.

Quite a number of Odd Fellows went from Maple Plain to St. Paul last Monday, and we suppose had a good time.

Elder Stafford, of Minneapolis, preached at Armstrong last Sunday also J. N. Potter, of Rockford.

George Hoisington has been on the sick list but at this writing is improving.

Brandon & Rader has put in a well for George Washington. Got water at 155 ft. Mr. Washington will not go dry any longer.

Some of the boys have gone on the drive.

Everybody is improving in health since the warm weather set in. No use for doctors now.

How many has violated the fish law this spring? Nobody can tell.

WATERTOWN WAYS.

J. F. Boylan is busy at the county seat these days.

Mr. Zuelich went below the latter part of last week and ordered a stock of new buggies and two wheeled carts which he has placed in the maket here for sale. Those wishing to purchase any thing of the kind will do well to call on him.

Mr. Platner, Mr. Dyer and Mr. Eppel all young gentlemen of Delano were here on a visit last Sunday.

Harry Halgren has been stocking up his drug store at a rapid rate since he has become proprietor. The latest is a complete supply of fishing tackle which he sells very cheap also toilet soaps, perfumes and hair brushes and combs. Call and examine his goods and satisfy yourselves.

George Cunningham went to the cities on Monday and returned Wednesday with his new well auger and is now prepared to dig wells of any size from 18 inches to 3 feet.

Clean up around your premises espicially the cellars and barn yards if you would cheat the doctor out of about half of his business.

Last Saturday being Mrs. Malseds 59th birthday her daughters Misses Addie and Jennie gave her a pleasant surprise by inviting the ladies of the village to spend the afternoon with them and take tea in the evening. All enjoyed themselves very much and went home rejoicing.

Patt Geven has been doing some valuable improving to his building this week in the line of a new veranda in front of his building and a new coat of plastering inside. It looks fifty per cent better since.

The third Quarterly meeting of the Watertown circuit was held at Armstrong last Sunday by Dr. John Stafford the presiding Elder of this district.

Mr. Christian Barth spent a few days this week visiting friends in Delano.

THE EVERGREEN STATE.

Letter from Rev. W. H. Wilson.

Coupeville, Wash. April 24, 1891.

EDITOR BUFFALO GAZETTE:—Dear Editor, I am very much pleased each week to receive a copy of what I call the cleanest and best weekly news paper printed in wright county, although in political views its editor differs, some from me yet it is clear and clean always having a good cheery word for every one trying to do right. I want to speak through its pages to the dear friends in the east. Some how I have a tender place in my heart for the state where I lived in my boyhood days, and though separated from those early days of joy yet in my soul I live them all over again, and I cannot help believing that I have more work to do in Minnesota ere my task is done I would not have it seem that I have grown weary of the beautiful evergreen state of Washington, and especially of this delightful spot Puget Sound. One never tires of the beauty and variety of this country. One would not be here long before noticeing that all nations of the earth are headed this way, and classes and clans, of other nations than our own, gather here by the thousands, and are seen on the beach, as well as on the mountain taking in the beauty of what God has done for this place, no wonder the Siwash dreads to leave the place where in childhood he paddled the light canoe, or tamed the young deer. Just a few days ago, I thought to visit Stony Point a place about four miles from Copeville, where the Siwash tribe of Indians, have had a camp for 40 years. Starting out I soon reached the beautiful spring from which our village gets its supply of water, and while standing a moment looking at the water as it was forced up through the earth, and wondering at the goodness of my Master in heaven, my ear caught the sound of some one in distress, stepping along quite smart for a few rods, I noticed half a dozen Siwash women, or Clutchmen, as they are called here, sitting flat on the beach, on some blankets crying as though their hearts would breake. Let me give you this photograph. They were sitting on a blanket after the fashion of a tailor, with their hands on the ground beside them, then throwing the head towards the ground, let the hair all hang over the face they then moved the body backward and forward then to either side, as though they were in great pain, crying out in such awful piteous wails, as nearly to move the stoutest heart. I inquired the reason of their sorrow, and this is what they said. Good many years ago there was good many Injuns, now they are all gone, and white man plant potatoes on the grave, and drive us off when we come, we build a house on a piece of land where we were born, where grand father had his house, and white man say go, and we must go, pretty soon we have no place any more, and then they went into another fit of dispair. I just looked at them for a moment and then asked the allwise and kind Father of us all, to pity these poor simple creatures of the woods. And when we look at the matter, we are led to believe that some body has done something bad in taking the home away from these Indians.

We are almost ready to dedicate a new church at Crescent Harbor, a point on Whidby Island. The church is a frame, size 24 x 44, with a wing 14 x 20 feet. It is a beauty and I am very glad to have been able by the help of God, and the heroic lifting of a wide awake and zealous people that not one dollar will have to be raised on the day of dedication. The building cost $1600, God is leading us, on, and the work prospers. I send greeting to my friends through the Gazette, in Wright, Sherburne and Stearns and Mille Lacs counties.

Woman's Column.

For God and Home and Humanity.
EDITED BY MRS. E. A STACY.

Francis E. Willard in speaking of her impressions of personal work in the temperance cause for the first time, says "That it occurred to me that I should work for the good of the cause just where I was—that everybody ought and I believe that in this simple change of personal attitude from passive to aggressive lies the only force that can free this land from the drink habit and the liquor traffic. It would be like dynamite under the saloon, if, just where he is the minister would begin active work against it, if, just where he is, the teacher would instruct his pupils; if, just where he is, the voter would dedicate his ballot to this movement, and so on through the shining ranks of the great powers that make for righteousness from father and mother to Kindergarten toddler, if each were this day doing what each could just where he is."

TO LICENSE GAMBLING.

I am informed that an effort is about to be made to introduce into the legislature of the state of Illinois a bill to license gambling houses. This bill will be to the same tenor and effect as the present dramshop law.

Gambling is declared to be an offence—a crime, punishable by fine and imprisonment, and, as in the case of liquor selling, the punishment is remitted if the party takes out a license. In other words the people, through their legislative assembly, propose to license and authorize the commission of a crime. We believe all such laws are beyond the scope of legislative action. It cannot be possible under the constitutional organizations of our several states that any such power has been conferred. The object of the formation of republican government in this country was to promote the welfare, peace and good order of the body of the people. Public dramshops, gambling houses, and the like are elements of disorder and immorality elect disturbers of the public peace. Government has the right to suppress, but not the right to license them.

These gambling license men agree on the same line that the whiskey license men do. "Gambling is an evil, a vice and a practice which for the good of the community ought to be suppressed, but it exists. It is a power in the political machine. It now pays silent tribute to the public for protection, and we can not get rid of it. Therefore let us license it, and thus get a revenue directly into the public treasury."

The next thing will be to license the commission of larceny and other criminal offense against society. There is no difference in principle.

Licensing of dram shops, gambling houses, or any other form of vice, is the exercise of an unlawful power which is not vested in the legislature or any other body of men.

"ENSURE DOMESTIC TRANQUILITY."
—CONSTITUTION U. S.

The W. C. T. U. have adopted the motto, "For God and Home and Native Land," but the discerning statesmanship of the Fathers of the Constitution foresaw that the family was the foundation of the nation's life and welfare and placed its "ensured tranquility as one of the specified objects of the Constitution, and we the people said Amen. It may have had no precedent in written constitutions, but here it is to-day, a golden gem in this immortal basis of free, and if not perverted, righteous government. It is not to favor or promote, but "ensure domestic tranquility" to the last extent of civil power. This is the national law, written in blood, and rescued from perversion by the cannon on awful battlefields. It was saved, and to-day gathers all its mighty powers around the family, commanding—"Ensure Domestic Tranquility."

Now where can American woman find an equal ground of irresistible argument and appeal for protection of the home, from the horrible torment of liquor? It cannot be found. Carry the case to the people and open their eyes their constitution, with its mandatory obligations binding upon every citizen with all official oaths added, then show th misery, suffering, ruin and death which this torment inflicts on the homes of our land, and every one will see, that he is compelled to use all his lawful powers, including the ballot, to stop this inhuman destruction or be a traitor to his home, his country, and his God; and all oath-bound officials must meet the same charge. Mrs. Gougar says she has recorded from her general reading over 3,000 wife-murders by liquor in about two years. Here is a field for the W. C. T. U. all over the land, of irresistible power never equalled. In the name of Washington, of Jefferson, of Adams, of Kent, of our glorious, prostituted constitution, our weeping homes, our dying country, and of God, put up the flag—"ENSURE DOMESTIC TRANQUILITY. DOWN WITH SALOONS."

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 24, 1891.

The news of the snubbing given Mr. Harrison by the National Republican League convention at Cincinnati caused no surprise here, where every one who is at all posted on political matters knows the contempt felt for the present occupant of the White House by the leaders of the republican party, chief of whom is Mr. Blaine, who is now believed to have intentionally deceived Mr. Harrison when he promised him that he would not oppose his nomination. It is now conceded that Blaine may have or dictate the republican nomination next year, and if he allows Mr. Harrison to be nominated it will be simply because he will have become convinced of the impossibility of electing a republican.

A gentleman who is a warm personal friend of Mr. Harrison tells me that he is not the dupe of Mr. Blaine to the extent imagined by that gentleman and his friends, and that if after a careful observation of the political field he does not think he can be re-elected he will refuse to allow his name to go before the next republican convention. That may be Mr. Harrison's intention, but it would be impossible for a man with his overwhelming egotism to believe that he could possibly be defeated. So that it may be put down as certain that he will gladly take the nomination, if Blaine will let him have it. That's where the uncertainty comes in. Will Blaine let him have it?

The effect of the legislation of the billion dollar congress is beginning to be felt at the Treasury department, and already Secretary Foster has began to scheme as to how he can get the $30,000,000 that must be paid on the 1st of July for pensions. He has decided to utilize the $18,000,000 in silver half dollars now in the Treasury by depositing them in the National banks, thus making them available for the Government's current expenses.

Another item, aside from the Congressional appropriations becoming payable after July 1, that is taxing Mr. Foster's ingenuity to provide for is the $50,000,000 of 4½ per cent bonds that will mature in September. Although it has for some weeks been given out that all of these bonds would be taken up at or before maturity. I have it on good authority that it is the present intention of Mr. Foster to allow those in the hands of the National banks to remain outstanding at a reduced rate of interest, if the banks will consent to it. Whether he can legally do this without the passage of a special funding act of Congress is a debatable question.

Nobody has ever had much confidence in the honesty of Secretary Tracy's alleged reform in the employment of the foremen and master mechanics of the navy yards of the country, and now that it has been endorsed by Senator Chandler there isn't an atom of confidence left in it.

If Jerry Simpson isn't careful somebody will charge him with being in the pay of the Washington agents lobby. He made a speech here this week in favor of the government's paying the the Union soldiers or their heirs the difference between the value of the greenbacks paid them during the war and of gold. He says it will only take $3,000,000 to do it. Only!

It has leaked out through the State department that the administration is extremely anxious to dispense with the services of Fred. Douglass, minister to Hayti, because of the mess he has made of the negotiations for a coaling station on the island for the United States. It fears, however, to dismiss him now lest it may effect the negro votes in next year's convention.

The remants of the Sixth Massachusett's regiment, of which Lieut. Gov. Jones, of New York, was commander when it was attacked by the mob in the streets of Baltimore in April, 1861, visited Washington this week, and was royally entertained. They left for home this morning.

The Senate Finance committee has designated as a sub-committee to investigate the working of the McKinley tariff law, under the resolution adopted by the Senate at the last session. Senators Allison, Aldrich, Hitchcock, Carlisle and Harris. The sub-committee begins work next week, and it is already apparent that an attempt is to be made to make republican campaign thunder, but the two wide-awake democrats—Messrs. Carlisle and Harris will see that their end is held up.

P. T. BARNUM within the last twenty years expended upward of $3,000,000 in newspaper advertisements, and he left behind him a fortune of $5,000,000.

AT Yakutsk, Siberia, the ground is perpetually frozen to a depth of 612 feet. Every citizen of Yakutsk can have a cold-storage cellar without extra expense.

A LAUGHING ghost is said to haunt the mountains of east Tennessee. Ghosts are not particularly desirable, but this kind is preferable to the conventional wailing and sobbing spook.

JUDGE VIRGIN said, in granting a divorce at Skowhegan, Me.: "No woman who is decent should be obliged to live with a drunken husband, and if she comes to me I will grant her a divorce every time."

OSCAR WILDE has not proved entirely recreant to estheticism, inasmuch as he dines now in a white room with no furniture save the table and chairs, while his drawing-room is provided with settees with high white backs and sage green cushions.

MISS MAGGIE SCHUTT, of Derry, Pa., died recently. She was 65 years of age, and since her father's death, twenty years ago, had been living out as a maid of all work. Investigation of an old canvas bustle belonging to Miss Schutt disclosed a fortune of $9,000.

THE statistics show that fewer Italians bring their wives and families with them to the United States than any other class of immigrants. As a rule they do not come to stay and are neither profitable to the people of the United States while they do remain or their own nation, which has to care for the families of the wanderers in their absence.

THE finding of fifty human skeletons near Corpus Crispi, Tex., is accounted for by William Payne, manager of the Farmers' Alliance at Whitewright, Tex. He says eighty of his comrades deserted in a body from the rebel service and started for Mexico, not one of them having been heard of since, and that they were captured and executed to a man.

PAY-CARS are familiar sights on American railways, but this country has not yet employed the locomotive in banking operations. One of the New Zealand banks has a special car which visits the rural districts, cashes checks and receives deposits. The experiment is said to be profitable, and it is a great convenience to settlers who would otherwise be compelled to leave their farms and visit town on numerous occasions.

THE heavy losses by fire in April have already carried the aggregate of the first three months and a half of 1891 far beyond the corresponding period of 1890. For the first quarter of the year the loss has been $35,197,053, against $24,246,592 in the same quarter of 1890. During April the loss was $5,485,845, as compared with $3,601,960 during the same time last year. The total is $40,632,898 in 1891, as compared with $27,848,552 in 1890.

ONE of the largest pieces of tunneling ever undertaken in the world has been completed at Centralia, Pa. It is six thousand feet in length, and extends into the workings of the Hazel Dell mines and through the basin of the mammoth vein. This tunnel will drain the entire Centralia basin. It is eleven feet wide by seven feet high, and although it was driven through the hardest kind of rock was completed in fifteen months.

IN the United States district court at Boston the other day, Gen. B. F. Butler, who appeared for Mrs. Johnson, defendant in a prosecution for pension forgery, was ordered from the room by Judge Carpenter, who had the marshal and an assistant enforce his decree. Gen. Butler, with tears in his eyes, said that he yielded to force; and when he returned to the court after the judge had left the bench, remarked that the room smelled a little better.

BUFFALO BILL and his Indians are now exploring the picture galleries of Antwerp. They will have ample opportunity for seeing the historic nymphs and madonnas whom Sir Joshua Reynolds described as all being faithful pictures of "fat Mrs. Rubens up in the the clouds." They will also see a European reproduction of their own Pine Ridge society—women and dogs drawing street-carts, while the men smoke and walk behind the procession. If this does not civilize them, nothing can.

THE death of P. T. Barnum elicited numerous press comments on his career. His name is familiar to the people and has become incorporated in the French language. Hon. Whitelaw Reid said: "Barnum had many excellent qualities. Horace Greeley agreed with Barnum on the questions of temperance and universalism, and always spoke of him in the highest terms. A few years ago Barnum sent me his autobiography with a dedication on the flyleaf saying: 'As I cannot live to correct the proof sheets of my obituary, I offer you these pages, where you will find all the facts of my life correctly told.'"

THE town of Kiowa, Kan., has a lady mayor. Mrs. Dr. Paxton, who has closed and double-locked the gambling houses and saloons, and is deaf to all appeals to moderate the rigor of her programme of reform. Thirsty citizens have endeavored in vain to induce her to show a little leniency. Despairing of shaking her resolutions, a delegation called on her husband the other day and begged him to use his influence with the city's fair chief magistrate. The husband's reply was that his wife was running the city as well as her household, and that he was powerless. The mayoress evidently means business.

A RECEPTION was given by the medical profession of London to Dr. William Salmon, of Glamorganshire, who is probably the oldest living member of the medical profession in England, if not in the world. He was born in Suffolk 101 years ago last Monday, and the fact is corroborated by the appearance of his name upon the list of members of the Royal College of Surgeons of England in 1809, when he was but nineteen years old. Notwithstanding his advanced age he is in the full possession of all his faculties and attends to his practice with more regularity than many younger men.

LATER.

Scared Convicts.

STILLWATER, April 29—The state prison this evening was visited by a destructive fire, but the gale which had blown all day having subsided, the loss was not nearly so heavy as it might have been.

At 9 o'clock the paint shop of the Thresher Co. was discovered on fire and in an hour was a total loss. In the building destroyed were twelve new separators and seven engines just finished, entailing a loss to the Minnesota Thresher company of upward of 15,000, on which there is a certain amount of insurance. The building, which belonged to the state, was also insured, yet its loss over insurance will be some $7,000. The schedules of insurance on the building could not be obtained tonight, as the risks are in several companies, with the several shops separate.

Where is "Old Hutch."

CHICAGO, April 29.—B. P. Hutchinson, the multi-millionaire grain speculator, known nearly the world over as "Old Hutch," is mysteriously missing.

It is supposed that he is demented and his business a financial wreck.

Mr. Hutchinson, whose tall, aged, yet erect figure, has for years been one of the most picturesque sights on the Chicago board of trade, left the city about midnight last night, taking with him a small satchel and a ticket for Pensacola, Fla. None of his friends or relatives appear to have known that he was going. The veteran operator, however, never was much of a man for confidants.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., was visited by a $250,000 fire on the 29th. Insurance about $150,000.

A dynamite bomb was thrown at the palace of the President of Chili on the 29th, doing but little damage.

JUST as ex-Senator Henry W. Blair was about to embark for China, to which country he was recently appointed minister he received a telegram recalling him to Washington. This action by the Department of State is supposed to be based upon the objections expressed by the Chinese government against the appointment.

THE tin plate manufacturers of the United States met at New York on the 29th, to effect an organization.

WHILE a rehearsal of an amateur performance was progressing in the opera house at Troy, Ala., on the 29th, the roof fell in killing two and injuring several.

NO DATE FIXED.

The Miners Issue an Address Postponing the Eight-Hour Movement for the Present.

COLUMBUS, O., April 29.—The national executive board of the United Mine Workers of America has concluded that the time is not auspicious for a strike for the eight-hour day. The following address to the United Mine Workers of America has been issued:

"FELLOW MINERS: From the time that mining became an industry of importance within the boundary of the United States the question of shortening the hours of labor has existed in the minds of the thinking men of our trade. By the natural laws of evolution and by a practice and exercise of manly patience and by a suppression of personal prejudice on the part of the miners of the country during the last two years we had arrived at the stage in organization at our last annual convention when every friend of the miners throughout the whole land believed that this great reform—viz.: eight hours—was within our easy grasp, and steps were taken by resolution and otherwise to inaugurate the system.

"Since that time the world has been startled by one of the most awe-inspiring strikes in the annals of our trade. The coke workers of the Connellsville region for the last twelve weeks have been the participants in a battle waged by organized capital against organized labor which can only be termed the gory precursor of the seemingly inevitable strife between the two forces in a general and more comprehensive manner. While the men, women and children of this region have been the victims of the sheriff's writs and his deputies' Winchesters, and while they are now threatened with the still more cowardly and still more unscrupulous methods of the dastardly Pinkertons, it has been the duty of the United Mine Workers to render to those people all the financial assistance possible and compatible with the laws of our organization. Therefore it is unnecessary that we should say that the funds which under other circumstances would have been available for our purpose on the 1st of May have been very materially reduced.

"As the custodians of the interests of the people who have placed us in the positions which we occupy we positively though reluctantly refuse, with our eyes open and with a full and complete knowledge of the situation to jeopardize those interests, and will not be responsible for the accompanying sufferings and sacrifices of a strike to our constituents and their families.

"We appreciate fully the boldness of this step. We realize the disappointment to thousands of our friends, but realizing that discretion is the better part of valor and that the good general, rather than lead his army headlong to disaster, prefers to make an honorable retreat, we take the latter course, and if it can be called a retreat we prefer it rather than to have the maledictions of our people after they have suffered for keeping back the truth from them, and have determined at the present time to continue the fight in the coke region with all our might and vigor. We have, therefore, passed the following resolution and submit it to you with all candor, humility and respect:

"Resolved, That the eight-hour movement be deferred for the time being and that the time for action be left in the hands of the national executive board and the presidents of the various districts."

The executive board also makes an appeal to local assemblies and local unions for aid for the coke workers, whose battle they say must be fought to a victory.

STOLE THOUSANDS.

After the Death of a New York Bank President It Is Discovered That He Is a Defaulter to the Extent of $400,000.

NEW YORK, April 29.—An astonishing defalcation that will reach $400,000 was announced Tuesday in the Ninth national bank at No. 407 Broadway. The defalcation is charged to John T. Hill, the president of the bank, who died March 1. He was a trusted official, respected in all the financial world of New York. It has been learned that President Hill used his official position to take money from the bank to carry on speculations in Wall street, and that of the $400,000 missing from the bank nearly every dollar was lost in unfortunate ventures in the stock and grain market.

President Hill had so carefully covered up his tracks when taking funds of the institution that only his death would have revealed the facts. He was the executor, with other New Brunswick (N. J.) business men, in several large estates. Whenever a regular customer of the bank borrowed money on collateral securities Hill would wait until the loan fell due. Then when it was paid by a check, which would cover both the money loaned and the interest for the use of it, he would pocket the checks given in payment and replace the collateral securities, which he had returned to the customer, with securities taken from the estates in New Brunswick of which he was executor. Thus there would be no change on the books of the bank and the scheme could be carried on indefinitely. After Hill's death his fellow executors for the New Brunswick estates began an investigation to find the missing securities which he had in charge, and they soon learned that they were in the Ninth national bank, held as securities for loans. They demanded the securities, and then the story of the defalcation was soon learned. While the loss is serious it does not impair the bank's solvency, nor its ability to take care of its customers. Its assets aside from the loss mentioned are of good character. Its discounts are exceptionally good.

TOOK HIS OWN LIFE.

His Daughter's Shame Causes a Father to Commit Suicide.

LANCASTER, Pa., April 29.—Edward Gaspken, aged 45, a dairyman living near this city, arose at 4 o'clock a. m., and started with an ax for the woods with suicidal intent. His 14-year-old son followed, but the father ran, leaped into the Conestoga, and drowned himself. The son leaped after him and had to be pulled out. The father's body was recovered five hours later. His action is attributed to despondency over the seduction of his daughter.

Death of a Noted Artist.

BOSTON, April 28.—Samuel L. Gerry the well-known artist, died Sunday night, aged 78 years. He was a native of Boston, and received his early art education in Europe. He was one of the founders of the Boston Art club, and was for several terms its president. He was, in the early days of the movement, a strong anti-slavery man and a firm supporter of William Lloyd Garrison. He was one of the most prolific painters in this country, and numerous examples of his work are hung in the public and private galleries here and elsewhere.

Killed Her Husband.

GOSHEN, Ind., April 29.—During a quarrel Tuesday morning at White Pigeon Mrs. E. J. Brink fatally shot her husband. Brink, in the course of the quarrel, had kicked her and held her in a corner with his hand at her throat, when she drew a revolver and shot him through the throat, the ball cutting the jugular vein.

A Preacher Drops Dead.

BURLINGTON, N. C., April 29.—Rev. R. A. Ricks, a prominent minister, while preaching in the Methodist church in this city fell dead in his pulpit.

NOT IN THE RACE.

The Alleged Intentions of Secretary Blaine — It Is Reported That He Has Written to Friends Declining to Allow the Use of His Name in Connection with the Nomination.

NEW YORK, April 29.—A Poughkeepsie (N. Y.) dispatch says: The News-Press, of which Mr. Hinchley, formerly of the New York Graphic, is editor, publishes the following: "Stephen B. Elkins is authority for a statement made to a representative of the 'News-Press' to the effect that James G. Blaine would shortly announce his decision not, under any circumstances, to allow his name to be used at the next republican national convention as a candidate for president. It is said that Mr. Blaine's letter or announcement will be so positive as to admit of but one construction—and that is that he will never again be a candidate for the presidency."

Hon. Smith M. Weed, although a democrat, has certain business relations with men of prominence who are republicans, and he also has said two or three times lately that when the time came Mr. Blaine would be found positively declining the nomination.

"Mr. Weed has been so outspoken on this subject recently," the "News Press" says, "when talking to his friends, as to give the impression that his imformation was as direct as that of Mr. Elkins, who is known to be Mr. Blaine's intimate friend and closest political adviser."

Mr. W. J. Arkell, editor and proprietor of "Judge," and whose associate in the ownship of "Frank Leslie's" is Russell B. Harrison, also says that Mr. Blaine is about to come out with a most positive refusal to allow his name to be used again in connection with the presidency. In fact, Mr. Arkell expects soon to be permitted to publish the full text of Mr. Blaine's letter on the subject.

WASHINGTON, April 29,—The news that Elkins tells about Secretary Blaine's intentions does not receive full faith and credit in Washington. It may be that before the next republican national convention meets the secretary will pronounce against his own candidacy, and in a way that will forbid his friends supporting him. But there is no hurry to anticipate the action of the convention, and Mr. Elkins' authority for declaring that Secretary Blaine will shortly announce his decision may well be questioned. The Critic quotes a "close friend" of the secretary as follows:

"I am not certain that Mr. Blaine has authorized Mr. Elkins to speak for him, but I am sure that he does not intend to allow his name to go before the next republican national convention. The fact is it is not altogether improbable, in view of the Foraker incident at Cincinnati, that Mr. Blaine may feel it incumbent on himself to announce under his own signature a fact that has been known to his intimate friends for a long time—that is, that he is not in any sense a candidate for the nomination."

Congressman Boutelle, of Maine, and ex-Congressman Bayne, of Pittsburgh, both most intimate friends of the secretary of state, who had charge of his campaign in the last three national conventions, have within the last month told their friends in private conversation that Mr. Blaine would not only not be a candidate for the nomination but that he would, if this agitation continued, very soon announce over his name that he could not and would not accept the nomination if it should be tendered him.

DOESN'T HELP RUDINI'S CASE.

The Official Report of the Lynching Said to Hurt Italy's Claims.

WASHINGTON, April 29.—The report of the federal district attorney in the New Orleans lynching will probably first see light through the diplomatic correspondence of Secretary Blaine. Atty.-Gen. Miller said Tuesday afternoon after the report had been received that he did not intend to make it public at this time. It was for official use, and Secretary Blaine would be acquainted with the facts contained in the report, or, if he desired, would be furnished with a copy of it. The impression in official circles is that the facts found by District Attorney Grant help to knock the props from under Rudini's claims. It is even hinted that the burden of proving any of the Italians were subjects of King Humbert will be thrown upon the Italian government, as there seems to be little doubt that, with possibly one exception, all the victims of lynch law had taken steps towards abandoning their allegiance to Italy by registering and voting at the New Orleans municipal election.

DRUGGED AND ROBBED.

An Aged Traveler's Sad State—Supposed to Have Been Robbed of $15,000 by a Woman.

DIXON, Ill., April 29.—A man of about 70 years of age and well dressed was taken from a train on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy at Mendota last Wednesday afternoon in an unconscious condition. Investigation showed he had been drugged. He has ever since been unable to speak a word. He had letters on his person from Maj. William McKinley and other prominent Ohio men. The letters are addressed to Col. R. H. Gillsbie, Columbus, O. He has papers showing that he had received a large sum of money from the government within the last month, about $14,000 or $15,000, and has other claims still pending. A woman who had been traveling with him got off the train at Aurora. She had not been seen or heard from since. It is thought that she could tell what became of the old man's money.

Killed Himself Because of Fright.

MONTICELLO, Ill., April 29.—Joseph Troxel, aged 18, was found dead in a haymow Monday, having blown his brains out. Having been ill for several months, neighboring gossips persuaded him that he was dying of consumption. His physician could not convince him to the contrary and through this mistaken belief he killed himself.

Cotton Destroyed by Fire.

For Compulsory Education.

HARRISBURG, Pa., April 29.—In the house Tuesday the compulsory education bill passed finally by a vote of 116 to 49. The bill requires that all children between the ages of 8 and 12 years must attend school at least sixteen weeks each year.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS

MINNESOTA STOCK.

A Department Bulletin Says Horses and Cattle Are in Good Condition.

A bulletin issued by the agricultural department has the following relative to the condition of stock in Minnesota:

Never, in the history of the state, have horses wintered better. Food has been plenty, and since there has been a general tendency to take better care of them, the loss from disease is much reduced. No epidemic has appeared during the past year. Cattle are in excellent condition. They have been free from all disease, and there has been no loss from exposure. Sheep have wintered excellently well. No diseases have prevailed. The ravages of dogs and wolves appear to be the only source of loss to the flocks. Hogs are in fair condition. The high price of grain has lessened the average weight, perhaps, as much more corn would have been fed to them had it been cheaper.

TRULY PATHETIC.

A Mother Faints on the Train Clasping Her Baby's Corpse.

A very sad incident occurred on the Milwaukee train which arrived in St. Paul the other morning from Chicago. Among the passengers was Mrs. Helen Hope, the 19-year-old wife of a Minneapolis mill employe, who had with her an infant in arms. During the entire trip the baby was sick and the young mother cared for it with the utmost tenderness, but just before the train reached St. Paul it was noticed that both mother and child had become strangely silent. For some time it was supposed that they were sleeping but finally it was discovered that the mother had fainted and that the little one which she clasped in her arms was dead. The unhappy mother was revived and given in charge of her husband who had come to St. Paul to meet her.

Plowing by Steam.

Plowing by steam is now being tried in Pipestone county. Simpson Watson, who has a contract to break several thousand acres this year, started his traction engine, which pulls six large plows and is capable of turning over twenty-five acres of sod in ten hours The steam outfit of C. J. Ross, having five plows, would also be started in a few days. The practicability of this experiment would be watched with a great deal of interest.

Southern Minnesota Dentists.

At the annual meeting of the South ern Minnesota Dental society in Mankato the following officers were elected for the coming year: President, Dr. C. W. Nutting, Spring Valley; vice president, Dr. E. D. Allison, Marshall; secretary, Dr. E. L. Hawes, Mankato; treasurer, Dr. F. P. James, Sleepy Eye. The executive committee is composed of Drs. C. D. Snow, Mankato; C. H. Robinson, Wabasha, and C. H. Stearns, Zumbrota.

Many Horses Burned.

Fire in St. Paul completely destroyed the livery barns of J. B. Cook & Son with all the contents, including sixty horses and a large number of hacks, sleighs, etc. The total loss was $40,000, and the insurance $20,000. The four white horses and fire engine belonging to the "One of the Bravest" company, playing at the Grand opera house, were burned, having just been stabled after the evening performance.

Many Buildings Destroyed.

A fire in the north end of St. Charles destroyed over $100,000 worth of property. George Smith & Co, general store; M. H. Gale, dry goods; C. E. Smith, furniture; S. A. Johnson, hardware; F. Kufer, saloon; Henry Frisch, hotel; Times printing office, Masonic hall and a number of other buildings, together with several residences, were swept away.

The News Briefly Chronicled.

A bill appropriating $50,000 for the state exhibit at the world's fair was passed by the state legislature.

Burglars entered the shoe store of P. Lundberg at Lake City through a rear window and carried away about thirty pair of fine shoes.

Capt. Compton's commission as surveyor general arrived at Fergus Falls and he left for St. Paul to assume the office. No changes in the working force would be made at present.

Mrs. Amelia Parrhysins, wife of J. C. Parrhysins, of Winona, died from the effects of a removal of a cancer from her breast. She was born at Palantine on the Rhine and was 49 years of age.

The Duluth land office has issued a circular announcing that on May 81 all business relative to lands dealt with by the St. Cloud land office heretofore, will be transacted at the Duluth office.

Why He Couldn't See.

"Do I understand you to say," said the attorney, looking hard at the principal witness, "that upon hearing a noise in the hall, you rose quickly, lit a candle, and went to the head of the stairs; that a burglar was at the foot of the stairs, and you did not see him? Are you blind?"

"Must I tell the truth?" stammered the witness, blushing to the roots of his hair.

"The whole truth," was the stern reply.

"Then," replied the witness, brushing aside his damp, clinging locks, and wiping the perspiration from his clammy brow, "my wife was in front of me."—Light.

HOME, SWEET HOME.

No sweeter song is ever heard
Than that the happy mother sings;
Her lullaby is love's own word,
And from her heart our home joy springs.
It matters not how simple she,
How quaint the strain she murmurs o'er,
It steals like angel melody
From some unseen but sunny shore.

Turn back to childhood's golden bliss,
How wondrous were its summers, long,
How pure its rapture, fond its kiss,
How ravishing its bluebird song!
The great world grew in pictures fair,
Its seasons framed them strangely wise;
As light as dew fell snowflake care,
While pleasure beamed like morning skies.

Let man or maid with vision keen
Review the blessings of to-day,
And lo! in long array they're seen,
A field of flowers from God's own May,
And song-birds gather there to sing
In palm and vine, the while the sun
Does thousand treasures to us bring,
And yet life's story's but begun!

Let no man say: "But death abides,
And all our jewels dream-like fade;"
Behind the shadow sunshine hides,
And love will reap what wisdom made;
Our faith and hope reach over time
To that sweet home where ours shall be
A song that Heaven makes sublime,
Its music—all eternity!

THE NEW BABY.

Grandma Destroys the Demon Jealousy in Its Incipiency.

ONE day last week babe was a-setten in my lap, and I was tellin' her a story. I had jest got to the thrillin' part of it when the good little boy, who always minded his ma, had a hull pail of red apples gin to him. And babe was a lookin' up into my face with her big, blue-gray eyes a shinin', and her golden-yellow hair a-fallin' back from her little, eager, happy, upturned face.

When all of a sudden the kitchen door opened and Miss Pixley came in, and, before she had been there some time, she says to babe, a-winkin' to me at the same time:

"Your nose is broke now, young lady!"

Babe put her little fingers up to her nose and felt of it. And I winked to Miss Pixley to not say no more, for I knew what she meant; I knew she meant that Thomas Jefferson's little new baby would crowd babe, our Tirzeh Ann's little daughter, out of our hearts.

But Miss Pixley went right on. She is an old maiden, and has had five disappointments, and some say seven, and they have embittered her. And says she to babe:

"Little Snow, the new baby will take your place now, in grandma's heart."

Babe looked troubled; on her smooth little brow I could see fall the first faint shadow of that great black shape that we call jealousy. Her big, sweet eyes looked as if they was cloudin' up nicely for tears.

And I wunk severer and more vigelent winks than I had wunk before at Miss Pixley to stop! If ever a wink spoke, them did, to stop immegidly!

But she kept right on. Poor creeter, I spoze them disappointments was the cause on't. She kep right on, and ses she:

"You won't be g'andma's baby any more now; she has got somebody else to love now."

And then the cloud did break into a rainfall of tears. Babe jest bust out a cryin', and snuggled down into my arms, and laid her wet cheeks on my bosom, through the force of old custom, and, anon! (how much like human creeters accordin' to her size), she drew her head away as if sayin':

"I can't lay my head there any more; if the love has gone out of the heart it won't rest me nor comfort me no more to lay there."

And pride woke up in her; she was too proud to make a fuss, or beg for love. How much, how much like big children! So she sot up kinder straight in my lap, with her pretty lips a quiverin', an the tears a-runnin' down her cheeks.

And I riz right up with babe in my arms and went out of the room pretty quick, but not vigelent.

Josiah was there. I wouldn't misuse Miss Pixley owin' to [illegible] six or seven things mentioned by me prior and before this. But I felt that I must make it right with babe that very minute.

I knew how she felt—wounded love, and pride, and jealousy, etc., etc., etc.

I knew that a few syllables of about the hardest lessons of life had come to babe, and I must help her spell 'em; I must help her with her lesson.

So I took her right into the parlor and set down with her in the big chair, and never said a word for a minute or two, only held her clost to me, and kissed the shinin' hair that lay up against my cheek.

She a-strugglin' at first, jealousy and pride a-naggin' her, and she at first a-not bein' able to hear any voices only jest them of jealousy and pride—jest like older children exactly.

But after awhile I held her so warm and stiddy, with my cheek a-layin' on the pretty head, the stiddy, firm clasp and contact sort o' calmed her, and then anon she drew one little arm up round my neck, and anon the other one, and I looked down deep into her eyes, right into the little true soul, and that little true soul saw the truth in mine.

Words couldn't have convinced babe so well as that look that she had learnt to depend on.

Love has a language that though may be it can't be exactly parsed and analyzed, yet it can be understood exactly, entirely understood, and babe see that I loved her.

And then was the time that that sweet little creeter put up her arms and kissed me, and I says, sort o' low like, but very tender:

"Sweetheart, you know jest how much I love you, don't you?"

And then I kissed her several times in various places on her face, every one on 'em sweet places. And then I went on and talked dretful good to babe about the new baby. I confided in her, told her about how the little new soul had come, unknown to itself, here into a great, strange world, how helpless it waz, how weak, and how we must all help it, and try to make it feel itself at home amongst us.

And I tried to explain it to her, how that as she had come first, she owed a courtesy to the newcomer, and that she must be ready and willin' to neighbor with her. I didn't use jest those words, but them was my idees.

I told her how blind the little creeter was, and babe, if only out of politeness, must try to see for her, lead her straight over ways she knew nothin' about, and keep her from harmin' herself.

How baby Snow couldn't talk for herself at all now, and babe must talk for her; good talk, that little Snow could learn of her bimeby. How she couldn't walk, and babe must go ahead o' her and make a good path for her to follow when she got big enough.

I told her jest how hard it was for the little creeter to be put here in the midst of sorrow, and trouble, and dangers, and how we must all of us be jest as good to her as we could out of pity for the dear little lonesome creeter.

So I roused up babe's pity for her, and she was all animated about helpin' of her; and then I told her the baby had come to be a great blessin' and comfort to her, if she was only patient and good to her.

And don't you see the very fact of babe havin' to do a kindness to Snow, havin' to do good things for her, was the surest way of makin' her love her, for it is a great fact in our human nature that you can't love 'em that you have injured in any way. And at the same time, if you have ever been good to anybody, you always feel softer towards 'em ever afterwards, and more mellerer.

Curius, ain't it?

But it is a fact.

And I spoze the reason of it is that you have sort o' lowered yourself in your own estimation by doing a mean, unkind act, and so, in order to satisfy your mental criticism o' yerself, to make it right with your own soul, you lay hold and bring up all the faults you can of that person, to justify your own act. And so you keep on that mental naggin' at 'em; that uncomfortable sort of a feelin' towards 'em makes you restless and uneasy, and you feel glad and relieved every time you stand justified to your consciousness by ketchin' 'em in a bad act. Hain't it so? Now, honestly, hain't it?

IT WAS LOVELY TO SEE THEM.

Why, I know it is, and so I made sure that babe should begin right.

For if you do a good, helpful thing for a person, your hull soul feels comfortable, and you bring up unconscious mental reasonin's why you did it; it was because they were so good, so smart, etc., etc.

And so you keep on a feelin' good and comfortable, and you keep on a provin' up to your own self, till you get fairly in love with 'em. Bless you if you don't!

A very curius thing. But the way I do, when I get holt of a strange fact or truth, I don't expect to explain it full to myself before I act on't.

No, I grasp holt of it and use it for my own then, and afterwards wonder at it to my heart's content.

So babe got to thinkin' she was necessary to little Snow's happiness, and that tickled her little self-esteem, jest es if she was a older child, only accordin' to her weight.

She got to thinkin' she must watch over her or she would get hurt, which called out all the good protector's motherly impulses of her little soul which was in her—still accordin' to her weight, forty pounds more or less.

And day by day babe's love for the little creeter grew till it was fairly beautiful to see 'em together, and so Josiah said, and Thomas J. said so, and Tirzeh Ann and Maggie and Whitfield.

And as for Miss Pixley, I thought to myself, disappointments or not, I have got to give her a talkin' to, and the very next time I see her.

She had gone when babe and I went out of the parlor—the babe with happy, bright eyes, and I with kinder, thoughtful, pitying ones, and all four on em kinder wet.

But the next time I see Miss Pixley alone, I tackled her, and she as good as promised me that she wouldn't ever say to any woman's child what she had said to babe.

And I don't believe she will either, for she's got good in her.

She hain't such a bad creeter after all, and good land! what can you expect?—seven, right along, one after the other?—Josiah Allen's Wife, in Ladies' Home Journal.

A Young Philosopher.

A boy sat on the dock at the D. & M. depot yesterday with a fishline in the water and the ice cakes swirling around it. A man who saw him stopped to ask:

"Are you fishing?"

"Yep."

"Catching anything?"

"Noap."

"Don't you know that you don't stand one chance in a thousand of catching a fish?"

"Yep."

"Then what are you here for?"

"To get used to not catching a blamed thing!" replied the boy as he hauled up the bait to spit on it.—Detroit Free Press.

A REVENGEFUL MAN.

He Was on the Lookout for People Who Wanted to Rob Him.

When a conductor on a Chicago suburban train approached a heavy-set, red-headed fellow, the fellow said: "Look here, you have already punched my ticket twice."

"Well, but why do you give it to me twice?"

"Because," the fellow replied, "you came along and held out your hand, and I was tempted to see how often you would punch away my salary, for it takes about all I make to buy a monthly ticket. Hold on," he added, when the conductor began to move off. "I have discovered that you are a robber, and I am going to call you to account. I am going to whip you, sir."

"I reckon not," said the conductor.

"But I reckon I am. I have noticed for several years a growing disposition on all sides to rob me, and I have made up my mind to whip every man who I feel sure is a robber. I know that you have robbed me, and I am going to whip you. Wait a minute. Lest you think there may be some doubt as to my ability to perform my duty in this matter, let me say that I have three medals presented me by different boxing associations. What time will you be at leisure?"

"I don't know," said the conductor.

"Well, no matter, for I have a day off, and can ride with you until the desired opportunity presents itself."

The conductor, who was evidently disturbed, went into a forward car. When he returned a few minutes later he discovered that the revengeful fellow was gone.

"What became of that red-headed man?" he asked.

"He got off at the last station," a passenger replied. "By the way, why didn't you make him pay his fare?"

"Because he said that I had already punched his ticket twice."

"Yes, he said so, but the truth is, you did not punch it at all. He had no ticket. He lives at Madison Park, and is known as the biggest dead-beat in the community."—Arkansaw Traveler.

COULD NOT READ.

But He Angrily Insisted on Having an Article on the Bill of Fare.

An old man stepped into a down town restaurant last evening and seating himself in the lunch department, took up a bill of fare and began looking it over carefully. I sat next to him, munching a frugal newspaper man's meal that cost fifteen cents.

The old man's studious perusal of the menu excited suspicion, which was turned to a ludicrous situation a moment later. The old man looked over the bill a moment longer and then called a waiter.

"Here, boy," he said, "I want you."

The black youth responded promptly and stood with the obsequious air of a man who not had a tip that day.

"Well, sir," he suggested respectfully.

"You may bring me," said the old man, resting his finger on the last line of the bill of fare, "you may bring me," he went on with deliberation, "some of that."

The black boy gazed at the place indicated by the elderly gentleman's finger and could scarcely believe his eyes. He looked again and a second later a bit of native humor began to show itself in the sparkling of his eyes and the widening of his mouth.

"Some of that, sir," the old gentleman broke out, impatiently, "d' ye hear?"

The waiter slipped back and laughed the story to his chief. At the place indicated this line appeared:

"Unless otherwise ordered, cream will be put in coffee before drawn, as it improves the flavor."

The old man could not read.—Kansas City Times.

DOMESTIC CONCERNS.

—Mint Sauce: Chop a bunch of mint fine, mix with a large tablespoonful of sugar, season with salt and pepper, add four tablespoonfuls of vinegar.—The Home.

—Gravy will generally be lumpy if the thickening is poured in while the pan is over the fire. Set the pan off until the thickening is well stirred in, then set it on the fire and cook thoroughly.

—A valuable salve for cuts or wounds of any kind: Boil one-half cup of thick, sweet cream ten or fifteen minutes, stirring constantly; when cold, beat it thoroughly, when it will be a creamy paste. Bottle and cork tightly or make fresh every time.

—Egg Sandwiches: Chop hard-boiled eggs fine, with a cucumber pickle, large or small, according to the number of eggs. Pepper and salt, adding a little made mustard, and rubbing very smooth with a silver spoon. Spread between thin slices of crustless buttered bread. Pile on a plate on a folded napkin.—Ladies' Home Journal.

—Roly-Poly Pudding: Make a rich suet crust, roll rather thin, spread jam (or any kind of fruit), leaving a margin of paste where the pudding joins, roll it round, tie in a cloth that has been sprinkled with flour, drop in boiling water, keep cooking two hours, take off the cloth, lay on a flat dish, and serve while hot with lemon sauce.—Boston Budget.

—Old-Fashioned Gingerbread: One teacupful New Orleans molasses, five tablespoonfuls melted butter, a teaspoonful soda dissolved in five tablespoonfuls hot water, a pinch of salt, half a teaspoonful each of ground cloves and cinnamon, half a teaspoonful each of strong ginger and powdered alum and one and one-half teacupfuls sifted flour. Bake in a well-greased, shallow pan in a quick oven.—Orange Judd Farmer.

—Chocolate Macaroons: Melt three ounces of chocolate over the fire, then with one pound of pulverized sugar and the whites of three eggs work it to a thick paste. Roll the paste down to the thickness of one-quarter of an inch, cut in small round or fancy shaped pieces with a paste cutter; butter a pan and sprinkle it slightly with flour and sugar, using equal quantities of both; put the paste on this and bake in a moderate oven. These are best cold.—Prairie Farmer.

—Policemen, mail-carriers and others whose occupation keeps them on their feet a great deal are often troubled with chafed, sore and blistered feet, especially in the extremely hot weather. A powder is used in the German army for sifting into the shoes and stockings of the foot soldiers, consisting of three parts salicylic acid, ten parts starch, and eighty-seven parts pulverized soapstone. It keeps the feet dry, prevents chafing, and rapidly heals sore spots. Finely-pulverized soapstone alone is very good.

CHILDREN'S COLDS.

A Few Simple Remedies for Their Treatment.

During changeable weather little children are exceedingly likely to take sudden colds. Nothing requires more careful watching than such colds, which in a few hours may develop from apparently harmless symptoms into the most alarming form of sore throat or lung disease. Do not for a moment neglect such a cold in a young child. Keep the little one within doors and properly clad, being sure that its feet and the vital parts of its body are well protected with flannels. A simple remedy for a cold is a teaspoonful of sirup of ipecac dissolved in a glass of cold water and administered by the teaspoonful every hour. If there seems to be any hoarseness in the breathing, a flannel cloth dipped in camphorated oil and heated quite hot and laid across the chest with a number of pieces of flannel over it to keep in the heat will often give relief. It should be renewed frequently. Special care should be taken not to expose the child to draughts or in any way by which a fresh cold may be taken while this medicine is given. The perspiration induced by this, and almost any medicine administered for a cold, renders the patient doubly sensitive to draughts or any change of temperature. A simple cold in the head and throat may often be eased by rubbing the nose and throat with camphorated oil. If this is not convenient mutton tallow or simple olive oil with a few drops of camphor sprinkled in it, will answer the same purpose. In case of a cold, give the child as much nourishing food at its meals as it will take. The system is in a weakened, debilitated condition, and may often be completely rallied by rich, wholesome, stimulating food.—N. Y. Tribune.

Buying Through the Mails.

Shopping by mail has become an easy and satisfactory matter within the past few years, and ladies living at a distance from New York or other large centers, can dress with taste and elegance, and within the limits of fashionable choice, without ever visiting the large shops from which their wardrobes are ordered. Every large dry-goods establishment in New York has a mailing department, where eight or ten clerks are constantly employed in cutting yards of new goods into samples, arranging and filling orders, matching goods and sending them to customers all over the country, and in all parts of the world. Their dealings are, of necessity, strictly honorable, and in most instances quite as much pains are taken to fill a carefully-written, sensible order, as if the customer were present in person. The very latest Parisian novelties can be obtained by a resident of the far west as well as by a Fifth-avenue woman of fashion.—N. Y. Ledger.

How to Cook a Steak.

If you want a good bit of steak, have a clear, hot fire, set your clean, empty pan on the spot, cover it up, then pound your steak, and when your pan is very hot lay in your steak and cover quickly. As soon as it has crisped enough to let go its hold on the pan, turn over and cover quickly. Turn again as at first, and continue to do so about every two minutes until you have turned it six or eight times. Have a hot, buttered dish ready for it and lay it in; add a sprinkle of pepper, salt and sugar and cover tightly. Now, if you wish a gravy, put a bit of butter in your pan. When hot, put in a pinch of flour, add a small teacupful of boiling water, let it boil a few minutes, then put in a gravy bowl, instead of putting over your beef to draw out the juice. Now try this plan just once, and you will see you women know nothing about how to cook a good steak.—An Old Butcher.

HAIR-DYEING.

How Both Men and Women Try to Hide Their Ages.

"There is more hair-dyeing going on here by both men and women than formerly," remarked a tonsorial artist to a New York reporter as the latter occupied the chair.

"What is the reason?"

"Well there are several reasons. One of them is the craze for employing only young men and women in business houses. Why, if a female employe shows gray hair in a dry good store on Grand street, Fourteenth street, or Twenty-Third street, it is equivalent to handing in her resignation; and the same applies to men, although they can hold on a little longer. Then again, dyeing has been brought to perfection now, so it is impossible for anyone except an expert to tell the difference between the artifical color and the natural.

"Barbers no longer manufacture their own dyes. They buy it from wholesale druggists, and we sell a lot of it to men who take it home and use it themselves. Sometimes a man is ashamed to acknowledge that he dyes, so he buys the stuff in a drug store and his wife fixes it when he comes home. No man or woman can make a good job of it that way, for you see the same attention can not be paid to the roots of the hair as when the dye is applied by a regular barber.

"Modern hair-dyeing has been reduced to an art. Some years ago mineral dyes, which were destructive to the hair, and which never gave a natural color, were freely used. They were well enough for stage purposes, but would not bear close inspection. Silver salts and lead preparations were their basis, and lead poisoning has been traced to their use. The dyes used at present are purely vegetable, and will imitate the natural color of the hair."

"Is it hurtful to dye the hair?"

"Certainly. Never dye your hair if you can avoid it. It dries up the hair and scalp and has a tendency to bring on baldness. To avoid this, as far as possible, we use a very weak dye on the head. It is known to the profession as 'coloring fluid.' The hair of the head takes the dye very readily, but the mustache does not, for which a much more powerful preparation has to be used. The hair of the ordinary mustache, except when a man has never shaved, is coarse and non-absorbent, and being more exposed than the hair of the head will bleach rapidly, unless the greatest care is taken in dyeing it.

"Some people, but men more especially, have to dye their hair quite early in life. All shades of blonde hair preserve their color the longest, but black hair becomes gray at a comparatively early age. On the other hand, blonde hair is apt to grow very fine and thin, and makes man a genuine bald head before he is 40. Sickness frequently turns the hair gray or causes it to fall out. The gray heads can be fixed up all right and the appearance of age completely taken away from a young man, but for the bald we can do nothing. Before the bald head the barbr stand powerless."—N. Y. News.

Heroism at Home.

How useless our lives seem to us sometimes! How we long for an opportunity to perform some great action! We become tired of the routine of home life, and imagine we would be far happier in other scenes. We forget that the world bestows no titles as noble as father, mother, sister or brother. In the sacred precincts of home we have many chances of heroism. The daily acts of self-denial for the good of a loved one, the gentle word of soothing for another's trouble, the care of sick, may all seem as nothing; yet who can tell the good they may accomplish? Our slightest word may have an influence over another for good or evil. We are daily sowing the seed which will bring forth some sort of a harvest. Well will it be for us if the harvest will be one we will be proud to garner. If some one in that dear home can look back in after years, and as he tenderly utters our name say, "Her words and example prepared me for a life of usefulness; to her I owe my present happiness," we may well say, "I have not lived in vain."—National Presbyterian.

DELANO DIARY.

—Episcopal services were held on Sunday afternoon at the Presbyterian church.

—Rev. J. R. Davies, of Watertown, attended sabbath school, in Delano on Sunday.

—Building, painting, house-cleaning and making garden are now the orders of the day.

—Frank Cramer has traded horses again so soon. He is getting to be some on swapping.

—The depot has been furnished with a mail cart and now the mail sacks can travel on wheels to and from the Post Office.

—Rev. Mr. Purdy of Minneapolis is to preach a memorial sermon for the G. A. R. boys at Rockford on Sunday, April 26th.

—John Bukoski is putting an addition of a couple of rooms to his residence, which will make it much more comfortable.

—Willis E. Johnson and family have returned to Delano, from Rockford, where they have been occupied in the public schools.

—Mrs. Abbie Borril is in Minneapolis where she had a surgical operation performed. It is hoped that her health will be better now.

—Farmer Charles Eppel says there was a white frost on Tuesday morning. Mr. Eppel has one of the finest places, buildings and all, in Wright County.

—Farmers are getting pretty well done with seeding. Trees are leaving out. grass is growing rapidly and summer is fast approaching, not withstanding the nights are quite cool yet.

—On Saturday last a man got into the quicksand on the river bank at the Lyle Ford with his horse and buggy, one shaft was broken. Had he read the Gazette of the day before he would have been on the lookout, likely.

—Wheat takes a tumble occasionally one day up a cent and next day down two. Some after the fashion of the boy going to school one step forward and slip back two. Have to turn around to make a permanent advancement.

—On Saturday night two young tourists landed in Delano on the 8:21 P M. train, hailing from Minneapolis and giving their destination as Seattle. They have been putting up at Young's Hotel for several days. Their ages are given as 12 and 16, though looking less than that.

—Arbor day is being observed at the school house, to-day. Planting trees, with appropriate exercises, help vary the monotony of school life, and at the same time is useful in decorating the grounds, and children enjoy and learn from such occasions many things useful to them in their future lives.

—On Monday morning the members of I. O. O. F's. of Lodge No. 62, Delano, were around rigged up in their best suits and regalia in hand, ready to take the train for Minneapolis, to attend the convention. A special from the west came about 9 A. M. and with their brethren accompanied by bands of music they left for Twincite returning at night; some the next day.

—Mr. Breed in deference to the wishes of his mother, Mrs. Julia E. Breed, lately deceased, purchased two lots for $90. at the auction on Friday, and donated them to the Episcopal church society the ladies of which had already collected a considerable sum for the purpose of purchasing the lots. A church is to be built, soon as funds enough are gathered together. That collected already to be used for this purpose.

—On Tuesday morning a stranger was around after the city council claiming to have hurt his leg or broke it by getting his foot fast in a hole in the sidewalk, on River Street and threatening to sue the village for the sum of $25000, damages. The council and street commissioner went to view the alledged dangerous place and reported that no hole of dimensions sufficient to permit of such an accident could be found in the place where the injury was claimed to have occurred, whereupon advice was given the stranger afosesaid, to move on, as his hurt did not appear serious and as there was no hole there sufficient to find fult with.

—William Lewis and family had quite a fright on Tuesday evening about their little grandchildren Borrell, who have been stopping with them while their mother is absent to Minneapolis. The two little fellows usually go to bed at about 8 P. M, but on account of the family visiting the west bound train, to see some friends on that evening they were not sent to bed, so when the train pulled out and the boys were looked for they could not be found. Mr. Lewis thinking it possible that they had got on the train and started for Morris where their grandfather Borrel lives, telegraphed the conductor if they were aboard the train to leave them off and have them returned by the early morning train. Just about the time the telegram was sent the boys were found up to Miss. Cheeley's room where they were calling on their teacher. Quite a sigh of relief went up from the family and friends when they were found safe and sound.

—County Attorney Cutting now has his card in the GAZETTE.

—The cemeteries should be cleaned up before May 30th, Memoral day.

—Sam Merriman of Minnetrista is shipping to Minneapolis a car load of baled hay, to-day.

—Read the notice of State Lands Sale to be held at Buffalo. You will find it in another column.

—Thanks to some one for a copy of the Globe Alminac. It comes handy many times for political and other information.

—The shower on Monday morning did considerable towards softening up the roads; though they are still quite rough in places.

—Peter Johnson says his tax on his farm of 80 acres, was too high at $19. but when it came to be put up to $34. he considers it something outrageous.

—Charley Wiese's taleless calf expired on Tuesday morning and Gus says he feels as if he had lost a fortune. "If he had only lived until after Fair Day."

—Quite a number of our citizens who have been holding a kind of squatters right to their lots purchased them on Friday last, at the auction, and now breathe more freely.

—We are in receipt of copy of the Mapleton Enterprise, one of a boom edition which shows that the editors are enterprising people, as are those who assisted in booming the town in this way.

—On Sunday last an election of officers in the M. E. S. S. was held, as follows: Chas. S. Hawker, Superintendent; Willis E. Johnson, assistant; Miss Emma Brothers, Secretary; Mrs. C. E. Green, Treasurer; Miss Effie Lyons, Librarian; Miss Eva Lewis, Organist; Miss Julia Cunningham, assistant.

—Vol. 1, No. 1, of the Alliance Sentinel has been placed on our table by a friend. It is an 8 column folio printed at Wyoming, Chisago county. Editor R. H. McGee business manager O. E. Hogue. The Alliance people are as much entitled to be heard as any body and the Sentinel promises to be awake.

—On Thursday, in Justice Bohn's court, Richard Schwartz was found guilty of assault and robbery of Mrs. Bertha Mehling, near Buffalo. County attorney Cutting and O. L. Billings for state, M. A. O'Hair for defendent. The prisoner was found guilty and placed under $500. bonds to appear at the June term of court, in default of which to be placed in the Sheriff's keeping.

—On Sunday last it is reported men and women found their way into a saloon and drinked, one women carrying in her arms a baby. A keg of beer loaded on the wagon is said to have been replaced by an empty keg, by some boys. We didn't see this but saw the man that did. Where is the use of license if such wholesale business as this is to occur on Sunday? This is supposed to be a free country. A law abiding country, and if saloons are licensed to sell six days in the week and close on Sunday. To sell to adults and not to minors both sides of the bargain should be good.

—Several fine farms can be bought in the vicinity of Delano. The owners being men who have spent the better part of their lives in husbandry now feel like moving into the village and taking life easy, for the remainder of their alloted time. These farms are improved and have been cleared of stumps and are, some of them, very desirable property. For gardening or dairy uses they would be valuable, owing to the railroad facilities for reaching the twin cities or the Minnetonka summer resorts at an early hour every morning. No better market could well be found than these for all the eggs, butter, milk, vegetables, lambs, pigs, chickens, etc., etc. Let some enterprising young men take these opportunities of gaining an honest and sure living and allow those who have served their time and cannot work more to come to town and have a rest.

—Rev. Charles Thayer, formerly pastor of the Presbyterian church at this place, occupied Mr. Campbell's place, on Sunday last, and with his old time vigor and earnestness delivered a forcible and impressive sermon to an attentive audience. When the minister feelingly alluded to his former work at this place, among the people, many of whom are present this morning, and spoke of the absent ones, the warm tears came to the eyes and coursed their way down over the cheeks of several whose relatives once took part in the service and whose voices are heard no more. The first lesson was the third chapter of Titus. The text Titus 3. part of the 14th verse, "And let ours also learn to maintain good works for necessary uses." The minister said: Work is the law of God. Work everywhere. Used to think of Heaven as a place of rest, of idleness, don't look at it so now, but as a place of tireless actively. Where people toil without geting weary. In every day work would engage in honorable occupation. If a farmer, would raise wheat for the rollers mills and the baker in preference to raising barley for the brewer, would raise potatoes for use rather than tobacco. Good employment, honest trade, necessary uses. A kind of necessity devolves on us to do good works. Good works are evdidence of piety. We receive members into the church from this evidence. Do good works that others may see them. Good works are necessary as discipline. Without faith all works are vain. We do not need to work, work because we ARE saved; not to BE saved. The audience was glad to meet its old pastor and to hear from his lips once again words of admonition and council, and advice as if from a kind father. The sermon was ended by a God bless you all.

—Mrs. Roehl is in the stock business, she has a heard of three, one cow and two calves, twins.

—A. Bucklin and O. J. Roberts, of Rockford, are lathing and plastering in Delano, this week.

—We are imformed by O. L. Billings our pension att'y. that Andrew Rieder has been granted a pension of $15.00 per month, begining Aug. 27. 1888.

—The Ladies Aid Society will hold a Eestival, at the City Hall, in Delano, on Thursday evening, May 7. Supper from 6 to 9 P. M. Come every body.

IRENE CHEELEY,
Secretary.

—Dr. and Mrs. Wright, of Howard Lake, are spending the week with friends here. The doctor has lately returned from a trip to Seattle. He claims to have gained 30 lbs in weight, but is not overly obeise now.

—SHERBURNE COUNTY TIMES is a new paper published at Clear Lake Sherburne County, the second one in the county and is a well gotten up paper, deserving of the support of a large circle of readers, which it doubtless will have in the near future.

Monday at the County Seat.

Monday was a busy day at the county seat of Wright, one of the finest counties in one of the best States in this, the grandest country on the globe. The county commissioners were in session, the auditor and assistant aiding them. Men were present from most parts of the county looking after the interests of their sections. Delegations, from Monticello, were there endeavoring to make arrangements for the county to assist in constructing a bridge, a much needed one across the Father of Waters that separates them from their neighbors in Sherburne county. Men from the metropolis, Delano, were there in numbers, some on private business, some for public matters, J. C. Hitz took a $5,000. Insurance risk on the court house. Mr. Oakley, of Buffalo, getting the remaing $15,000. that was placed. M. A. O'Hair and Peter Johnson were looking after the correcting of their assessments. I. Gutzwiller was taking notes for the Eagle, and the GAZETTE editor was over on Probate and other business. The Rockford delegation of Chas Bugbee and Melville Powers were looking after the Ruckoldt bridge, so was McKinley and Sherry of Franklin. E. F. Ziebarth was looking after his bridge. The commissioners were all present and passed a resolution to pay $1,700 if Rockford and Franklin would pay as much more to build a bridge costing not more than $3,400. G. A. Kemper chairman of Supervisors from Victor, was on hand, he says the Post Office at that place has been re-established. Many others were on hand. The county officials were busy. Treasurer McKnight and his assistant S. W. Junken, in behind the iron bars appear in comparative safety from attacks of the kind had by our late treasurer Mr. Bodin. Across the hall in the Register's office, Register of Deeds Podas, assistant William Cochran and S. O. Brewster attend to the wants of those interested in county records. Judge Alley with all his dignity presides over the Probate court and gives the desired information concerning probate business. Clerk of Court Steward still holds the fort. Says the decission of the matter between Mr. O'Leary and himself is still in the courts and he does not know just how long he will continue to serve the county in the position he now occupies. He has been absent for three weeks at the sick bed of his father-in-law, Mr. Lathrop in Austinburg, Ohio, but on the old gentleman's growing better, Mr. S. returned home. The burly form of Wright County's sheriff John C. Nugent was omnipresent. Messrs. Wendell, Mealy, Crandall, Riggs, and Chadderdon of Waverly, and other prominent democrats were at Buffalo. Senator Eaton is home from his winter's work and complains that enough was not done in the way of law making or correcting, this session. Says his famous bill concerning special Legislation has become a law. So you must all be posted concerning it and know how to vote when the amendment to the constitution for which it calls, comes before you for your ratification or rejection.

Professional Nurse.

One who is thoroughly competetent, who is neat tidy and quiet, whose very touch is medicine, who knows what to do, and when to do it is a blessing indeed, but so few there are who fully understand, know, and are able to use the requirements. The endorsements of a medicine by such a person should carry weight. They have practical experience, and opportunities of seeing and noting the effect better really than the Phyician in charge, as they are with the patient day and night and every change and symptom is noted and watched.

I have myself used and in my profession as nurse administered your Red Clover Remedies, and that it does all and more than you say for it. I cheerfully recommend it for troubles of Stomach, Liver or Bowels, and have advised my friends to use it, which has been done and in every case with the very best results, and all speak of Loose's Extract Red Clover in the highest terms.

County.

The judge has rendered a decision in the matter of Clerk of Court. O. J. Stewart will continue to hold the office until January, next. Nobody seems to know for sure whether or not, Mr. John C. O'Leary will then be allowed to have it, or whether a new election or an appointment will be had.

State of Minnesota ex rel., John C. O'Leary, relator, vs. Oliver J. Steward, respondent. Order discharged. GILFILLAN, C. J.

Syllabus—The terms of office of such clerks of the district court as, commencing in January, 1884, would terminate in January, 1888 were not affected by the amendments of the constitution adopted in 1883, but they continued to January, 1888, and the succeeding terms commenced at that time. Nor were such terms affected by chapter 30, section 3, Laws of 1888.—Globe.

Flannigan, Kingsley and Mattion appointed to meet at house of S. E. Anderson, in Marysville, on May 11, 1891, at 12 M. to examine proposed county road in Middleville and Marysville, petition S. E. Anderson and others.

County Attorney authorized to modify insurance on court house and to have $2,000. placed on furniture and other contents of court house.

The Insurance Policy issued by Security Insurance Company of New Haven, Conn., declined as never applied for.

Resolved:—That this board will allow no bills of costs in any criminal cases until the justice has reported the same to the county attorney on blanks furnished by him.

The claim of Dr. P. O'Hair professional services in diptheria cases, rejected as not a county charge in opinion of county attorney.

Claim of W. J. Ellis laid over.

The usual number of bills were allowed. Cut down or rejected

"THE DEMON RUM."

[Written by a girl of Fourteen.]

Boys, it is now that ye need warning—
Warning while ye're pure and young.
Boys, if ye would meet no danger.
Never touch the Demon Rum.

It will lead ye to danger,
Boys, to it, oh, be a stranger!
Heed the warning that I give ye;
Never touch the Demon Rum.

Boys at first may think it is fun,
Till they're a slave to the Demon Rum;
Then they will care not for friends or home;
Nothing for them but the Demon Rum.

Boys, in the world wherever ye go;
Drunkards are men that ye know;
Homes once so happy and bright;
Now are as dark as the darkest of nights.

Think of the men on the gallows hung;
Think of the homes broken, oh! so soon;
All is caused by the one great ruin,
All is caused by the Demon Rum.
—Mary Jane Coyne.

GROVER CLEVELAND recently celebrated his 54th birth day. He is in the very prime of life.

EX-GOV. A. R. MCGILL, is about to be appointed Post master of the Capital City, St. Paul. He will make a good officer.

THE Alliance people are on a still hunt for votes, and unless old parties are careful, there will be quite a number found.

AT the present time the only man that appears to have a pretty sure thing of a nomination and election to the high honor of President of the United States in 1892 is Grover Cleveland.

THE death sentences of Clifton Holden, of Redwood county and of Wm Lentz, of Blue Earth county have been commuted by Govenor Merrimam to imprisonment for life.

THE New Orleans lynchers of the Mafia members were not indicted by the Grand Jury. It was claimed to be a general uprising of the people. Such things ought not to happen in civilized countries.

REV. ROBERT FORBES, of St. Paul has resigned his position as Presiding Elder of the St. Paul district and his place has been filled by appointment by Bishop Fitzgerald, of Rev. William McKinley, of Hamline.

P. H. KELLY, one of Minnesota's democrats lately returned from a trip to the Hot Springs, Arkansas. He is reported as having given out as his opinion that Hill could not be nominated, but thinks he might develope strength enough to defeat Cleveland.

REPUBLICANS are arguing that free sugar is aiding in raising the price of wheat and other grains in this country, by making a market for our breadstuffs. If this is so why not place woolens on the free lists so we can dress up, why not put every thing on the free list and histe our farm products up?

AT the last session the Legislature passed a bill to arrange for raising the stage of water in Lake Minnetonka but from provisions in the bill unless a compromise can be effected with the mill owners on the outlet the committee will be obliged to wait for another session of our bi-annual legislature.

CHIEF JUSTICE FULLER is spoken of as a possible candidate for President if Cleveland has any difficulty in receiving the nomination. He, it is thought would carry Indiana, Illinois and possibly other western states, while being an old fashioned Maine Democrat would strengthen his chances in the Yankee land.

MINNEAPOLIS is expecting the great National Republican Convention in June, 1892. Most of the presidential aspirants on that side of the fence, politically speaking, are reported as pleased with the prospect of having the convention held in the northwest. Minneapolis would likely do as well as any other city for the great event.

UNDER Cleveland's administration the cry was what shall we do to stop the surplus piling up in the Treasury? Have free trade and allow the money to follow natural channels. Now how different the cry, what shall we do for money to pay the 4½ per cents, due in September? How shall we raise money to pay running expenses, rapidly growing bigger and bigger?

REV. DR. GEO. W. BOTHWELL, of Brooklyn, met a strange and painful death recently. He drew the cork from a bottle of medicine and placed it in his mouth and while laughing the cork slipped down his windpipe causing, after days of suffering, death. The autopsy revealed the fact that the cork was at the lower end of the left bronchus. No surgery could save him is the report.

P. H. RAHILLY, who withdrew from the Alliance ticket, last fall and who was supposed to be a Democrat, was recommended, according to THE DAILY NEWS, by Gov. Merriam, to the office of Indian Inspector something after this fashion. "He is an Irishman very widely known in our state, and whose influence redounded to the benefit of the Republican party during the last campaign." The letter, it is claimed was written, Feby 23d, 1891. The letter being sent or delievered to the Secretary by Bishop Ireland.

REPUBLICAN editors are doing all in their power to make the people believe that the McKinley bill is all right. Scarcely an issue of their papers but the bill is lauded and praised as one of the best. They do not seem very consistent about it though. One will tell of the great blessing of cheap sugar claiming that taking off the tariff made it cheap. Another will inform you that never before were woolen's so cheap as now, and all because the tariff was raised up higher. Tin we are told is getting cheaper because the tariff tax was made higher. How can taking tariff OFF of sugar reduce the price while putting tariff ON woolens and tin reduce prices. The tax off of sugar of course all admit cheapens the article and all must admit it would do the same for woolens and tin. Whereas on the latter articles the cheapness now appearing in the market is only the result of improvements in the methods of manufacturing. We are told that in manufacturing tin cans instead of taking a sheet of tin and cutting out the can thereby wasting a considerable of the material, that cans are now made from the sheets of iron and then tinned over afterwards at a saving of the more precious metal, and the same papers that give us this bit of information claim that the raising of the tariff did it. On the same principle if McKinley or some one else would raise the tax on tin another notch they might succeed in making the ingenious Yankee do without tin at all, and oblige him to use wood, paper or some other material instead of tin cans, or like the Irishman who ate up his dinner in the morning before going to work to save carrying it, they may be obliged to eat their food before it is canned to save tin.

Reciprocity for the Manufacturer.

Reciprocity seems to be in the interest of the manufacturer after all. In the 1888 campaign James G. Blaine was around telling the people that the tariff question would be settled at that election for, at least, this generation. The people voted and a majority of the popular vote said tariff reform, or as the republicans choose to term it "free trade." The astute polititian now accepts the verdict, though in opposition to McKinley and the balance of the party, and does what he can to conciliate the manufacturers by adopting a free trade policy with several countries where they have enough to eat without troubling us a great deal, Brazil for instance ought to have sufficient country on which to keep her inhabitants. From them we can get, through reciprocity, hides, coffee and sugar. The former long on the free list; the latter placed there by the McKinley bill. The choice of countries with which we are to be allowed to have free trade is very carefully made and such as have no manufactories, or scarcely any, are selected, so that manufactured articles as clothes, woolens, tin ware and so on can not be shipped here, for our farmers to buy. While coffee and hides which have been on the free list for years continue to come Diamonds have only paid 10 per cent and they are one of Brazil's exports, so if they are permitted to come free this will not materially benefit the average Minnesota farmer. Such countries as are crowded, and have no means of raising food for home production, but must rely on manufacturing for a living are asked to pay us tariff to introduce their wares into our country where they would willingly exchange them for our wheat, oats, corn, meat and other products.

POISONED BY VERMIFUGE.

An Arkansas Doctor's Prescription Endangers His Life,

LITTLE ROCK, May 5.—Two small children of Col. Thomas Tanner, a wealthy planter at Rison, Ark., were fatally poisoned last night by taking vermifuge, prescribed by Dr. Nevins. The relatives of the children are greatly excited over their deaths, and the life of the doctor is threatened.

If patients in Arkansas follow directions like some do in Minnesota, take twice as much medicine as prescribed beside using all the "home remedies" and "patent medicines" to be got hold of it would not be much wonder they died. This newspaper report lays all on the doctor, which in some cases may do but frequently does the medical man a very great injustice. Vermifuges generally, should be carefully handled.

Will Admit Eatables Free.

WASHINGTON, May 5.—By a decree of the President of the United States of Venezuela, indian corn, rice, beans and other eatables are allowed to enter free from duty in all ports of the Republic until further orders.

CORRESPONDENCE

Annandale Annals.

Some of our (otherwise) good people went out spearing fish on Pleasant Lake, last Friday night at a venture, and as murder will out. One of the party a professional gentleman, in his eagerness to assist in hauling in a big turtle tumbled overboard into the water and not being an expert swimmer his struggles for life afforded good amusement for the rest of the party. This was too good to keep, so the whole episode leaked out the next day and some one conceived the idea of having the leaders of the gang arrested on a bogus warrant, accordingly "Frank E. Higgins, pastor of the M. E. Church, Charles M. King, attorney at law, Wilbur W. Towle, Justice of the Peace and A. J. Harris Ex-Justice of the Peace were summored to appear forthwith at forthwith o'clock, Saturday afternoon, at Esquire McLane's office." The delinquents all put in an appearance protesting their innocence, denying having caught any fish, which was, doubtless, true, except the professor who declared that the only thing he caught was a preacher and if that was a crime he was ready to put up his money but the rest of the crowd denied having had any hand in catching the preacher and would not pay but would "fight it." The law had not been published and it was no law till it had been published. The Justice's office was crowded with eager spectators, all anxious to learn the outcome of the trial of such an array of professional talent. All this occurred pending the Justice's hour to come in. Finally the lawyer, hoping there might be some legal informality in the warrant, asked to see it. He ran his professional eye over the paper; his countenance assumed a sheepish hue and he exclaimed, "boys we are sold, this is a bogus warrant McLane never signed it and that is the reason he is not here." The fun of the thing was to see the crowd sneak off. The editor of the Post being the first to leave, Mike, the constable had nothing to say but he went, Justice Towle has been kicking himself ever since. The preacher started for Minneapolis, Monday morning. King-well, he will get out of it some way.

Charles Chevalier, of French Lake, in trying to stop a runaway team one day, last week was quite seriously injured and was brought to Dr. Ridgway for treatment.

Charles A. Matheu is about opening up a Furniture department in connection with his other business.

Donald McKenzie, of Silver Creek was in town Monday with a pair of fine Percheron stallion colts. It looked a little precarious for a person of Mr. McKenzies years to be driving so spirited a team but he appeared perfectly at ease.

John B. Daily, our meat market man, shipped three car loads of cattle from this station, last Monday and one from South Haven.

ROCKFORD RIPPLES.

Weather fine. Seeding about completed.

Mrs. S. S. Ball and Miss White called upon Mrs. W. L. Haggerty

Forest Gent is just getting over a hard tustle with the mumps.

Johnny Guptil and Johnathan Irving started for Helena, Mont., Tuesday. "Success boys," but we don't think Johnny G. can stay away very long.

Arbor day was observed by planting trees and Joe Thomas ain't got through yet.

Of those, who took the Soo train for the city, Wednesday, were Frank Johnson and Elder Warner.

Frank Warner has been out in the country for a week helping his father put in his crop.

Mr. Nathan Warner has not recovered from the effects of the grippe yet, but is gaining slowly.

Mrs. P. H. Darrow accompanied by her daughter, Mrs. C. Conzet, visited in Buffalo, for a few days, this week.

INDEPENDENCE INDICTMENTS.

To day, May 5th, is the anniversary of the battle of Fort Meigs, Western Ohio, in the war of 1812. The Americans were defeated and sustained a heavy loss.

Has frozen for two nights past, but not enough to do any damage. Everything needs a warm shower of rain. The roads are getting quite dry but very rough. Farmers are all through seeding, and will soon be putting in potatoes and corn.

Some say money is scarce. Thought the McKinley bill would make times good.

The Governor of Georgia, sat down on J. Gould about right, hope more of the governors will have pluck enough to do the same thing. Men worship, we do not believe in, but then Mr. Gould is a millionaire and supports a diamond pin big as a quart cup and who would not bow at the knee of Baal. But the governor of Georgia, refused to attend the reception given Mr. Gould, at Atlanta.

We hoped after the Legislature adjourned times would improve. It must be the McKinley bill is in need of some repairs or things would go a little better.

News in this neck of the woods is not very plenty most every body has something to do just now and when people have plenty business of their own they do not find out much about their neighbors.

The people seem to be in better health than they were two months ago, suppose spring and sunshine had something to do with it.

WATERTOWN WAYS.

Next Monday is our Monthly fair day.

Mr. Cramer, of Delano, was in Watertown on business last Saturday.

Next Saturday evening there will be a special school meeting to consider the advisability of erecting a new school house in Watertown or adding on a room to the present building.

Hon. J. W. Craven and wife came down from Norwood last Sunday to attend Mr. Boyls funeral.

Mr. C. Eppel and family were visitors from Delano, last Sunday, they came to see their daughter Mrs. W. F. Kohler.

Rev. Father Lee, of Darwin, has been visiting with Father Cawley this week a few days.

Mr. W. E. Johnson and sister, of Delano, were visiting with Rev. J. R. Davies family last Sunday.

Mrs. V. Heck went to Minneapolis last Saturday and returned on Monday accompanied by her daughter Mrs. Peter Sexton and her little child who will spend some time visiting with her parents.

Mr. J. O. Krause of St. Paul one of Watertown's old citizens was here on a business trip last Monday and Tuesday.

Mr. Geo. Miller and W. St. John drove down to Minneapolis last Wednesday.

We wonder why Delano's young men come to Watertown an Sunday and get drunk? Its poor policy gentlemen.

Our Street commissioner Mr. L. C. St John has a large crew of men now at work grading the streets of our village. Watertown will put on a different appearance before the summer is over.

Died, on Friday last of pneumonia Mr. Boyl one of Holliwood's oldest residents. Mr. Boyl was only sick three or four days. He was taken very suddenly with double pneumonia Tuesday evening, and died on Friday morning. He was a great sufferer during his illness. His funeral took place from the Catholic church on Sunday Rev. Father Cawley officiating.

On Next Friday evening there will be a sociable held at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. C. G. Halgren. We think the mere announcement of the sociable at Mr. Halgren's will be sufficient to draw a large crowd as every one knows they will have a good time there from past experience.

Republican Frenzy.

The Bankers and Stock Gamblers of the country are thoroughly alarmed at the prospect that the labor element may become so far combined as to make themselves heard in the Halls of Legislation. Witness the frantic efforts of the republican party, thus early, in anticipation of the next Presidential campaign. It is all instigated and backed by the bankers and gamblers (dignifying themselves with the name speculators) They but too plainly see "the hand writing on the well." They but too well know that all legislation has been in the interest of the Shylocks and against labor, for a long time. Having been educated into the belief that money is everything and human muscle nothing they cannot comprehened the idea that a man can be a man unless he is backed up with a given amount of money, no matter how he came by it. Hence the thought that men of comparatively small means are liable to come to the front, is horrible to them. Money has so long ruled the world that pretty good men stand abashed before it.

Here in Minnesota the republican press takes delight in ridiculing every measure proposed or sustained by the farmer, treating their utterances and views with levity and, virtually, scoffing at the idea that a farmer could entertain any sensible opinions upon the economic or financial problems that agitate the world. That bankers and gamblers, too many of them, possess rare financial talent is evidenced by the records of our courts and prisons and by the liberal contributions we have made, of that class of our citizens, to the census reports of our neighbors in Canada.

It is only the banker that knows just how much interest the farmer ought to pay; and that is all that can possibly be squeezed out of him.

Bankers tell us that "capital is timid" and that unless we approach it with hat in hand, and with bated breath, beg its pardon; it will all leave the state and we shall all go to pot together. What an idea: "that capital is timid." Who ever saw a timid Bank President? The question of withdrawal of capital from the state is an interesting one and the querry is how can it be done? It is salted in mortgages and for want of the money. Land can be taken but can't be carried out of the state; it is here to stay. It may be shifted from one to another but is here all the same so long as interest is allowed for use of money.

RURAL SCHOOLS.

BY HANS JENSEN WEIN.

The public school of to-day is very different from that of a hundred years ago, especially in the city. The educational systems and institutions of the present are the results of long years of growth and advancement. They have passed through many changes before reaching the present state of efficiency and completeness, although more perfect than those of any preceding age still the educational systems of to day have not reached their highest degree of efficiency, and cannot be considered finished products. In obedience to the great law of progress, they must continue their work of adoptation and improvement.

The time has come when the people begin to see that the country schools are defective, inadequate and incompetent for the work that might and should be expected of them. At present the urban school system is essentually complete from the primary schools to the university, and is growing into fuller competency year by year. But country schools are and have been in a state of incompleteness; they are and always have been only crude imitations of the city schools and very poor at that.

Schools and school work should be shaped with reference to the needs and conditions of those for whose benefit they were designed. The things which pupils see and feel and in which they are interested, should enter into their studies to vitalize them and in turn, that which they see and do, to increase their usefulness. If the school system shall ever reach the ideal standard and do the work which may reasonably be demanded of it there is great necessity of having an urban side and a rural side. The latter lacks greatly in adoption to rural conditions. The system of schools for the country should be complete in its own kind from the district school to the graduate course of agricultural college. The people of our state have become aware of the necessity of agricultural education and the belief that the agriculturist need not be well educated is fast vanishing. They begin to realize their situation and comprehend that it will not do to depend altogether on good luck and main strength for success in their all important occupation. They see that men educated for their various trades are generally more successful in their work than those without this necessary preparation, they see the struggles and competitions going on around them in every department of active life, which admonishes them to be skillful and masterly in their work. And is it not right for the people to demand the best education possible? We are justly proud of our state, institutions and for the educational advantages which the farmers' sons now enjoy, particularly from this school. Through a proper appreciation of its value it has attracted a few of the large number of farmers' sons in this state who desire such a thorough and practicial training as is here given.

We need, however, to begin at the corner stone, viz., the rural school. It is not just that the thousands of farmers' sons and daughters should be compelled to follow a course of study which has no direct bearing upon their coming lives, during the early training of the average school boy and girl, they scarcely hear or see in their daily recitations any illustrations of the occupation which nine out of every ten are to pursue—agriculture. Instead of being taught to love and appreciate the farm, they are taught to look with eversion on the most noble and elevated calling on earth, they are urged to go forward aiming for such a profession as that of doctor, lawyer, minister, banker or some position where their names may appear in the columns of the daily newspaper while nothing is said about agriculture except that it is a poorly paying business, with hard work, no pleasure, etc., such teachings are discouraging to the ambitious country youth and he is not long in making up his mind to try his fortune in the city. The time is approaching when this will all be changed but not before the children come to appreciations of farm life and its advantages.

The farmers' children live amidst the beauties of nature. In the summer they see the earth covered with verdure and gemmed with flowers; they see the golden fields of wheat spread out before them, and hear the melodious songs of our native birds, all of these things are interesting to the young mind, yet nothing is taught in our country schools which would direct their thoughts to investigation, and stimulate a love for country life and give skill in rural pursuits.

The text books for our country schools are not what they should be. This is one of the most important factors which we must consider in order to improve our schools. Books are the food for the mind and in order to accomplish what they should, they must be adopted to the kind of school in which they are to be used. The readers should contain descriptions and illustrations taken from farm life, as descriptions of injurious insects that infest our plants, as the cut-worm, chinch bug, locust, and many others that would be met with in farm life. The examples in arithmetic should be practicial and taken from the transactions of the farmer. The geographies should pay special attention to our state, its climate, character, the soils, and its natural advantages. The one now in common use in this state is fairly well adopted and in fact is the best yet published. The study of botany should be introduced in our rural schools in an elementary and practical form, giving special attention to the flora of Minnesota and to how plants grow.

This improvement of our country school is absolutely necessary and it is time for some action to be taken in this line, and if taken it will not only benefit the agriculturists but the whole state as well for wherever agriculture is prosperous all the people are prosperous. If the efforts which are now made to separate the agricultural school from the University were directed in raising the country schools to a higher standard, and instead of working for separation which means destruction to this school would work for uplifting and bettering it, the time would soon come when the state of Minnesota would have one of the best, if not the best system of education for the farmers.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

Washington, D. C., May 1, 1891.

Mr. Blaine will, I am informed, shortly remove himself from the danger of being struck by Presidential lightning by writing a letter declining to allow his name to be considered in connection with the nomination next year, and announcing his fealty to Mr. Harrison and his desire to see him nominated. But there is another danger that he either lacks the courage or inclination to remove himself from, and which may prove as disastrous to him as the anchors he once cast to windward by the advice of "burn this letter" Fisher.

This danger arises from his desire to protect the financial interests of his friend, Stephen B. Elkins, who is a leading member of the syndicate that now has the government sealing privilege in Behring sea. But for this desire all the trouble might have been avoided for the coming season in Alaskan waters, as it is known that the British minister was ready to pledge his government to stop all British vessels from capturing seals for one year if Mr. Blaine would make the same pledge for American vessels. Last year, before Elkins became interested in the sealing industry, that was what Mr. Blaine was asking for, but now he doesn't wish to stop the sealing, because his friend hopes this season to take an enormous number--a courageous Treasury agent blocked the game last season by stopping the catch, but a more accommodating agent in the person of J. Stanley Brown, once the private secretary of President Garfield, and now the husband of Mollie Garfield, has been selected for duty with the sealers this season, and Mr. Elkins and his partners anticipate no trouble in taking all the seals they can catch, if Mr. Blaine can only maintain the status quo until the fall.

Secretary Foster appears to be getting what the boys call "rattled" over the condition of the Treasury--To quiet the alarm created by the announcement that he intended to extend the out-standing 4½ per cent bonds at 2 per cent instead of redeeming them when they mature September the first, next, he had his Director of the Mint furnish a statement to the press which made it appear that the enormous sum of $258.000.000 was available to pay any debts or appropriations. This was so absurd that Mr. Foster had himself interviewed in order that he might say that he did not altogether endorse that statement. He then proceeds to figure out an available cash surplus of $70.000.000 and to naively inform the country that he also considers the $100.000.000 in gold, which has always been regarded as a reserve held against the $350.000.000, greenbacks in circulation, to be available cash and that he will not hesitate to use it if it comes to a pinch. Notwithstanding these statements the daily balance sheet of the Treasury for yesterday shows a surplus of less than $12.000.000.

The evident Harrison stampeed which has set in among the big republicans is exciting the curiosity of political observers. Even Quay, Clarkson and Dudley have announced their allegiance to "Little Benny", and their determination to see him nominated. The only reason that I can see for it is that no other man wants the dubious honor of leading the republican forlorn hope next year.

Representative McMillin, of Tennessee, who is a candidate for Speaker of the House, and several of his friends held a conference this week. Mr. McMillin, has been traveling in the Eastern States and the presumption is that he has been doing a little quiet missionary work for himself. He declines to talk about his prospects further than to say that he is in the fight until the Speaker is elected.

"Called Back" is now applicable to ex-Senator Blair who the Chinese Emperor declines to receive as U. S. Minister. Some other diplomatic position is to be found for Mr. Blair who has been ordered to report to the Department of State.

The joint committee of Senate and House that has been trying to locate the waste of money in the printing and distribution of public documents has adjourned until June. Its members have found out enough to make it certain that from 15 to 25 per cent of the money now paid out may easily be saved. The same thing could be done in every branch of the Government if the attempt was made by men unhampered and in earnest.

The report of the investigation made into the antecedents of the Italians lynched at New Orleans, by the U. S. District Attorney, of that place has been received by the Attorney-General and turned over to Mr. Blaine who will decide whether it shall be made public.

$3000 A YEAR! I undertake to briefly teach any fairly intelligent person of either sex, who can read and write, and who, after instruction, will work industriously, how to earn Three Thousand Dollars a Year in the town localities, where they live. I will also furnish the situation or employment at which you can earn that amount. No money for me unless successful as above. Easily and quickly learned. I desire but one worker from each district or county. I have already taught and provided with employment a large number, who are making over $3000 a year each. It is NEW and SOLID. The following advertisement recently appeared in a German newspaper: "Wanted, by a lady of quality, for adequate remuneration, a few well-behaved and respectably dressed children to amuse a cat in delicate health two or three hours a day."

AN idea of the enormous amount of type used in the government printing office may be gained when it is stated that the public printer has asked for bids for 15,000 pounds of English, 5,000 pounds of pica, 75,000 pounds of long primer, 6,000 pounds of brevier and 48,000 pounds of nonpareil—203,000 pounds, or about nine carloads.

STATISTICS are said to show that from 1807 to 1881 642,000 Russians were exiled to Siberia—100,000 at their own instance, in order that they might accompany condemned friends. With the advance of the century the practice of banishment to Siberia has assumed increasing proportions. In 1807-'11 the number of exiles was 10,175; in 1857-'61, 36,831; in 1877-'89, 86,386.

FRANCE and Russia are carrying on a desperate flirtation and so ostensibly preparing for future military union that they may provoke some kind of retaliatory measures from those who are obviously threatened. It appears that the military systems of the two countries are to be so modified and harmonized that their respective armies, if called upon to do so, may act together with the least possible friction.

THE longest bridge in the world is the Lion bridge near Sangang, in China. It extends five and a quarter miles over an area of the Yellow sea and is supported by three hundred huge stone arches. The roadway is seventy feet above the water and is inclosed in an iron network. A marble lion twenty-one feet long rests on the crown of every pillar. The bridge was built at the command of Emperor Kieng Long, who abdicated in 1796 on account of old age.

IT has just been discovered that the delicious looking "blood" orange which blinks so bewitchingly at the small boy from the stands of the Italian man is a delusion and a snare. There is no "blood" orange, speaking from the standpoint of the naturalist. All globules of luscious fruit which assume this alluring hue are doctored by means of hypodermic injections of analine and other poisonous or deleterious dyes. Hence the "blood" orange is a luxury to be let severely alone.

SOME idea of the size of the milliner bills which the husbands and fathers of this country are called upon to pay may be had from estimates made by the government that the amount of money which must be refunded by Uncle Sam on account of his having levied excessive duties on hat trimmings will aggregate between $20,000,000 and $30,000,000. This sum represents only the difference between the legitimate duty on hat trimmings and that on ribbons during the period covered by the claims of the importers. It indicates that the female form divine requires a good deal of trimming.

THE census office has issued a statement of the acreage and yield of tobacco for the year 1889, showing an increase over the last census of 55,223 acres and 19,052,440 pounds. The amount produced in Kentucky has increased over 54,000,000 pounds, and there has also been a substantial increase in North Carolina, Tennessee, Ohio, New York and Wisconsin. On the other hand, there has been a more or less serious falling off in Virginia, Maryland, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania and Missouri. The figures are liable to slight modification in the final revision, yet to be made.

IN court at Wheeling, W. Va., Judge Jackson met with a peculiar case of dense ignorance. James Pennington pleaded guilty of selling liquor without a license and declared that he did not know he required a license. "Did you ever hear of the United States?" asked the court. "Yes, but only in an indirect way," the prisoner replied. "I live in Brayton county, and did not think the United States had any control over its affairs. The county court makes the laws there." The judge fined him $100 with ten months in jail, and told the clerk to furnish him with a copy of the constitution to study.

Spanish Reciprocity.

MADRID, May 6.—The draft of the treaty of commerce between Spain and the United States was sent to the Spanish minister at Washington last week with instructions to sign it immediately. It is expected the necessary signatures will be appended by the end of this week. Although the Spanish government maintains the utmost reserve in regard to the treaty, even refusing to communicate it to the Cuban deputies, information from a reliable source confirms the report that coal, petroleum, machinery and fats will be admitted free into Cuba and Porto Rico and the present duty on flour will be reduced one-half, in exchange for the free admission into the United States of sugar, coffee and cocoa. The deputies from Castile continue to oppose the treaty on the ground that it will render it impossible for Spanish flour to compete with American flour in the Spanish Antiles; but they cannot demand a vote upon the treaty, as the government has power to sign it without obtaining special authority from the chambers.

NONE INDICTED.

The Lynchers of the Mafia at New Orleans Go Scot Free—Report of the Special Grand Jury—Bills Returned Against Several Jury Bribers.

NEW ORLEANS, May 6.—After six weeks' investigation, the grand jury completed its labors in the Hennessy case and the killing of Italians by the parish prison by returning six indictments for attempted bribery and presenting a report of its investigations. The men indicted are Thomas McCrystol and John Cooney, with D. C. O'Malley and Bernard Glandi, Charles Granger and Bernard Armant.

The grand jury failed to return indictments against any one of the participants in the killing of the prisoners who had been acquitted of the charge of murdering Chief Hennessy, explaining its action by saying that the uprising was spontaneous; that from 6,000 to 8,000 persons took part in the affair, which was of such a magnitude that it was difficult to fix the guilt. Nine of the eleven who were killed in the parish prison are clearly shown to have renounced their allegiance to any foreign power.

The jury first refers to the investigation into the Hennessy assassination. It characterizes the verdict of the petit jury as startling, amazing, a bitter disappointment, shocking to the opinion and provoking the repeated accusation that some of the jury had been unfaithful to their high office. It terms the case as made by the state a strong one in every respect, and refers to the rumors that the jury was tampered with.

Each one of the jurors, the report says, was summoned and made a statement, and the report refers further to the surprising scenes which took place in the petit jury room. The actions of the petit jury are analyzed and it says that talesmen were approached prior to the trial and the vile work of attempting to bribe carried on even in the court room. One favorite expression made to talesmen was: "Big money might be made by going on the jury and doing right," and there is no possible doubt but that such attempts were made by various parties in the service of the defense; entertained by some of the talesmen and scornfully rejected by others. Talesmen who had been approached refused to tell what they knew, and gave the impression that they had been silenced.

The grand jury learned that the list of 500 talesmen in the Hennessy case was in the office of O'Malley & Adams at 11 o'clock Sunday morning, February 22, 1891, though the trial judge issued special orders on Saturday evening that the list was not to be made public or given to the counsel of either side until Monday morning. It is not shown by whose hands the lists were secured, but enough is known to confirm the past secret and powerful influence of the so-called private detective agency and Counsel Adams to handle the machinery of the court.

Great and small pieces of evidence show that the lists of names were tampered with when drawn from the jury wheel and before they reached the jury box in the court. O'Malley was put in possession of the lists almost immediately and before they reached the district attorney.

The existence of the Mafia is determined by evidence, says the report. It closes thus:

"The condition of affairs in this community as to certain violators of the law had reached such a stage that the law itself was well nigh powerless to deal with them, so far-reaching was their power and influence in criminal cases. Good citizens were profoundly impressed by the repeated and signal failure of justice. The arts of the perjurer and briber seemed to dominate in the courts, paralyzing and rendering powerless the ends of justice. Certainly this was a desperate situation, the public meeting, general and spontaneous in its character as truly indicating an uprising of the masses. We doubt if any power at the command of the authorities would have been sufficient to overcome its intentions.

"Evidence is before us from official sources that eleven persons were killed in the attack on the parish prison. In the careful examination as to the citizenship of these men we find that eight of them were beyond question American citizens and another had declared his intention in this court, which act carries with it the renunciation of allegiance to his native country. It is a noteworthy fact in connection with the uprising that no injury whatever was done to either person or property beyond the one act which seemed to have been the object of the assembling at the parish prison.

"We have referred to the large number of citizens participating in the demonstration, estimated by judges at from 6,000 to 8,000, regarded as a spontaneous uprising of the people. The magnitude of this affair makes it a difficult task to fix the guilt upon any number of participants, in fact the act seemed to involve the entire people of the parish and city of New Orleans, so profuse is their sympathy and extended their connection with the affair. In view of these considerations the thorough examination of the subject has failed to disclose the necessary facts to justify the grand jury in presenting indictments."

LOST ON LAKE SUPERIOR.

The Schooner Atlanta Founders Off Whitefish Point and Three of Her Crew Perish.

SAGINAW, Mich., May 6.—The schooner Atlanta, owned by C. E. Eastman and W. W. Steele, of Saginaw, and Charles E. Jennison, of Bay City, foundered about 20 miles north of Whitefish Point on Lake Superior Monday evening. After the schooner foundered the crew of five took to the yawl boat, which the heavy breakers capsized and all of them, with two exceptions, were drowned. The Whitefish Point life-saving crew put forth every effort and worked heroically, but the heavy seas running prevented them from saving the men.

The Knights Will Take Part.

CINCINNATI, May 6.—Much surprise is caused by the announcement that the Knights of Labor in this state has ordered 400 delegates to attend the third party convention the week after next, and that the order had done likewise in many other states. Over 2,000 delegates, it is now claimed, will attend.

NIPPED THE BUDS.

Frost Does Great Damage to the Fruit Trees in Michigan, Iowa, Indiana and Wisconsin.

WASHINGTON, May 6.—Reports received from all over the country indicate the coldest weather and heaviest frosts that have been experienced for years thus late in the season. The signal office furnishes the following special bulletin:

"Unusually cold weather prevailed Tuesday morning throughout the entire northern portion of the country east of the Missouri and Mississippi rivers, the line of freezing temperature extending from southern Maine westward through western New York and northern Ohio, and including the states of Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota and North Dakota. In southeastern Michigan the temperature was the lowest on record for this season of the year, the minimum at Detroit being 28 degrees, or 1 degree lower than previously observed during the first decade of May. Severe frosts occurred throughout these regions, probably causing considerable injury to fruit and early vegetation."

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., May 6.—A heavy frost Monday night did much damage to peaches, plums, currants and small fruits, and reports from Grand Haven, Holland and other points are of an unfavorable nature to fruit prospects. In this city the temperature dropped several degrees below freezing. Ice formed to the thickness of a quarter of an inch. Flower beds around town are ruined, and early vegetables in the rural districts, except in high places, are totally wrecked. The damage to fruit trees is especially severe in the southern part of the county, in Allegan county and farther south, where the bud have blossomed. North of here, where buds are not so far developed, the damage is comparatively slight. Along the lake shore there has been some damage, but how severe has not been fully determined. The frost is the severest in years for so late in the season and will materially affect the crop.

BENTON HARBOR, Mich., May 6.—A heavy frost did considerable damage to fruit in this locality Tuesday morning. Ice formed in some places a quarter of an inch thick. Strawberries and grapes have been severely injured and other fruits were badly nipped. It is thought the peaches are all right.

KALAMAZOO, Mich., May 6.—There has been severe frosts in the country surrounding Kalamazoo for several nights. Ice has formed on ponds and small streams and budding fruit trees are badly damaged. It is believed that the peach belt is all right.

EAST TAWAS, Mich., May 6.—Frosts Sunday and Monday night in the adjacent fruit country damaged the trees, which are just blossoming out.

HOLLAND, Mich., May 6.—The cold wave reached here Monday evening, bringing with it a heavy frost that formed ice over one-fourth of an inch thick and destroying again all prospects of peaches, strawberries, and seriously injuring plums, apples and pears.

WATERLOO, Ia., May 6.—This section was visited by a severe frost Monday night. Small streams were covered with ice an eighth of an inch in thickness. Much damage is done to fruit trees, which were in full bloom. Small fruits are not much injured, being a little backward.

BELOIT, Wis., May 6.—There was a hard freeze here Monday night, and it is feared that fruit has suffered.

GREEN CASTLE, Ind., May 6.—There was considerable frost in this vicinity Monday night. Wheat and fruit are too far advanced to be hurt to any extent, but in low lands vegetables and small fruits were considerably damaged.

SOUTH BEND, Ind., May 6.—A decided snow flurry here Monday was followed Monday night by a fall of temperature, and ice a quarter of an inch thick was formed. The fruit buds, which gave promise of an abundant harvest, were injured, as were also the strawberry and grape blossoms. How seriously the fruit buds were injured is hard to tell, but should another frost follow the prospects for fruit in this district will be rather dreary.

COVINGTON, Ind., May 6.—There was a heavy frost here Monday night, and it is feared much damage is done to the fruit.

WARREN, Ill., May 6.—This section was visited Tuesday morning by a heavy frost and ice was formed to the thickness of a window pane. To all appearances fruit and grain have not been injured.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., May 6.—At noon Tuesday it began snowing and continued up to 11 p. m., the storm at times being almost a blizzard. Ice formed in places a quarter of an inch thick.

NEW YORK, May 6.—Snow fell Tuesday morning at Albany and Auburn. There was freezing weather at Medina, and it is thought the fruit crop is much damaged. Snow also fell at North Troy and Richford, Vt. The mercury was 3 below freezing at Shrewsbury, Mass. Monday night's frost is feared to have badly damaged the cherry crop in Litchfield county, Conn.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., May 6.—The temperature at many points in central New York fell to freezing point Monday night. In Seneca county some classes of fruits are ruined. There was a heavy frost in Madison county at several places, and fruit and vegetables were ruined.

TIFFIN, O., May 6.—A heavy frost prevailed throughout northern Ohio Tuesday night, ice forming to the thickness of a quarter of an inch. Grapes were badly damaged and early potatoes and other tender vegetables ruined, but it is thought the fruit was not badly injured.

Disastrous Fire.

SOUTH BEND, Ind., May 6.—A disastrous fire occurred Monday in Edwardsburg, 16 miles northeast of South Bend. The fire started about 9 o'clock a. m., and the greater part of the business portion was destroyed. The buildings burned were Latson's millinery establishment, Runkle & Parson's large brick building, Quimby's agricultural implement depot and wire fence factory, Dever's wagon factory and blacksmith shop, J. W. Bean & Son's drug store, several dwellings, and other buildings. The loss was $25,000. The only insurance on the destroyed property was carried by the Latson establishment.

Germany Will Be Liberal.

BERLIN, May 6.—The German government proposes to the reichstag a vote of a million marks for the proper representation of Germany at the Chicago exhibition, and for the assistance and promotion of the interests of the German exhibitors. Of the amount of this draft 100,000 marks are to be voted immediately.

Pennsylvania Gets Her Share.

WASHINGTON, May 6.—Secretary Foster has signed a warrant for $1,654,711 in favor of the governor of the state of Pennsylvania, this amount being that state's share of the direct-tax fund.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS

GOT THE FARM.

A Boy Goes to Court to Make His Parent Keep His Word.

A decision was handed down by the supreme court in St. Paul in the famous case of Tennis Slingerland, Jr., against his father, Tennis Slingerland. The case had been in the courts for five years. The dispute was over a tract of land in Olmstead county valued at about $50,000. It appears that Slingerland, Jr., had worked for his father a long time, and as his compensation was not forthcoming he commenced suit against the old man in the district court. Finally the father proposed that if the son would drop the case in court, get married and settle down he would present him with the farm. The son agreed. He took a wife and went on a wedding tour. When he returned he expected to find the farm awaiting his pleasure. Instead of this the old man told him he could go and buy a farm if he wanted one. The son brought suit against his father to recover the farm. He was beaten and obtained a new trial and won. The father then took the case to the supreme court. Here the son again won his case. Then the father took a second appeal, trying to get a new trial. Judge Dickinson refused to grant this, however, and the son will own the farm, which has been increasing in value all the time the case has been in court and is now worth a confortable fortune.

A Minneapolis Preacher Robbed.

Rev. Father Thomas Briody, of Minneapolis, arrived in New York the other night on his way to Europe, having in his possession a check for $2,000 on the Irish national bank of Minneapolis and $500 in cash. Fearing that he might be robbed he stepped up to a policeman on the corner of Sixth avenue and Eleventh street and gave him the check and money for safe keeping. The next morning the priest went to look for the bluecoat and found him not.

Coming to an End.

A German doctor at Northfield says that the world is coming to an end in 1901, on the 17th day of April. He says that the end will be preceded by divers earthquakes, wars, moons, and other signs of a like sensational character. Another most startling statement that he makes is that in three years a most terrible war will take place, and entire nations will be effaced from the world's face.

Profit in Oats Now.

All the farmers for miles around Northfield were hauling their oats to market on account of the high prices. They had kept the grain stored all winter, and were now selling for fifty-five cents per bushel. Oats last fall brought only from fourteen to fifteen cents, and the oats were stored in view of the advance which has arrived.

The Alloting Begins.

Harry S. Morris, who is to have charge of the additional allotments on the Sisseton Indian reservation, passed through Morris the other day on his way to the agency to begin the work of alloting. This work would require about four weeks, after which the surplus lands on the reserve would be opened to white settlement.

A Land-Mark Burned.

The old stone house on St. Anthony avenue, in St. Paul, and the old log barn near it have been burned. The old stone house was the second dwelling house erected in this section of the country. The house was a rendezvous for the pioneers in early days, and Gen. Sibley made a number of treaties with the Indians there.

Makes the Weak Strong

The way in which Hood's Sarsaparilla builds up people in run down or weakened state of health, conclusively proves the claim that this medicine "makes the weak strong." It does not act like a stimulant, imparting factitious strength from which there must follow a reaction of greater weakness than before, but in the most natural way Hood's Sarsaparilla overcomes that tired feeling, creates an appetite, purifies the blood, and in short, gives great bodily, nerve, mental and digestive strength.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

MY MOTHER'S MEMORY.

My mother died ere I could scarce
Breathe her beloved name,
And o'er my childhood's sunny path
Dark clouds of sorrow came;
My bark of life was wrecked upon
Misfortune's hidden reef,
And ere bright manhood on me dawned
I had wept tears of grief;
And now I seek my mother's grave,
That not one soul may see
How dark the shadows are that throw
Their somber hues o'er me.

The birds are in the merry glen,
The April flowers bloom;
But I their beauties leave, to sit
Beside my mother's tomb;
And there I watch, in solemn thought,
Some bright star in the sky,
And think within its depths I see
My mother's gentle eye;
And happy dreams within me rise,
My sorrowing heart to cheer;
I think—although to me unseen—
Her loving spirit's near.

I mix among my fellow-men,
Within the marts of trade;
But, ah, my mind is far away
Beneath the willow's shade;
And though the world has many charms
Which other hearts may see,
By far the brightest of them all
Possess no joys for me.

A SHREWD SMUGGLER.

He Was Caught at Last and Gives His Little Game Away.

Cunning Tricks That Completely Deceived the Most Experienced Officers—Not as Much in It for Inspectors Now as Formerly.

First-class professional smuggling, say the custom house authorities, is rapidly becoming a lost art. In the aggregate, perhaps, there is a large quantity of dutiable goods smuggled through this port, but it is done in small quantities and by persons who do not make a business of violating the revenue laws.

As is generally well known, the customs inspectors making seizures of dutiable goods are entitled to rewards for their work. These rewards vary with the valuations made by the official appraisers.

Not many years ago the average annual income of an inspector from this source far exceeded the amount paid him as his salary. But at present the custom house inspector, like the Wall street commission broker, replies, when anyone asks him how he is getting along: "Well, things are pretty dull. I am eking out a living, but there is nothing in the business any more. I wonder if the good old times will ever come again!"

I chanced to meet a few nights ago a well-known member of the collector's staff, who was an inspector when Chester A. Arthur was collector and who returned to his old place under Colonel Erhardt. He was surrounded by a group of customs inspectors in an uptown cafe, and all were bewailing the fact that there was much less money now in Uncle Sam's service for the boys than there was "in the good old days." Major Blank agreed entirely with the general sentiment.

"Why," said he, "from 1868 to 1876 we had a seizure of considerable consequence almost every week, and if we did not get two or three rich seizures every month we did not consider that we were doing any business at all.

"I think the cleverest man who ever gave us a long chase to catch him was a French Jew who devoted himself entirely to smuggling diamonds. The man was worth many thousands of dollars. He could have retired from business and spent the remainder of his years in ease and luxury, or he could have established a big legitimate business and carried it on successfully. But he had made his money in this way. There was an immense profit in the sale of the smuggled brilliants, and as he had been uniformly successful he preferred to remain a smuggler. If there ever was a man who made smuggling a fine art it was this fellow. He was just in the prime of life, and was as shrewd and clever as any man I ever came in contact with. We were sure he was engaged in smuggling. His trips to France and back were too frequent for a man who was engaged in a legitimate business.

"We searched him time and time again, but nothing was found either in his trunks or on his person. Finally we made up our minds to have him watched in Paris. The collector put himself in communication with the United States minister at the French capital, and a few weeks later received a letter from the late E. B. Washburne, who was then our minister to France, informing him that he had had our man watched and that he had been purchasing large quantities of diamonds. The minister stated that, from information brought to him, the value of the gems was close to a quarter of a million dollars.

"Soon after we received a telegram telling us that our man had sailed with his stock of precious stones. Did we feel good? Well, now, do you know the commission on that seizure would make many a man consider himself rich? Our trap to catch Mr. Smuggler was complete. At least we thought it was. We sent three specially instructed inspectors down the bay to meet the steamer. As soon as they boarded her they spotted our man, and they never took their eyes from him till the boat reached her dock. The moment the gang-plank was put in position two of our men walked up to the suspected man, slapped him on the shoulders and informed him that he was a prisoner.

"He remonstrated, but they told him that they knew their game and he must come along. Well, sir, we spent the greater part of a day searching that fellow. We stripped him. We ripped open his clothing. We searched every nook and crevice in his trunks, but not a single stone did we find. The three disgusted inspectors simultaneously swore and I joined in the chorus. We were sure he had the diamonds still, but we had nothing on which to detain him. The impudent rascal put his finger to his nose as he sauntered away and remarked: 'You fellows thought you were smart, didn't you?'

"Two weeks later we learned that our prisoner's agents here had literally flooded the market with very valuable and high-priced diamonds. Then we knew he had gotten the best of us. I stayed awake nights trying to imagine how he did it, but was forced to give it up.

"In less than three months our man again appeared upon the scene. This time he was given away by one of his partners on the other side. The Collector received an anonymous letter from Paris telling him just how the smuggler proposed to operate. The fellow had cheated him, the writer of the letter said; but even then he would not have given him away but for the fact that besides cheating him he had persuaded his sweetheart to leave him, and this was a treachery that he could not forgive. 'When your man gets into port,' the letter said, 'he will feign illness. On his back he will have a big plaster, put there, of course, as he will tell you, by the ship's surgeon. Take off this plaster and inside of it you will find forty-nine large and valuable stones.' In a short time the smuggler arrived and again we made him prisoner. He acted exactly as the letter stated he would act, and when some one touched him in the back he winched as if in terrible pain. We were ready for his acting, however, and soon had his coat and shirt off. There was the plaster, and beneath it the inspectors found forty-nine glittering gems just as the letter stated they would. The man was hustled off to Ludlow street jail and the diamonds sent to the appraiser.

"We were all jubilant, and the chief inspector, who had made the seizure, went home and told his wife what a beautiful sealskin sacque he was going to buy her. The next day when I reached my office the first thing I reached for was a big envelope from the appraiser, containing a statement of the value of the diamonds. We had variously estimated them the day before at from $60,000 to $100,000. When I opened the envelope and read the official appraisement you could have knocked me over with a feather. This is what it said:—'The forty-nine diamonds you sent me for appraisement are made of glass. Their net value is about seventy-five cents.'

"I could not help admiring the fellow's cleverness. He had written the anonymous letter himself, of course, and had entrapped us completely. We never thought of looking in the handbag he carried, and he had walked off with his diamonds. We had to let him go free again.

"Well, sir! it was two months after this before we caught the man. He kept up his smuggling regularly. Finally we let him pass several times without paying much attention to him. He became bold, and one day we discovered a big lot of diamonds in the back of a hair brush. This time we really had him. I felt so much curiosity to find out how the fellow had beaten us the first time I have described that I went to the United States district attorney and persuaded him to consent to have a year taken off the man's sentence if he would tell. We all agreed that the knowledge would be of great bedefit to the service.

"The man agreed. He was cool as a cucumber when he told us. 'Why,' he said, 'it was the easiest and simplest thing in the world. You see I knew what you fellows were up to. I posted myself as to that. I found out you were having me watched in Paris, and I knew there would be a complete search. When I sailed from France I simply bought a round-trip ticket. I made an agreement with the steamship people that I was to have the same stateroom coming back which I had occupied in coming over. Then I secured the diamonds in a bag, made an excavation in the wall of the stateroom, put the diamonds in it and puttied up the hole. Then when the ship sailed my wife came down to bid me good-by. I was too modest to kiss her good-by on deck and she accompanied me to my stateroom. I told her about the diamonds, and, womanlike, she would carry them ashore with her. Wasn't it easy?' "—N. Y. Herald.

A JAPANESE BELLE'S BATH.

She Scrubs Herself with Bran and Pours Water Over Her with a Dipper.

This is the way a Japanese belle takes a bath, according to a traveler:

The pretty little maiden lit the stove under the bath, got down her little bag of bran, and laid ready her best kimono and her new obi. By this time the water was boiling, or nearly so, in the cedar tub, so she took away the stove, threw some of the water over her, sat on the floor beside the bath, scrubbed herself with bran, deluged herself with water again, and then for two minutes in she went, scattering the drops all over her with her wooden dipper.

But there was no time to waste even over the delights of the bath; her hair had to be redone, and this took some time, for our musumi was a Kyoto girl, and Kyoto girls are not only the prettiest but the best turned out girls in all Japan, so she was not satisfied with her tire-woman till her black locks shone like silk and her coiffure a la Fujisan was as stiff as camellia oil could make it.

And after her hair was done it took here some time to arrange her obi—it would not come right; first it insisted on tying itself into a crooked knot instead of a beautiful butterfly bow; then when the knot had been smoothed out, and by chance it sat straight, it was too flat and not stiff enough.

However, a Japanese girl does not know how to lose her temper, not even over her most irritating obi, and at last, coaxed with showers of laughter and subtle hands, it sets as it should; her breakfast does not take long, and then she runs over the mats, slips the cord of her sandals between her big toe and number two, and clatters down the street.—N. Y. Journal.

One Thousand Million Dollars.

No private gentleman is worth one thousand million dollars. That is rather a large sum; in fact, it is so large that it is impossible for one to get any practical or realizing sense of its enormousness. In order to try to get some tangible notion of such a sum, just imagine yourself to have been born at the commencement of the Christian era, and endowed with an income of ten thousand dollars a week, (which we think you will admit would be rather a handsome revenue), and ordained to live until the ten thousand a week should amount to one thousand million of dollars, how long do you suppose you would have to live? You will, perhaps, be astonished to hear that the time would not yet have expired; nor would it expire until sometime in the year 1923. The income on a thousand million of dollars at five per cent. would be fifty million of dollars a year, or nearly a million a week—about enough to keep the most extravagant woman in the world in toilet paraphernalia and good temper.—N. Y. Ledger.

He Was Right.

"Have you any photographs of your children, Mr. Peck?" asked a friend of Hon. Alpheus Peck.

"I should say I had," answered Mr. Peck, "I've about a bushel of them."

"Why, Alpheus," exclaimed his wife.

"Well, haven't we? Haven't we photographs of all four of them and don't four pecks make a bushel?"—Detroit Free Press.

DOMESTIC CONCERNS.

—Chloride of lime should be scattered at least once a week under sinks and all other places where sewer gas is liable to lurk.

—Ordinary soup stock should be made from the collection of bones left over from the table; for instance, the bones of roasted beef, mutton, veal and chicken should be saved in a cool place and boiled twice a week. This stock will not make clear soup, but can be used for tomato or cream soups.

—Saratoga Chips: Peel as many potatoes as you desire, slicing them with a cutter very thin; if you haven't one, use a sharp knife; put the slices in ice-cold, very salt water, and let it stand two hours. Drain, and dry by squeezing in a large dry cloth; fry a few at a time in boiling lard.—Housekeeper.

—Raisin Filling: Seed and chop one-half pound of raisins. Broil one small cupful of sugar in three tablespoonfuls of water for five minutes. Beat the whites of two eggs to a stiff froth and pour the hot sirup over them, then add the chopped raisins, stirring and beating the filling until it is cold.——Prairie Farmer.

—Broiled Ham: Cut the slices about one-fourth of an inch thick, remove the rind and smoky edge, also some of the fat, if there is much of it. Broil on a wire gridiron over a clear fire. Turn it frequently to avoid scorching. In three or four minutes it should be done. Remove from the gridiron, butter, and serve at once.

—The spice poultice is a growing favorite in the sick-room. It is pleasant to use and easily made. Mix together dry, one heaping teaspoonful each of ground ginger, cinnamon, cloves and flour. Moisten with hot water until of proper consistency to spread. Double and heat a piece of old cotton, spread the plaster on it and cover with cheese-cloth. When cold, moisten with brandy or whisky and reheat.

—Prune Jelly: Soak a pound of prunes in a quart of water three hours. Drain them and strain the water in which you soaked them. Put it on the range with a pound of sugar and let it boil half an hour. Remove the stones from the prunes, and put them in boiling sirup, and boil it up again. Soak half a box of gelatine in a little cold water, and stir it into the boiling prunes. Pour them into a mold wet with cold water, and set them in a cold place to harden. Serve with sugar and cream.—Ladies' Home Journal.

—Baked Indian Pudding: Mix four tablespoonfuls Indian meal with one-half cupful molasses and one-half teaspoonful ginger and a speck of salt, and stir gradually into one pint scalding milk. Put in a buttered pudding-dish with one pint cold milk, and bake slowly, adding more milk if needed. Sliced sweet apples may be used in this pudding, or dried blueberries or currants. Cinnamon may be substituted for ginger, and raisins and suet may be added to it. It should bake gently and long, and the addition of plentiful cold milk gives the jelly rim desired for this pudding. Bake in earthenware or firebrick. If there is not time for the long baking add eggs, two or four, to quantity given above. Eaten hot with hard sauce; cold, should be daintily sliced, and served with sugar and cream.—Boston Budget.

NEW SPRING GOWNS.

Two Neat Walking Costumes Made of the Spring Materials.

A woman's gown nowadays can not be made to fit too exactly. In a beautiful costume just made for a lady in Washington the waist was made of chamois skin and so arranged that no seam on the waist was visible except the arm size. There was a rich brown silk passementerie all over the lower part of the waist, which had Vandyke points at top and bottom. The sleeves were of brown velvet and the skirt was of brown camel's hair, with deep tabs, which showed a Vandyke point of chamois leather overlaid with brown passementerie. The cuffs and high collar were treated in the same way.

Another very handsome walking gown had a plain skirt in cuir or leather-colored broadcloth, with dark brown velvet Vandyke points all around the skirt. A coat basque had pocket lids and collar of velvet, and sleeves covered with brown passementerie. A hat of felt in the same shade as the dress had plumes of that shade at the back and brown velvet ribbons in front.

A beautiful tailor-made gown is of pale, drab cloth finished around the bottom and up one side with fine rows of black stitching, with wrinkled drapery across the front. The coat basque is made with the same extreme simplicity, and is fastened with flat gold buttons. A shovel-shaped drab felt hat, trimmed with myrtle green plumes and bow, is to be worn with this. Either of these two gowns is quite suitable to wear at a morning wedding.

Among the spring woolens none seems to be more popular than the Scotch homespun twills in stripes, checks or heather mixtures. They are very soft and warm, yet light, and have the desirable quality of shedding a reasonable amoudt of rain before they get wet, and they make excellent every-day dresses.

A novelty is the Bedford cordurette in every color now fashionable, and they look heavy while being very light. Broken plaids, with the lines in hairy raised effects, are quite popular, and make very stylish dresses and comparatively inexpensive ones.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

A Dainty Bonnet.

A bonnet that is a very dream in violet has a crown of open gold lace that is outlined about the face and around the top with small violets, the gold lace showing plainly between the two rows of violets. Just in front are two tiny, white love birds, that seem to nestle among the pale blossoms, while at the back are loops of white ribbon, from among which comes up a white aigrette. The ties, descending from under these loops, are also of white ribbon, and are fastened in a prim little bow just in front. A bonnet of this design made of lace straw, the very yellow shade, will be in vogue, and can, of course, be trimmed to suit one's fancy as well as look well with one's gowns. —Ladies' Home Journal.

—Wearing rubber overshoes on a dry night caused the arrest of a carpenter in Chicago. Charles Graham, a resident of Dearborn street, had been suffering from a severe cold for some time, and imagining that the removal of his overshoes would only tend to aggravate his illness, he continued wearing them without regard to the weather. He was hastening home not long ago, when a vigilant lieutenant of police arrested him as a suspicious character. The next day he was fined five dollars.

Out of Politics.

McPrune, the grocer, was never known to acknowledge that he was out of any article without calling attention to some other article that he did have. A bet was made by Johnson that he could ask McPrune a question that would cause him to omit the usual addendum.

Said Johnson, as he entered the store, where the boys had already gathered: "Mack, do you think it will be Cleveland or Hill in '92?"

Mack replied with some asperity: "Oh, bother! I'm out of politics!"

Johnson was on the verge of giving vent to his delight, when Mack added: "But I've got some of the best cheese you ever put your teeth into."—Boston Transcript.

The Leaf Album.

Women may make a most attractive addition to the equipment of parlor or drawing-room table, by an album containing impressions of a variety of leaves. A sheet of fine woven paper is to be saturated with oil and the surplus wiped off, after which it is hung in the air to dry. The sheet is then passed to and fro over a smoking candle until the exposed side is blackened. The veins of the leaf are to be slightly bruised on the underside by being rasped with the edge of a paper-cutter. This side of the leaf is placed on the black surface and gently rubbed with the finger. The delineation of veins is equal to the finest engraving. The impression may be cut out and inserted in an album.—Ladies' Home Journal.

A USEFUL PASSENGER.

The Great Eastern Saved by the Ingenuity of an American Engineer.

The Great Eastern, the largest steamer ever built, was launched January 31, 1859. Almost from the first the experience of this ocean leviathan was unfortunate. Not long after being placed in commission the vessel started on a trip from Liverpool to New York. When but two days out she was met by a brisk gale, which speedily developed into a hurricane of destructive violence. The side paddles were bent out of position and made useless, the top of the rudder post was smashed and the helpless ship was soon tossing and rolling about in the most alarming manner. The waves were constantly washing over the decks and six of the boats were swept away, while the others stove in. The interior of the ship presented a scene of the utmost confusion. Crockery and culinary utensils went crashing about in all directions, chairs and tables were broken, and mirrors and chandeliers were shattered into fragments. The officers of the ship were at a loss what to do, and probably the Great Eastern would have gone to the bottom had not a passenger, H. E. Towle, of Boston, who was a civil engineer, suggested and carried out a plan for controlling the rudder by means of a large chain cable. After an immense amount of labor every difficulty was overcome and on the second day after the hurricane began the vessel again answered her helm and proceeded on her course. The passengers held a meeting, passed resolutions complimentary to Mr. Towle and made him a present of a gold watch.—Chicago News.

The Soap that Cleans Most is Lenox.

A Brawny Bargee at the Helm.

To-day it is raining in torrents. He knows by experience the value of a "Fish Brand Slicker." It is his sole article of dress, and to him worth drawers, shirt, coat, vest, and pants. He'll tell you tales by the hour of storms lasting days and nights when that "Slicker" made up the whole difference between comfort and misery; and all for a mere trifle from his week's pay. Why don't you buy one for yourself? To realize how little it costs, think how long it lasts. It will outwear four suits of clothes. Better get one to-day, before you forget it. A day's delay may cause a month of sickness, and cost a hundred times the price of a Slicker. Beware of worthless imitations, every garment stamped with the "Fish Brand" Trade Mark. Don't accept any inferior coat when you can have the "Fish Brand Slicker" delivered without extra cost. Particulars and illustrated catalogue free.

BUFFALO GAZETTE

DELANO, FRIDAY, MAY 8, 1891.

GREAT NORTHERN R'Y.

Passenger trains leave Delano as follows:

No. 7, going west - - - - 9:41 a. m.
" 9, " " - - - - 8:21 p. m.
No. 10, going east - - - - 5:23 a. m.
" 3, " " - - - - 4:49 p. m.

GEO. W. BOLTON, Local Agent.

DELANO DIARY.

To-morrow will be Fair Day.

—A show is billed to appear to-night, at the city hall.

—The Ruckoldt bridge is likely to be replaced by an iron one soon.

—J. C. Hitz has moved into th G. P. Schaffer residence on River Street.

—Read our speech by Hans Jensen Wein, at the Agricultural college also communication from "REX".

—Con O'Leary bought a fine team of mares from Hon. G. A Ruckoldt, one day this week.

—Justice Bohn's court, next Thursday, the case of C. S. Wandersee vs. Henry Leuderbaugh comes up. It is concerning a wood deal.

—Spring chickens are a part of our enterprising butcher's stock now-a-days but they have to import them into the county from the cities.

—Still they come. Pension Att'y. Billings received notice, last week, that another of his cliants Riley Sturman had been granted a Pension of $13, per month, under the new law.

—At a meeting of the Board of Health, held on Monday evening last it was decided that all alleys and premises must be cleaned up on or before May 18, also that the hog ordinance will be enforced.

—Yesterday as William Otto was returning from Delano, when near home his horses took fright and ran away throwing himself and his little nephew, Bruno Kubon, out onto the ground. The wagon was badly domoralized. Fortunately no other injury, though the escape was narrow from spoiling a wedding as William expects to be married on Monday next.

—Mrs. I. H. Grafft imforms us that she is the happy possessor of a peach tree budded to blossom, a rarity in this country. The tree is in its third year. The neighbors are aiding her in protecting it from the frosts and freezes of these cold nights, and by covering it up every night for a while yet, it is hoped that peach blossoms will be seen and in the Autumn, perhaps the ripening fruit.

—The grand Republican rally on Saturday evening at the City Hall was not a success. Three speakers from Minneapolis were to be present and expatiate on the McKinley bill, Reciprocity and kindred subjects. As the train from the east pulled out about twenty persons came together at the appointed place, only to learn that the speakers did not come. As no one present volunteered to wrestle around in their places those waiting peacefully returned to their homes; Some of them quite a ways in the country. If speakers don't intend to come they should say so and not disappoint people in this way. It is not right and the people won't stand it.

—The new Wescott Cereal Factory in Delano, is a go. The articles of incorporation have been signed and published. Certificates of stock are now ready for sale. Quite a number of the citizens of the village have subscribed for a greater or less interest. Shares are worth $10. each, are non-assessable. The organization, already effected, is Geo. P. Schaffer, President; J. C. Buckley, Vice President; L. M. Maxfield, Secretary; J. W. Lindsley, Treasurer; G. F. Wescott, Business Manager. The election of officers occurrs annually, every share representing one vote. As the controlling interest is to be held at home it ought to be run right, and for the best interests of the village and community as well as the individual interests of its members.

—Jos. Van Eman's little grey mare created considerable excitement, on Tuesday, by coming home without her venerable master. Del Young hitched her to a buggy and drove up to Van's farm in search of the "left behind" and found him safe and sound. As Mr. V. was standing on the fence preparing to mount, the rail broke, letting him to the ground and frightening the animal caused her to run. As she passed Coolen's team in the field near the road they took the fever and left with the drag, running until they met the hired man with a plow when he left his rig to stop them, his horse and plow caught the epedemic and made time around the field until the plow caught a stump. No harm done but considerable anxiety felt by quite a number of folks for a short time.

—The town of Franklin has a large number of young farmers of German, Polish, Swedish and other parentage. Some of whom are becoming of age, who will be entitled to vote at the next election and who will share the responsibility of electing proper officers from President of the United States to Town constable. Some of these young men can read English. Many cannot. All should be able to do so. If they intend to remain in America and be citizens of the country they should use means to become acquainted with the law and usages of the country. They should post up as well as the best informed men in the country on the leading questions of the day so that they can vote understandingly. A good way to commence is to take a county paper, where the news of the neighborhood is found and where things of interest are recorded. The BUFFALO GAZETTE is said to be a good one.

—Tim Gleeson wishes to sell 160 acres of land near Wahpeton and build a residence in Delano.

—Barber Bohn is building a barn between Third and Fourth streets. Ball and Goodrich builders.

—Farmer Joseph Cramer purchased a new driving harness from Conzet & Steward, on Thursday. He sports about the nobbiest rig in town.

—Councilman Brandon is beautifying his home by building an addition, and putting in a modern style of window. J. C. McDonald contractor.

—A gentleman and lady from Minneapolis, visited Delano one day, this week in search of two runaway boys. The two newcomers here are not the ones they were after.

—Charles Eppel was visited on Tuesday evening by a large number of friends and the Delano Cornet Band on the 55th anniversary of his birth. A good time was had by all.

—George W. Bolton is supplying farmers, gratuitously, with sugar beet seed. Call on him at the depot, and see who can raise beets to take the premium at the Wright County Fair, this fall.

—Doctors O'Connor, of Howard Lake and Brigham, of Montrose attended the meeting of the Medical Association, on Monday, in Delano. The next meeting is to be at Buffalo during court week. Probably on Tuesday.

—On calling at the Buffalo Journal office, last week, we were surprised at the war like appearance of things. Four old fashioned army muskets, with fixed boyonets, stood against the wall within easy reach of the office force, on inquiry we learned they were a part of the dramatic club's outfit.

—The St. Paul Globe is affording a splendid bargain to subscribers of that paper. Houghton's new reversible political maps and Rand, McNalley & Co's map of the United State. Political history condensed on one side. Map of the United States on the other side. Large map and Weekly Globe one year for $2.00 Call at the GAZETTE office and leave your subscriptions. Also Toledo Blade and GAZETTE one year for $1.85. Louisville Courier-Journal and GAZETTE one year for $1.85 St. Paul Globe and GAZETTE one year for $1.85.

—In this issue of the Gazette you will find the Minnesota Law Supplijment. The very first Section is Senate File No. 635. An Act proposing an amendment to section (33) of article four (4) of the constitution of the state of Minnesota, prohibiting special legislation. This is Wright County's Senator's production. And a law that deserves the support of the people of the state at the polls when they are called upon at the next election to approve or reject it. It is a law that will place people on an equilibrium, and not permit sharpers to log roll through such acts as the extention of village limits while the people "taken in" are opposed to it and before they are aware of it. Nor the dividing of town from village without people finding it out.

Twenty-Third Annual Fair.

We are in receipt of a letter from H. Tanner, Secretary of the Wright County Agricultural Society requesting the announcement that the Twenty-Third Annual Fair will be held at Howard Lake, on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, September 15, 16, 17, and 18, 1891. This Society has struggled on for nearly a quarter of a century. Has had its ups and downs. So is now no new thing. No experiment. But established on a good foundation. If the farmers turn out and bring along the best, their respective farms afford the Twenty-Third Annual Fair will be a good one.

BOARD OF HEALTH.

Second and Last Notice.

To all property owners and property holders in the village of Delano:

You are hereby notified to clean up the alleys adjacent to your property, also the yards, cellars and premises, and have the same in good condition on or before Monday, May 18, 1891, after which time it will be cleaned at the expense of the property.

Look at These Figures.

From the best data attainable there is spent every year in the city of Chicago not less than $70,000,000—let me repeat it, SEVENTY MILLIONS OF DOLLARS for intoxicating liquors. Of this vast sum, not less than half of it comes, beyond all doubt, from the laboring classes and the poor. Suppose the average wages of a working man were $700 a year. This sum spent for drink by those who work hard for their money would give $700 a year to 50,000—yes, fifty thousand families. These families would average, say, five to each. Here, then, would be 250,000 people that could live well on what the laboring people, or the heads of the families of these laboring people, spend for drink. Here is the vast sum of $35,000,000 going to support a lot of lazy, worthless and criminal saloon keepers and their familes—going to swell the already over-rich whiskey trusts and combines. A great part of this enormous sum would naturally go to buy more and better food—more and better clothes—for this one-fourth of a million of people, if the saloon was annihilated. Bear in mind this is only one city. If we attempt to take into our thoughts the tremendous aggregate that is paid across the saloon counters of this nation the mind staggers and reels like the poor drunken victims of these saloons.

The question I want to ask is this: Do not the farmers see in these figures where the saloon is hurting them, in absorbing the money that would otherwise come to them in large measure? Many and heavy are the burdens placed upon the back of the patient, toiling farmer, but of all these there is none like that of the saloon, even when the farmer is a temperance man himself. Here is where we want to begin. We farmers that have become stoopshouldered from carrying the tens of thousands great bellied, lazy saloon-keepers upon our backs, and myriads of paupers they have made, must begin to straighten up and shake off these loads. All it wants is a little stiffening of the spinal column. We have been supple and cringing long enough. Now it is our time. Will we be wise in this our day and generation? Wait and see.—L. S. Coffin, in Iowa State Register.

"Some men say to me, 'Whatever the Lord has put into this world is for use. Here is liquor. Isn't it to be used?' Yes, and the Lord put iron ore into the mountains, but he never intended that it should be made into jimmies and burglars' tools. If men will not listen to advice nor reason, if their appetites have become so depraved as to lead the brain, then the temptation should be removed; and there is no more effective way of doing this than through absolute prohibition. If a man is known to have a mania for suicide the law will prevent him from taking his life in so suddenly a manner; and I see no reason why we should not establish a law which will prevent a man from not only taking his own life by slow degrees, but ruining his hopes of salvation hereafter, and the temporal happiness of wife and children. And now that the question has come before the people of Pennsylvania, I shall vote for prohibition."—MR. POWDERLY.

Is it Possible.

Raw sugars are on the free list. Refined sugars pay a tax of half a cent, not for revenue, but as a bonus to the refiners,

Recently Spreckles and Havemeyer entered into a trust or combination to divide the country between them This combination worked very well, and the trust was enabled to exact the full bonus of half a cent a pound.

Now it appears that some of the wholesale dealers have made an arrangement to import German beet sugar, at lower prices than the trust has yet named, and the trust is troubled.

So it appears that competition is the only power that can possibly restrain the trust.

If it is a good thing to have foreign competition smash the Sugar Trust, why not give the same medicine to the Steel Rail Trust, to the Starch Trust, and to half a hundred other trusts growing fat by consuming the substance of the people, protected by the tariff?—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Last week Jay Gould was given a reception by the citizens of Atlanta, Ga. Governor Northern was invited to be present. He declined. And this is what the Alliance war-horse said:

"I do not want to meet Mr. Gould. His visit here has no official character. While I would like to meet the other gentlemen of the party, I cannot do so because of the presence of Mr. Gould. I object to him personally, because I disapprove of his policy of monopoly and his business methods. I regret to be forced to this conclusion. The common people owe Mr. Gould nothing, and as chief executive of Georgia I can not do him reverence."—The Great West.

We admire that kind of a principle in a Governor, and think Alliance men could find in it a sharp rebuke for partaking freely of a Governor's hospitality, that represents the principles of a Jay Gould.—Alliance Sentinel.

Wanted Preaching That Would Hit Him.

"No. I don't like him," said Farmer Allen, when asked his opinion of the minister. "He ain't personal enough."

"You want to see folks squirm, do you?"

"I want to squirm myself. It does me good. When he preaches on folks bein' lukewarm and that kind of thing I don't more'n half feel it, but I've got real cryin' sins I want brought home to me. Consequence is, now a-days, I have to preach myself.

"When I remember I was tempted to say I sold the kickin' mare for no fault, I have to own to myself, 'Ezra Allen, you're a thievin,' lyin' creatur.' After I spoke up sharply to Melissy and children, or gin the cow a kick because she wouldn't stan' round, I have to lecture myself, and say. 'Ezra Allen, you're an old brute.'

"Now I've had to do so much preaching that I'm all worn out, and what I want is to pay a preacher to do it for me. If he'd really warm up to his work he could say enough in half an hour on Sunday to last me through the week.

"I'm a bard-workin' man; I aint got the time, nor ability neither, to do my own preachin.'"—Ram's Horn.

Behold, ye speak an idle thing:
Ye never knew the seared dust;
I do but sing because I must,
And pipe but as the linnets sing.
—[Tennyson.

Pygmies are pygmies still, though perched on Alps;
And pyramids are pyramids in vales;
Each man makes his own stature, builds himself;
Virtue alone outbuilds the pyramids,
Her monuments shall last when Egypt's fall.

Nature is frugal, and her wants are few;
These few wants, answered, bring sincere delights:
But fools create themselves new appetites.

Leonidas and Washington,
Whose every battlefield is holy ground,
Which breathes of nations saved, not world's undone;
How sweetly on the ear such echoes sound!
While the mere victors may appeal or stun
The servile and the vain, such names will be
A watch word till the future shall be free.

To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,
To the last syllable of recorded Time;
And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty Death. Out, out, brief candle!
Life's but a walking shadow; a poor player,
That struts and frets his hour upon the stage.
And then is heard no more. It is a tale
Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury,
Signifying nothing.

She died, as many travelers have died,
O'ertaken on an Alpine road by night;
Numbed and bewildered by the falling snow,
Striving, in spite of falling pulse, and limbs
Which faltered and grew feeble at each step,
To toil up the icy steep, and bear,
Patient and faithful to the last, the load
Which, in the sunny morn, seemed light!

And yet
'Twas in the place she called her home she died;
And they who loved her with all of love
Their wintry natures had to give, stood by
And wept some tears, and wrote above her grave
Some common record which they thought was true:
But I, who loved her first, and last, and best
—I knew.

READERS of the CARVER COUNTY NEWS no longer see through a Glass darkly but their NEWS fairly Burns its way into their good graces.

JOHN W. ROCHE, St. Paul's comptroller for twenty years died suddenly, on Monday, on a Fourth St. Cable car in St. Paul, of heart disease. He was 62 years old.

THE Legislative Committee aided by "Bill" Erwin are investigating the alledged Duluth wheat steat. So for there seems to be something, if net millions in it.

TELEGRAMS from Chicago convey the intelligence that every union sivitchman in the employ of the Northwestern was discharged fron their service yesterday, and new men put in their places.

THE Charleston, one of the war ships of the U. S. Navy, has been chasing the Itata, a Chilian war vessel, along the Pacific coast for several days. It must be an exciting chase about four hours behind at one time.

MR. DAVID RAMALEY, one of St. Paul's oldest and best known job printers, was elected State Expert Printer for the term of two years, salary $1800 per year. This was a good selection as Mr. Ramaley is as well fitted for that office as the State affords.

TIMBER fires have been raging for a few weeks past. Several towns in Michigan have been destroyed. Pennsylvania has been visited by some severe blazes. The long dry spell makes things easy for flames to devour. Great care should be exercised by all who have the handling of fire.

THE NEW YORK PRESS denies the statement recently made by some of the leading newspapers of our country that Superintendent of Census Robert P. Porter was aiding in the management of that paper. From some of its tariff statements one would be led to believe that the Press was right about the question.

MESSRS. BLAINE and SALISBURY continue to write State letters concerning the Behrings sea seal fisheries while a Norwegian investigator into the matter is reported to have given out as his opinion that if the seals were all killed off the fisheries would be worth more than the seals are after they have eaten up the fish, and rendered fishing poor in these waters.

BARON HIRSCH, the Jewish millionaire who accumulated wealth in Turkish railroads it is said has abandoned the idea of colonizing in Pennsylvania the refugee countrymen of his that are now fleeing from Russia and Poland, but will take them to Argentine Republic and other south American States. The question is what will they do there? They do not, as a rule take to agricultural pursuits.

A MOVE in the right direction is being made to improve the grade of wheat in Minnesota we learn from the St. Paul Daily News. Hon. C. A. Pillsbury is to supply farmers in different sections of the State with small lots of wheat, a thousand bushels to be distributed, for seed and offer one hundred in premiums for the best raised. This offer is for next spring. Let some of our thrifty farmers improve this opportunity to improve their wheat grade without cost and with a chance to make a hundred dollars.

CONCERNING the great cry about American tin manufacturies the Louisville Courier-Journal says the New York Evening Post has been to considerable trouble to find out where the establishment was located and has finally run down the out-fit. After applying to several firms for American tin and receiving various answers some to the effect that it was an advertising dodge to sell other tin they found that a small corner room in the old Diston saw factory had been rented and contained six pots, three of which were used in making solder. They had twenty-five boxes of low grade tin, imported which they were redipping and selling for higher prices. Has any body seen any American tin pails or such here abouts?

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND seems to be attracting about as much attention at the present time as does President Harrison. Cleveland advocates Tariff Reform in the eastern states, Harrison talks about increasing our shipping interests in the western country. Would not lowering tariff al'owing an exchange of goods with other nations be instrumental in creating a demand for Ships and Sailors, and reduce the force of manufacturers and producers by taking from their ranks some good healthy eaters and men who would wear out many clothes. And create a home market for many goods, and allow us the pleasure of eating and wearing many things at present too high for our limited purses, while President Harrison's views on the subject would seem absurd. He advocates protective tariff, make every thing at home and sell all you can. Don't buy from abroad. Have nothing to haul to this country but build ships with the united states treasury's funds. This money taken from the people by taxes on what they eat and wear and use in their business, or in their homes. What does the United States or any other country for that matter want to take money from the treasury to build ships for, if tariffs are to be raised until they prohibit the bringing into the country goods of any kind. Especiably if foreign emigration is also to be stopped thereby curtailing the receipts of vessels on their return trips to our shores. We don't favor these exclu.ive theories. This world was made for the use of mankind and its productions are for their benefit. Subject to natural laws and not from any legislation of the make of monopolies and their agents.

Tariff Pictures.

United States Treasury reports do not lie. The one just issued dealing with our exports and imports shows that whereas in March, 1890, we sold American agricultural implements to other nations to the value of $386,255.

in March, 1891, we sold these implements abroad to the value of $631,721.

This does not look as though the McKinley tariff was checking our exports.—New York Press.

That is so, it does not look as if our exports of Agricultural Implements has fell off but that it has perceptibly increased, under the new tariff. But, it looks a little to our agricultural people as if those foreigners must be going to RAISE their own GRAIN AND STOP USING OURS. EVERY MACHINE EXPORTED WOULD BUT BE ANOTHER PROOF of THIS.

The American Citizens' Equal Rights Association (colored), in session at Cincinnati Thursday, "called the attention of the Administration to the fact that colored men were appointed to office mainly in the South, where the only political service colored men can render is to send delegates to national conventions, and that offices are denied to those in the Northern States, whose votes are necessary to the success of either party." Does the Administration hear? Republican success is impossible without the negro vote of the North, and yet it is never the negro of the North who is recognized by the Republican Administration. Justice, like charity, should begin at home.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

CLEVELAND DEMOCRACY

Tenders the Ex-President a Brilliant Reception.

BUFFALO, N. Y., May 12.—The Cleveland Democracy, Buffalo's foremost political organization, now seven years old and having a membership of upwards of 1,700, opened its new club house on Washington street this evening with ex-President Cleveland as the guest and speaker of the occasion. The house was crowded, and the scene a very brilliant one. At 7:30 o'clock Mr. Cleveland was escorted to the club house, and the formal exercises soon thereafter began in the assembly room, which was crowded almost to suffocation. Mr. Cleveland was greeted with the wildest cheering, long continued and often repeated. The president of the club, Herbert P. Bissell, delivered an address upon the purposes and growth of the organization, and in welcome to its distinguished patron and guest. Mr. Cleveland replied with a speech which was delivered with great earnestness, and which was received enthusiastically. He spoke as follows:

I believe the most threatening figure which to-day stands in the way of the safety of our government and the happiness of our people is reckless and wicked extravagance in our public expenditures. It is the most fatal of all the deadly brood born of governmental perversion. It hides beneath its wings the betrayal of the people's trust and holds powerless in its fascinating glance the people's will and conscience. It brazenly exhibits to-day a billion dollar congress. But lately a large surplus remained in the people's public treasury after meeting all expenditures then by no means economical. This condition was presented to the American people as positive proof that their burden of taxation was unjust because unnecessary; and yet while the popular protest is still heard, the harpy of public extravagance devours the surplus and impudently calls upon its staggering victims to bring still larger supplies within the reach of its insatiate appetite. A few short years ago a pension roll amounting to fifty-three millions of dollars was willingly maintained by our patriotic citizens. To-day public extravagance decrees that three times that sum shall be drawn from the people, upon the pretext that its expenditure represents the popular love of the soldier. Not many years ago a river and harbor bill, appropriating $11,000,000, gave rise to a loud popular protest. Now popular extravagance commands an appropriation of $22,000,000 for the same purposes, and the people are silent. To-day millions are paid for bare-faced subsidy, and this is approved or condoned at the behest of public extravagance, and thus a new marauder is turned loose, which, in company with its vicious tariff partner, bears pilfered benefit to the households of favored selfish interests.

Let us, then, as we push on in our campaign of education, especially impress upon our countrymen the lesson which teaches that public extravagance is a deadly, dangerous thing, that frugality and economy are honorable, that the virtue and watchfulness of the people are the surest safeguards against abuses in their government, and that those who profess to serve their fellow citizens in public places must be faithful to their trust.

After the exercises in the assembly hall Mr. Cleveland, assisted by prominent Democrats of the city and county, held a reception in the front drawing room of the club house, to which the general public was admitted.—St. Paul Globe.

Important Decision.

The United States Supreme Court decides that States have the right to tax the rolling stock of the Pullman Palace Car Company.

The case on which the decision was rendered was to test the constitutionality of the Pennsylvania law. This law provides for taxation of Pullman cars on a basis proportionate to the total number of miles of railroad within the State over which the company's cars run, compared with the total number of miles of railroad in the United States over which the cars run, and the decision is that the law is constitutional.

States which have no law of this nature are now fortified for the passage of enactments that will reach the privileged corporation.—Daily News.

PRESIDENT CLARSON'S remark that the g. o. p. would carry New York and the New England states, and other doubtful electorial votes, on the protection issue, leads the New York World to call his attention to the fact that "the congressional contest was fought squarely upon the McKinley bill last year, and the democratic majorities in the doubtful states were: New York, 80,000; Connecticut, 4,000; New Jersey, 14,000 Indiana, 23,000; Illinois, 31,000; Iowa, 9,000; Wisconsin, 23,000; Michigan, 9,000. The democrats will be very glad to have the republicans try and fight Waterloo over again."—Madison Democrat.

THE war against electrocution inaugurated by ambitious New York lawyers, is virtually ended, the United States Supreme Court having affirmed the order of the New York Circuit Court denying the writs of habeas corpus in the cases of Woods and Jugira, now in Sing Sing prison under sentence of death by electrocution.—St. Paul Daily News.

CORRESPONDENCE

Annandale Annals.

We had our usual morning and evening service in the M. E. Church. Rev. Higgins officiating. The attendance in the morning was unusually large. It was Mr. H's fourth discourse upon the travel of the children of Israel to the promised land, and he made it quite interesting.

Through the efforts of Mr. Higgins an organ has been purchased and placed in the church. Our friends of the Swedish Lutheran denomination are holding occasional services in the chapel which they erected and partly completed last season.

The social and moral condition of our village is wonderfully improved since we have had a clergyman residing with us.

Dr. Ridgway was called to Maple Lake last week to attend upon Mrs. Richard Glynn who was taken suddenly and alarmingly ill, at last reports she was considered to be out of danger.

Elder Higgins has sold his two lots on Excelsior St. to Mr. Joe. Craig, the boss miller at the Klatts Roller Mills.

The Editor of the Post took in Buffalo last Saturday and now (Monday morning) a new, we have forgot what you call them, may be seen standing at the case. The Judge does not complain about the work but says it is a little lonesome to have to do it all alone, "all work and no play makes etc., etc.

F. M. Lewis who has been in Washington during the latter part of winter is about returning to this place and setting up a meat market, as we are informed.

Dr. Ridgway's sister Mary, of Minneapolis, spent the last Sabbath with her brother here.

Will Ives made his friends here a brief call last week, said he was going to Montana in charge of a consignment of cattle. Will was well browned up and said his health was much better.

Charles Chervalier has recently sold his farm in French Lake township to Victor Lowrey of Duluth, consideration $6,500.

Prof C. M. King was on the sick list last Monday and was unable to hear his classes but was out Tuesday morning.

Elder Higgins held a service at the Day school house, Monday evening; he was escorted out there by Druggist Williams and student Smith who remained during the service. It is a matter of gratulation that these young gentlemen are taking an interest in religious meetings. It is expected the Elder will spend the week there and at Silver Creek, laboring with the good people at those places.

The Ladies of our village have announced a sociable and Ice cream supper in the church, Thursday evening of this week.

We are informed that the Flat-House here is to be closed on the 15th instant and that Mr. Zevmer, the agent here, will leave. We are sorry to part with him.

ROCKFORD RIPPLES.

Weather is very dry. Badly in need of rain farmers are making preparations for planting corn.

There will be Memorial service at the G. A. R. Hall, by Rev. E. J. Purdy of the Episcopal church, on Sunday, May 24th, at 10 o'clock.

The Sacrament of confirmation will be administered by Bishop Gilbert, at the Bleck Memorial church, on the 26th, of May, at 4 P. M.

Bert Lewis and F. Powers started for Montana, Monday. Success boys.

H. Leuderbaugh caught 6 young wolves the other day. Got the old one in the hole, but could not overtake her, with a shovel, she was seven feet ahead of him. It will bring the nice little sum of 78 dollars.

C. M. Johnson took the Soo, Tuesday to the city, returning via. Delano. After school is out at Delano probably Chester will patronize the Soo on his return trip.

J. Benner visited the city, on Thursday,

C. W. Rader & Co. are putting up a wind mill for H. L. Dorman, near Loretto. Any one wanting a good well and wind mill will make money by calling on Rader Bros.

Patrick Ryan returned from the vicinity of Elk River, doing some farming. I guess Pat likes R. R's. to farming yet.

J. R. Ames took in the flour city, Thursday.

The fish law is out now there will be no more use for spy glasses until next spring.

WATERTOWN WAYS.

The fair, last Monday was well attended considering the time of year.

Mr. Peter Sexton, son-in-law of Mr. V. Heck, came up from Minneapolis and spent Sunday with his friends in Watertown.

Professor F. I. Mason, of Arlington, spent Sunday and Monday with his family in Watertown.

Mr. F. L. Halgren, of Montrose was visiting friends in Watertown on fair day, we acknowledge a pleasant call from him and invite the gentleman to call again.

Mr. Linn Cunningham, one of Watertown's old citizens, and brother of George Cunningham, of this village, was visiting his brother a few days, this week.

Mr. C. G Halgren made a business trip to the cities this week on Tuesday and returned on Wednesday.

Mr. Buchweitz, Norwood's genial machine and hardware merchant was doing business in Watertown on Monday.

Rev. J. R. Davies purchased a fine colt, last Monday, to drive with his other horse his drives being to long for one horse to stand.

Miss Dinnil, of Minneapolis, has been visiting with Mr. C. Zeyer's family for several days the past week.

Mrs. A. J. Truwe and family and Mrs. Hebeisen and family of Hamburg have been visiting with their parents Mr. and Mrs. Louis Krause the past week.

The choir are practicing their pieces for decoration day and we may look for some good music about that time.

Wedding cards are out for the marriage of Miss Mary Dressler to Mr. George U. Miller on the 20th of this month at 3 o'clock P. M. in the Swedish church, both parties have lived in Watertown, most, if not all their lives and are well known to all.

At the special school meeting, last Saturday evening it was voted to prepare the old truck house in shape for another school room and donate it to the district for that purpose, also to levy a tax on the district for means enough to put on a new coat of plaster on the school building and put in new windows and a new coat of paint on the inside.

The foundation for the new town hall has been completed and every thing is now ready for the carpenters as soon as the lumber gets here.

The M. E. Sunday school has ordered a new banner for the school which will probably be on hand in time for the school to carry on decoration day.

Mr. S. B. Kohler has been reroofing his dwelling house this week.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

Washington, D. C., May 8, 1891.

Well, well! can it be that after all of Mr. Blaine's jingoism as to our rights in Behring Sea that we are to humbly back down? That's the talk here now. According to my information, Mr. Blaine has discovered that we have nothing to arbitrate and that Russia never set up any such claims as he has done when she was the owner of Alaska, and does not now recognize that the United States has any such rights. As the story goes, as soon as Mr. Blame saw that we had not the slighest show under the proprosed arbitration he began to search for a hole to crawl out of with as little loss of dignity as possible. He began then to lay wires for a triple international agreement between the United States. Russia and England, for the prevention of the indiscriminate killing of seals in Behring Sea, and now, it is said, that pending further negotiations no seals are to be taken at all this season. Officials at the State and Treasury department refuse to either confirm or deny this story.

A whole week has gone by without a new and entirely different statement from the preceeding one of the condition of the Treasury having been given out. Last week there were three or four of them. Ium is the word now, while the Secretary and his expert accountants are preparing the figures for the presto-veto-change statement, which if it meets with Mr. Harrison's approval, and of that there's little doubt, is to be given to the public on the first of June. The intention is to follow republican preceedent by manipulating the trust funds in the monthly statement of the national debt in such a way as to show a large available surplus where practically none exists.

The first mutterings of a storm in the ranks of the republican party are being heard here. So far Mr. Harrison has apparently had it all his own way in his own march towards a second nomination, and none of his party have seen fit to attempt to make any organized opposition to him, but squalls are ahead for him. This week Representative Farquhar, of New York, has openly stated here his belief that Harrison could not possibly be elected, and an Indiana republican of prominence has said that Harrison could not carry that State. These are straws showing the drift of republican sentiment.

The Blaine men cannot be kept down much longer; they hate Harrison, and every time that Russel Harrison's newspaper in its silly attempts to make glory for Harrison casts a slur upon Blaine that hatred is intensified. These men would rather see a democrat elected than have to stand Harrison for another four years, and, mark the prediction, in six months they will be shouting that sentiment from the house tops. Mr. Blaine may be perfectly willing that Mr. Harrison should be renominated, although I have serious doubts of it, but his friends are not. They hope, of course to nominate Blaine, whether he consents or not, but they are determined, as will be seen before long, that in any event Harrison shall not be the nominee, if they can prevent it, and they think they can. There's music ahead as sure as you are born, and with good management the democrats can march to victory keeping time with it.

If the opinion of leading members of the party as expressed here lately have any influence with the democratic caucus of the House of Representatives the next speaker of the House will certainly be a southern man. These gentlemen have argued that the South is entitled either to the Speakership or to a place on the national ticket, and that it would be better politics to give it the Speakership. If a Southern man is to be Speaker it will be either Representative Crisp, of Georgia; Representative McMillin, of Tennessee, or Representative Mills, of Texas. Either one of them would suit me, therefore I can speak of their chances without prejudice. Mr. Mills was largely in the leading a month before the adjournment of Congress, but it now looks as if Mr. Crisp was ahead, and were it not for the liquor dealers national organization, which it is stated here, will bitterly fight him, I should select him as the winner. Mr. McMillin has surprised a good many people by developing more strength than he had been credited with; but his only hope of winning is in the event of a protracted struggle between the two first named candidates, which many shrewed observers are now predicting as certain to occur.

Government officials decline to express any opinion for publication on the report of the New Orleans grand jury on the lynching of the Italians, but privately the universal verdict is "just what I expected," and many people have recalled the words of Edmunds Burke—"A whole people cannot be indicted."

Senators Brice, Vilas, Hill and Gordon will sit in the rear row of seats on the democratic side when the Senate meets next December.

Venezuela has accepted the reciprocity proposision made to her by this government.

Pensions Issued In April.

Washington, May 7.—A statement prepared at the Pension Office shows that during the month of April, last, there were issued 31,515 pension certificates, of which 8,348 classes the first payments on which aggregated $3,874,815. The average first payment to each pensioner was $122.83. Of the total number of certificates issued 11,167 were under the act of June 27, 1890.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

BOB INGERSOL has been tickling the ears of audiences in Minneapolis and St. Paul this week with his lecture on Shakespeare. The Globe accuses him of not having repeated it enough times to have it learned, but says the peroration was grand.

THE aggregate wealth of the United States is nearly sixty times what it was sixty years ago, when the figures were $1,000,000,000. Now they are $55,200,000,000.

IT is rather funny that the governments of Europe have spent so much money preparing for war, that not one of them is now able financially to enter upon active hostilities.

IN the society of the Red Cross a special archæological department is forming, the mission of which will be to prevent the vandalistic destruction of old monuments and works of art in time of war.

GERMANY has something a great deal worse than American pork. It is the fact that at least two million of her husbands and fathers are working for wages which average less than $150 per year, and wages are going down instead of up.

MRS. ALMIRA LOCKE, mother of David R. Locke (Petroleum V. Nasby), who has been living in poverty and misery in a small house in Wheeling, W. Va., has been granted a pension on account of her late husband, Nathaniel Locke, having served in the war of 1812.

IN a house in Lawrence, Mass., are a number of interesting relics of an old-time Bostonian, with several years' records of the Boston post office. The latter date back to 1802, and show the curious fact that then ten letters received in a single day was a good mail, while on some days but one incoming letter was recorded.

THE entire production of the precious, semi-precious stones and ornamental minerals in the United States during the year 1889 was $188,817. Of this amount $53,175 was agatized and jasperized wood, $23,675 turquois stones, and $14,000 quartz. Diamonds to the value of $1,006,716 were cut during the year in the lapidary works in New York and Massachusetts.

IT is little things of life that tax one's nerves most, as a stalwart youth of Leavenworth, Kan., found when he accepted a wager that he could not stand a quart of water dropped into his open hand drop by drop from a height of three feet. Before five hundred drops had fallen into his hand he almost cried with pain and said he had enough. After a little water had fallen each drop seemed to crush his hand, and a blister in the center of it was the result.

KEELEY, the motor man, explains the latest cause of delay, as follows: "I am making a sympathetic harness for the polar terrestrial force—first, by exciting the sympathetic concordant force that exists in the corpuscular interstitial domain, which is concordant to it; and, second, after the concordance is established, by negatizing the thirds, sixths and ninths of this concordance, thereby inducing high velocities with great power by intermittent negation, as associated with the dominant thirds."

A CORE saw, intended for boring out barrels from solid logs, was recently completed at Taunton, Mass., for a company in Lacrosse, La. The saw is made of wrought iron, cylindrical in shape, and steel cutter teeth are distributed about its edge. It was expected that the saw would cut a barrel per minute, and during a trial of the first machine a core 10¼ inches in diameter and 21½ inches long was bored out in thirty seconds. A mill for the manufacture of barrels by these machines is to be built in Louisiana.

A NEW pedagogical industry has arisen. In San Francisco, according to the Alta, there are a number of teachers of American who command good prices. Foreigners who have been taught English in the schools of their native land find themselves completely at sea on their arrival here, and many of them who can afford it employ teachers to instruct them in learning the peculiar idioms employed by the Americans. The localisms, especially, they find most perplexing to master, and the teacher must be well up on all the mannerisms and slang expressions of the day.

AN interesting incident in connection with President Harrison's visit to Atlanta was his meeting with Mr. George Cook, an elderly gentleman and a well-known piano manufacturer of Boston. The grandfather of Mr. Cook was the Capt. Cook who saved the life of Gen. William Henry Harrison from the Indians at the battle of Tippecanoe. Mr. Cook and Mrs. Cook had been spending a few days with Gov. Bullock, and on invitation of Mayor Hemphill went up the road to meet the president. The meeting of the two gray-haired grandsons was very cordial, and they enjoyed a pleasant chat.

IN a little log house near Weasnersville, Pa., live four wealthy and aged bachelor brothers who are veritable women-haters. They are Benjamin, Michael, Nathan and Samuel Kunkel, respectively eighty, seventy-one, seventy and sixty-one years old. They own a valuable farm and have $40,000 out at interest, but still they do all their own farmwork and housework unaided, and will not consent to employ a woman in any capacity or have any association whatever with the gentler sex. Two sisters formerly lived with them, but are now dead. They shunned men as their brothers do women, and never married.

LATER.

Forest Fires.

WEST SUPERIOR, Wis., May 12.—Forest fires in the vicinity of Superior, which have existed the past two days, have assumed a formidable aspect and to-day the destruction to property was very large.

South Superior had a narrow escape this morning. Business was suspended and fully 400 men were in line at noon fighting the flames. The conditions were good for the swift spread of the fire. The wind blew a gale from the West, and the underbrush and leaves were as dry as tinder. A huge pile of fuel at Sager and Gummis' brick yard took fire, and the same moment lumber piles in the vicinity of the La Belle wagon factory caught also. The heat was intense, and the smoke arose in immense clouds.

The city fire department was summoned, and soon 3,000 feet of hose was out, and the battle for the preservation of the manufacturing district was pressed with renewed vigor. At 3 p. m. the danger was passed, and South Superior was saved from destruction by a very narrow margin.

Superior is, in fact surrounded by fire on the one side and the lake on the other. Word reached the city to-night that the Omaha bridge at the American river is burned, while to the northeast and in the logging district on the South Shore of Lake Superior there is much destruction of standing pine and of logs already cut.

DULUTH, May 12.—Forest fires raged to-day in nearly every direction from Duluth, and a large amount of damage was done. The Duluth fire department was called to Lester Park this afternoon and it took a hard fight to save the place from entire destruction. The department was successful in its efforts and saved the village from any serious damage. It is reported that the houses of several farmers have been burned down.

The Omaha trains are delayed in Duluth on account of the burning of 100 feet af the bridge over the Amnicon river at Hawthorn. The Northern Pacific road from here to Ashland suffered very severely.

ASHBURY GREEN, a colored man was sentenced to the penitentiary at Centerville, Md., for 21 years for assaulting a white woman, was taken from the jail on the 12th by a mob and lynched. He was hung from a limb of a tree in the jail yard.

AWFUL DEVASTATION.

A Tremendous Area in Michigan and Other States Swept by Forest Fires.

DETROIT, Mich., May 12.—The hoped for security from Sunday night's rain did not materialize for the panic-stricken inhabitants of the burned district. Some idea of the enormity of the fire district can be gained from the fact that almost any two of the dozen counties now filled with fire is as large as the whole state of Rhode Island. The Toledo, Ann Arbor & Northern Michigan railroad has been obliged to abandon all attempts to run cars north of the Clare county line. A freight train and crew had a narrow escape from cremation Monday morning. The ties in many places were so badly burned that the rails spread when the train went over. Three of the train men had badly blistered faces. The wind shifted late Sunday night and drove the battle line of fire to the southwest and into Newaygo Mecosta and Oceana counties. Cook's station and Barton, both in the line of the fire, have not been heard from and are supposed to be destroyed. The sparks struck a barn in Lilly early Monday morning and shortly after set fire to three other buildings. The 200 people did all in their power to stop the flames but were unable to save anything. Every building is now in ashes. Everything in Park City, another pine woods town, has gone, the people losing everything. The railroad fences and track from Park City to Otia or Duigrian station is said to be gone, and Otia, a village of 300 inhabitants, is known to be wiped out. West Troy, a few miles north of Otia, has been environed by fire since early Monday morning and is supposed to be in ashes. Reports from Cadillac, Wexford county, state that the inhabitants of all the villages in the county have been out fighting fire for the past three days and many of the smaller places are wiped off the face of the earth. Where Nivarna and Fremont on the Flint & Pere Marquette road once stood there is nothing now but piles of ashes. The village of Lake has not been heard from since its last appeal for help Sunday. Seas of fire are sweeping through the woods near Red Cloud, Newaygo county, while more than 100 miles away across the state the little hamlet of Taft is in a gulf of flame. Monton, in Wexford county, above Cadillac, is cut off from communication with the outside world. The latest news from Traverse City is to the effect that the entire population is out fighting fire. Millions upon millions of logs are burning all over the center of the state, and at last reports Osterhout & Fox's $250,000 plant and lumber yard was on fire.

IN PENNSYLVANIA.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., May 12.—News has been received here through Erie railway trainmen of the destructive work done by a peculiar forest fire near Randolph, Cattaraugus county, on the western division of the Erie. The fire started in a large tract of old bark, where the dead hemlock, felled and standing, afforded material on which it fed and spread with fearful rapidity. Millions of feet of lumber and thousands of cords of bark were destroyed in a short time. The Alleghany Lumber Company alone lost 20,000,000 feet of lumber and between 15,000 and 20,000 cords of bark. This will be a money loss of between $150,000 and $200,000 with no insurance. Smaller concerns in the burned district lost in proportion, the total loss being estimated at over $300,000 within an area of a few miles.

IN WISCONSIN.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., May 12.—Evening News specials show that the total damage done by the north Wisconsin forest fires was nearly $500,000.

LABOR TROUBLES.

Eighteen Men Wounded in a Riot at Denver—Italians Start a Fatal Row in Belmont, O.

DENVER, Col., May 12.—A terrible fight took place Monday afternoon between a party of striking brickmakers and a gang of colored men who had been engaged by F. N. Davis, the proprietor of the brick yard, to take their places. Davis, his son and seven negroes, all heavily armed, were going to work when they were intercepted by a band of strikers and ordered back. Davis warned the strikers to get out of the way. The latter refused, and Davis and his men opened fire. Two of the strikers were mortally wounded. Thomas Kelly was shot in the back and died in a few minutes. John Redenear was also shot in the back and cannot live. Ten other men were slightly wounded. Davis and his men when arrested did not deny that they shot to kill, but claimed that it was in self-defense, after they had been attacked by strikers. Davis says the strikers were armed, but the men deny it.

WHEELING, W. Va., May 12.—There was a terrible riot between Italian and American laborers in the employ of Alexander Graham, a Belmont county (O.) pike contractor, at Pipe Creek Monday morning, which resulted in one man being killed and two others fatally wounded and from six to ten more or less hurt from cuts and blows. Pipe Creek is 10 or 12 miles from Bellaire, and there being no other communication than a country road the details cannot be had. It is known that the trouble was inaugurated by an Italian striking an American over the head with an iron bar.

THREE MEN KILLED.

Double Collision at Shepherd, Mich.—Log Cars Run Away Down a Grade.

DETROIT, Mich., May 12.—A special from Shepherd, Mich., says: Sunday night an extra freight from the north approaching the yard here ran into fourteen loaded log cars, wrecking the engine and caboose. The men on this train jumped and escaped injury. The force of the collision started thirteen log cars down the grade through the Shepherd yard to a mile south of Shepherd, where the rest of the train was being loaded with logs. In the collision which followed three men were killed and thirteen wounded.

A Fool and His Money.

FREEPORT, Ill., May 12. — James Crouch, of Stockton, Ill., a young railroad man, was injured in a wreck on the Kansas City road last April. He sued the road for damages and a few days ago received a verdict for $4,000 in his favor. He secured the money, paid his lawyer $1,030 and came to Freeport with the balance in his pocket. While here he fell in with a number of gamblers and the result of their short acquaintance was a game of draw poker. Just one hour after the railroad man had bought his first chip he was skinned out of $1,709.

PERISHED BY FIRE.

A Train Surrounded by Flames in a Burning Pennsylvania Forest and Seven Persons Are Known to Have Lost Their Lives—Many Others Terribly Burned.

COUDERSPORT, Pa., May 12.—The pretty little lumber-farming towns of Austin, Costello, Galeton and Moore's Run, in Potter county, are on the verge of a panic, two especially being threatened with annihilation from fires that seem to form an impenetrable wall on every side. For several days the skies have been lighted up with fires apparently in every direction, but little fears were entertained by people living in the towns, as those threatened were farmers in the country districts and the lumber camps in the midst of the blazing forests. In spite of every effort, however, the flames crept steadily, in snaky lines of smoke and flame, toward the helpless towns until it was seen the people must fight back the flames or have their very houses burned down over their heads.

At Moore's Run, on the pretty Sinnemahoning road, a trainload of seventy-five willing men who had been sent out from Austin Sunday night had been fighting back the fire by every conceivable means. They made trenches, piled up earth and lighted back fires, but were finally obliged to retreat. The men hastily boarded the train and started to make a run to another point, when it was found they were hemmed in by the forest fires on one side and a huge skidway of logs on the other. It was finally decided to dash past the burning skidway, and the engineer and firemen, with faces covered with dampened cloths and their hands and arms wrapped in wool, mounted the little engine and pulled out through the wall of fire. The seventy-five exhausted men gathered in groups on the flats for protection, or lay on their faces on the floor. As the blazing furnace of logs was approached the heat became unbearable and the smoke so blinding and stifling the men were obliged to cover their mouths with cloths.

Just opposite the million feet of burning logs, where the heat and smoke and flame were the greatest, a terrible thing occurred. The engineer had forgotten that such great heat would surely spread the rails and he pulled the throttle wider in the hope of sooner escaping from the torment of heat and smoke. Then there was a lurch, an ominous heaving and a shriek of despair as the train toppled over into the hell of fire beneath. A scene ensued never to be forgotten by those who escaped, though every man will bear to his grave a mark of that awful moment. The cars caught fire like so many paper playthings, and the men within half-blinded and scarcely realizing anything except that they were being slowly roasted to death, struggled fearfully to regain the track where safety lay, for a time at least. Those uninjured from the fall and only smarting from the pain of intense heat bravely turned their burned, blackened hands to aid their more unfortunate fellows.

At this hour it is impossible to secure details, though enough is known of the scene that followed the hurling of the struggling mass of men into the furnace of flames to say its like had never occurred before. Superintendent Badger, superintendent of the Sinnemahoning Valley railroad, was in charge of the relief train and had worked the hardest of all to save the properties of others. When the train ditched and rolled over so suddenly he must have been injured so as to be unable to help himself, and owing to the smoke and panic he was not found until too late—jammed in the wreck, he had evidently slowly burned to death. It is known that six others also miserably perished at once or died soon afterward and thirty others of the party were badly burned, many probably fatally, owing to their inhaling the flames that seemed to fairly spring into their faces. Seven others of the party are missing and their fate is unknown, though they are likely to be found in the charred wood of the logs or train. Relief parties started for the scene as soon as the fearful news spread, many male relatives of the men injured insisting on accompanying the train, though they will hardly be able to reach the place of the wreck unless the fires have burned themselves out.

The body of the superintendent has been found burned to a crisp and the entire party would have perished in the burning train or forest fire had they not immersed themselves in a creek. The fires have been raging forty-eight hours, twelve solid miles of lumber in one district have already been burned.

Owing to the great devastation done to everything in the way of the fire communication is badly interrupted, and it is impossible to learn the names of the men burned or those still missing. As to the damage, it is known 40,000,000 feet of hemlock logs and timber and 25,000 cords of valuable bark have already been destroyed, and the fires are raging without any appreciable diminution.

The people are praying for rain, as it seems nothing but a drenching will quench the flames that have grown so fierce they must either be extinguished by the floods of heaven or burn out for lack of material. A million beacon lights seem to be burning from every mountain and hillside, and the air is so oppressive that many workers faint from exhaustion and are dragged away from a flame that has done nothing as yet but steadily advance.

CONSUL CORTE RECALLED.

Rudini Wants Full Particulars of the New Orleans Affair.

ROME, May 12.—The Italian consul at New Orleans, Sig. Corte, has been notified to return home in order to furnish the Italian government with an exact account of the events which have taken place since the murder of Chief of Police Hennessy. Vice Consul Pomo, of the Italian consulate of New York, will act for Consul Corte in the interim. It is believed here that Italy is seeking to obtain the moral support of its allies in the triple alliance in the position it has taken against the United States.

Lynchers to Be Prosecuted.

WALLA WALLA, Wash., May 12.—The military authorities of Fort Walla Walla have arrested eight enlisted men charged with being accessory to the lynching of Gambler Hunt April 24. When it became known that the arrests had been made six other men deserted Sunday night. The provost guard is now in search of the deserters. It is rumored that a number of other arrests of soldiers suspected of complicity in the lynching will be made soon. The state grand jury is still in session, and it is stated that a number of soldiers will be indicted for murder.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS

Big Fire at Winona.

A fire at Winona destroyed the entire plant of the Schrothe & Ahrens Mill Company. The mill, warehouse and three blocks of lumber were burned. The fire started in the wheel pit in the planing mill and spread rapidly, being only stopped at the boundaries of the lumber yards. A large number of window-sashes and doors were stored in the warehouse. The loss would approximate $100,000; insurance between $40,000 and $50,000.

Coming to an End.

A German doctor at Northfield says that the world is coming to an end in 1901, on the 17th day of April. He says that the end will be preceded by divers earthquakes, wars, moons, and other signs of a like sensational character. Another most startling statement that he makes is that in three years a most terrible war will take place, and entire nations will be effaced from the world's face.

Ten Thousand Dollars Damages Asked.

Last summer a man by the name of Hendrickson was killed by the cars about 12 miles from Litchfield while crossing the track. It was thought the man was intoxicated, as a broken whisky bottle was found in the wagon. The crossing was a very dangerous one and an elevated bridge has since been placed there. The widow of Hendrickson has sued the Great Northern company for $10,000 damages.

Electricity vs. Steam.

The first experiment in electric railways in Minnesota outside of city passenger traffic is to be made between Stillwater and St. Paul, 24 miles. The franchise for the road has been granted to Chauncey P. Gregory, of Stillwater, by the commissioners of Washington county. It is intended to have the road in operation for both freight and passenger traffic by October 1.

Profit in Oats Now.

All the farmers for miles around Northfield were hauling their oats to market on account of the high prices. They had kept the grain stored all winter, and were now selling for fifty-five cents per bushel. Oats last fall brought only from fourteen to fifteen cents, and the oats were stored in view of the advance which has arrived.

The Alloting Begins.

Harry S. Morris, who is to have charge of the additional allotments on the Sisseton Indian reservation, passed through Morris the other day on his way to the agency to begin the work of alloting. This work would require about four weeks, after which the surplus lands on the reserve would be opened to white settlement.

A Land-Mark Burned.

The old stone house on St. Anthony avenue, in St. Paul, and the old log barn near it have been burned. The old stone house was the second dwelling house erected in this section of the country. The house was a rendezvous for the pioneers in early days, and Gen. Sibley made a number of treaties with the Indians there.

Is Now a City.

Warren, in Marshall county, is now a city. The first charter election has taken place and the following ticket was elected: Mayor, L. L. Amberson; aldermen, Guy A. Aubot, W. N. Powell, August Lundgren; recorder, A. B. Nelson; justices, J. P. Easton, John Keenan; constable, E. Dady; treasurer, K. J. Taralsth.

A Kitten with Two Bodies.

A cat owned by Conrad Scherer, of Winona, gave birth the other day to a kitten with two distinct bodies grown together, eight legs and but one head. The kitten died almost immediately, and he preserved the body in alcohol. He talked of sending it to the dime museum in Minneapolis.

The Winona Purses.

At a meeting of the fair association at Winona the following purses were decided upon for the June races:

Dyspepsia. There is a gentleman at Malden-on-the-Hudson, N. Y., named Captain A. G. Pareis, who has written us a letter in which it is evident that he has made up his mind concerning some things, and this is what he says:

"I have used your preparation called August Flower in my family for seven or eight years. It is constantly in my house, and we consider it the best remedy for Indigestion, and Constipation we Indigestion. have ever used or known. My wife is troubled with Dyspepsia, and at times suffers very much after eating. The August Flower, however, relieves the difficulty. My wife frequently says to me when I am going to town, 'We are out Constipation of August Flower, and I think you had better get another bottle.' I am also troubled with Indigestion, and whenever I am, I take one or two teaspoonfuls before eating, for a day or two, and all trouble is removed." ®

A BOY HERO.

In heartless Paris, which to foreign eyes
Seems made of mirrors, gas-lig t, and display,
A splendid building's walls began to rise,
Ascending stone by stone from day to day.

High and more high the pile was builded well,
And scores of laborers were busy there,
When suddenly a fragile staging fell,
And two strong workmen swung aloft in air,

Suspended by their hands to one slight hold,
That bent and cracked beneath their sudden weight:
One worn with toil, and growing gray and old;
One a mere boy, just reaching man's estate,

Yet with a hero's soul. Alone and young,
Were it not well to yield his single life,
On which no parent leaned, no children clung,
And save the other to his babes and wife?

He saw that ere deliverance could be brought
The frail support they grasped must surely break,
And in that shuddering moment's flash of thought
He chose to perish for his comrade's sake.

With bravery such as heroes seldom know,
"'Tis right," he said, and loosing his strong grip,
Dropped like a stone upon the stones below,
And lay there dead, the smile still on his lip.

What though no laurels grow his grave above,
And o'er his name no sculptured shaft may rise?
To the sweet spirit of unselfish love,
Was not his life a glorious sacrifice?

STORY OF A WRECK.

His Little Dot and Yet Not His Own Child.

"You will be playing Juliet before you are twenty, little one," I said, as Dot came running into the greenroom one evening.

"By Jove! she is great," said another.

"Best actress in the company and minds her own business, too," said the crusty old stage manager. The exclamations, mingled with caresses, were showered upon the head of one of the brightest and cleverest child prodigies who are playing upon the stage to-day.

Little Dot had just come off the scene. She was a great success in the play that was running at the Amphion at that time, and her performance that evening seemed even better than usual.

A big roun l of applause attested the appreciation of the audience, and when she came into the greenroom to kiss papa good-night before going home with her nurse she was warmly greeted by every one there, for we all loved the dear little girl as well as admired her genius. Dot's father was Gus Mervin, the low comedian of the theater. They made a strange contrast, these two. Gus was short and very stout. His beardless face, lined and wrinkled by the contortions that had amused the public for twenty-five years, loose, ugly mouth and sandy hair, could never have possessed any claims to beauty, while the child was very lovely with her big, hazel eyes and golden brown hair.

"Good night, my little one," Gus said, running his red fingers through Dot's crisp curls; "sleep soundly, and don't dream of new parts."

"I love to dream of new parts," said the child. "Papa, shall I really play Juliet when I am twenty?"

"You won't if you don't grow," replied Gus, laughing, "and if you don't sleep, you won't grow, so run along with Susan." So Dot after kissing us all good night was wrapped up in her fur coat and carried away by her careful nurse.

"All ready for the third act," screamed the call boy and the scramble for "props" and places began.

Neither Gus nor I were on again until the last act and we usually indulged in a little smoke and chat during our wait. He came in my dressing-room to-night as usual, but sat silently smoking his pipe and gazing abstractedly at the dingy ceiling. Gus and I were old friends and I was used to his long fits of silence, so I said nothing and busied myself at my dressing table, putting things to rights and touching up a refractory eyebrow or so.

"Frank, old man," he said at last, "I want to talk to you about Dot."

"So, it's Dot you've been thinking about all this time," I replied. "Well, I don't blame you, Gus. She is the sweetest little tot I ever knew, on or off, and by far the cleverest child in the business. Why, it is perfectly wonderful the knowledge that child has of stage business," I continued, warming to my subject. "Last night old Davy missed an important cue and got completely rattled—couldn't think of a word. Dot was up back—business with the flowers you know—but she walked down stage, spoke the line for him—which happened to be my cue—whispered the next line in the old fellow's ear, and then turned up stage for her business with me. I don't believe a soul in front noticed anything wrong but Dot saved that scene and perhaps old Davy's position for him. You would think she had been playing ten years instead of ten months."

"That is true," said Gus, "she needs but little teaching."

"There's where blood tells," I continued; "she has got your twenty-five years of hard work behind her, and I remember your wife before Dot was born. Poor Alice was one of the prettiest and neatest soubrettes in the business. She was a great loss to the stage, old man, as well as to you, but she has given us Dot in her place."

"Frank, old friend, I am going to tell you something. Dot is not my own child or poor Alice's either, for that matter. It isn't a very long story and I will tell it to you to-night if you've time to listen."

"Go ahead," said I, closing the door. "The act isn't half through yet."

"You remember my wife you say, a sweet, delicate, little creature, too fragile by half for such a life as ours. I don't know what she ever saw in me, but she loved me, and married me, and I tried hard to make the rough path a little smoother for her tender feet to travel.

"Money didn't come as easily then as it does now, but we got along very well. We were playing in the Orleans the winter Dot was born, not this Dot, but our little Dot, Frank," looking up with tears in his honest eyes.

"That was the happiest year of my life," he continued. "I was making enough to run the little home and take care of Alice and the baby.

"I tell you this life of ours teaches a man to prize a home if he ever has one, and if he has a wife and baby in it and money enough to keep things going, he doesn't want much else in this world.

"Our season closed in April and Alice was anxious to get back to New York. Summer was coming on, and she thought the baby would be better north, so about the first of May we started by rail for New York.

"I remember now the strange feeling of depression I had when leaving New Orleans, but I tried to throw it aside as a foolish fancy. True, we had been very happy there, but I had my happiness, my life, my everything as I believed with me. It took nearly a week then to make the trip and the accommodations were not what they are now, but we managed to make ourselves very comfortable. Alice was a perfect genius at that.

"There was a sad-faced woman in black, occupying the berth next to us. She was a widow, we understood, not in very good circumstances, and going to New York with her baby, a little girl about as old as our Dot. The two babies were a bond of sympathy between the two women and in a few days she and Alice were chatting together like old friends.

"One night, after Alice and baby were soundly sleeping in their berth, I went forward into the smoker to have a pipe before going to bed. I had been smoking and engrossed with my thoughts over an hour when there came an awful crash. The car suddenly pitched forward and then, leaving the track, turned over on one side. You perhaps remember that terrible accident that occurred in West Virginia about ten years ago. It was the old story. Some one had blundered. We were running behind time and a local express had smashed into the rear car.

"No one in the smoker was seriously injured, and, after a little, I managed to make my way out and go in search of my wife.

"The sleeper was a wreck. Willing hands were already tearing away the wrecked car and rescuing the poor wretches within. The air seemed filled with moans and groans. Around me they were laying down the victims, some living, many dead—but Alice was not among them. I joined the band of workers and we toiled with the strength that God only gives to men at a time like that, tugging away at broken timbers and releasing many a poor soul from torture.

"'A woman and child both dead!' I heard a man near me exclaim. I sprang to his side. There lay my darling wife, her white face turned up to mine, but fixed, unmeaning, unrecognizing. Our little one lay in her arms, but the tiny head was crushed and the child's blood had stained the mother's hair and face.

"Little Dot was dead, but as I placed my cheek close to the mother's lips, I fancied I felt a faint touch of her breath.

"Willing hands bore them both into the open air and laid them on a rude couch. Gently I took the child from the unconscious mother's arms and laid her, wrapped in my coat, on the soft grass.

"By that time the work of rescuing was about over. Help had begun to arrive, and yet the scene if anything was more heartrending than before. Men were seeking for lost wives or striving, like myself, to rescue living ones. Mothers were calling for their babies, and little children vainly asking for their parents.

"Even in my own despair, my heart felt another pang when I saw them bring forward a black-robed figure with a little child at her breast, and lay them near us. The baby gave a little frightened cry and then seemed to sleep in the dead mother's arms. It was Alice's friend and her little one.

"A relief car and doctors arriving, Alice was made more comfortable and a physician came to examine her. I lived years in those few moments. He turned to me and said softly: 'She is injured internally, I fear. If she is conscious before the end, it is all we can hope for.'

"O, my God! how I did hope for it. How I prayed for it! Both to be taken from me, wife and child, without a farewell word or caress.

"Alice lay breathing faintly for a long time, and then the white lids lifted and I saw once more and for the last time in this world the violet eyes I loved so dearly.

"'Gus, dear,' she whispered, trying to raise one poor maimed hand to her heart. 'Where is little Dot? Why have you taken my baby away from me?'

"What should I say? What could I do? The sweet voice grew fainter and the blue eyes almost closed.

"'Gus,' she whispered, 'am I going to leave you? Am I going to die?'

"She must have read the answer in my face, for a faint sigh broke the fluttering breath.

"'Bring me Dot,' she murmured. 'Give me my baby before I die.'

"In utter despair I hid my face in my hands, when a faint cry came to my ears. It came from the little motherless babe lying near us. I lifted the child and laid her in Alice's arms.

"The child nestled its little head contendedly into the dying woman's neck and one little hand was laid on her lips. Alice was very weak now, and I had to bend over to catch the few last words.

"'My little Dot,' she murmured. 'Our little child, Gus, dear. She will stay with you and love you in my place.'

"She kissed the little hand and said: "'Love your father, Dot. Love him always.'

"She weakly motioned me to take the child, and with the baby on one arm and my dying wife in the other, I lay until the gray light came into the eastern sky and stole over Alice's face. But the light of life was fading from her eyes. I kissed her lips and felt her last breath on my face.

"My wife and child were together in Heaven and there was nothing left for me on earth but—I looked at the little child sleeping in my arms. Alice had given her to me, and she, like I, was alone in the world, and so she became my little daughter, and you know, Frank, how very dear she is to me."

Gus had finished his story. There were tears in my eyes as well as in his. Noble old Gus, how I admired his honest, generous, loving heart. But men say little to each other when the tears begin to fall, and so, with a silent hand shake we left the room.

The curtain was down and the last act ready to begin.—Ithelyn Friend, in Chicago Saturday Evening Herald.

Dedbroke—"I accosted a dozen prominent citizens whom I met on the street and asked each one for the loan of five dollars for a short time only. Would you believe that not one of the twelve had that paltry sum in his pocket?"—Harper's Bazar.

A JAPANESE RECLUSE.

He Separates Himself from His Kind, Yet Continues to Enjoy Life.

The owner of the farm-house had inherited it from his father. There was nothing very odd about this, even to our other-world notions of property, except that the father was still living, as hale and hearty as you please, in a little den at the foot of the garden. He was, in short, what is known as an inkyo, or one "dwelling in retirement"—a singular state, composed of equal parts of this world and the next; like dying in theory, and then undertaking to live on in practice. For an inkyo is a man who has formally handed in his resignation to the community, and yet continues to exist most enjoyably in the midst of it. He has abdicated in favor of his eldest son, and having put off all responsibilities, is filially supported in a life of ease and pleasure.

In spite of being no longer in society, the father was greedily social. As soon as he heard a foreigner had arrived he trotted over to call, and nothing would do but I must visit his niche early in the morning, before going away.

After breakfast, therefore, the son duly came to fetch me, and we started off through the garden. For his sire's place of retirement lay away from the road, toward the river, that the dear old gentleman might command a view of the peaks opposite of one of which, called the Etchiu Fuji from its conical form, he was dotingly fond.

The worthy virtuoso, as he was, met us at the door, and escorted us upstairs to see his treasures. The room was tapestried with all manner of works of art, of which he was justly proud, while the house itself stood copied from a Chinese model, for he was very classic. But I was pleased to find that above all his heart was given to the view. It was shared, as I also discovered, by the tea ceremonies, in which he a was proficient; such a mixture is man. But I believe the view to have been the deeper affection. While I was admiring it, he fetched from a cupboard a very suspicious-looking bottle of what turned out to be honey, and pressed a glass of it upon me. I duly sipped this not inappropriate liquor, since cordials savor of asceticism, and this one, being of natural decoction, peculiarly befitted a secular anchorite. Then I took my leave of one who, though no longer in the world, was still so charmingly of it.

The good soul claimed to be a widower, but such bereavement is no necessary preliminary to becoming a "dweller in retirement." Sometimes a man enters the inkyo state while he still has with him the helpmate of his youth, and the two go together to this aftermath of life. Surely a pretty return this of the honeymoon! Darby and Joan starting once more hand in hand, alone in this Indian summer of their love, as they did years ago in its springtide, before other generations of their own had pushed them on to less romantic parts: Darby come back from paternal cares to be once more the lover, and Joan from mother and grandam again become his girl.—Percival Lowell, in Atlantic.

DOMESTIC CONCERNS.

—Lettuce: Serve the lettuce in a salid bowl, with a French dressing of oil and vinegar, or undressed, allowing each person to prepare it for himself.

—Winter squash, may be baked, boiled or steamed till tender, scraped from the shell when done, mashed fine and seasoned well with butter and salt to taste.—Housekeeper.

—Baked Smelts: Cut off the heads. Split and dip the smelts in melted butter, and then in flour. Lay on a pan in the oven. Bake from eight to ten minutes. Serve with eighth of a lemon and cayenne.—Boston Budget.

—To make an impermeable glue, soak ordinary glue in water until it softens, and remove it before it has lost its primitive form. After this, dissolve it in linseed oil over a slow fire until it is brought to the consistency of a jelly. This glue withstands water.

—Solution for Cleaning Silver and Brass: To one quart of rainwater add two ounces of ammonia and three ounces of precipitated chalk. Bottle and keep well-corked, and shake before using. Wash silver in hot soapy water and rinse in clean, hot water.

—To Glaze Pastry: When the pastry is nearly baked, brush it over with the beaten yolk of an egg, and put back into the oven until it is glazed. This is for meat pies. To glaze the pastry of apple and berry pies, take half a cup of sweet, thick cream, and beat into it flour (sifted) enough to keep it from running. When the pastry is nearly baked, brush it over the cream glaze, and put back in the oven. Let it come to a light brown, or remove sooner, as you like.—Boston Budget.

—Boiled Eggs: This is perhaps the most popular mode of preparing them for the table. If dropped into boiling water and kept at the boiling point, two and one half minutes will suffice to render them of the consistency enjoyed by most persons. Three minutes will harden them a little more. Others drop them into boiling water, at once withdraw the sancepan from the fire, cover, and let stand just four minutes. Still another mode preferred by many is to place them over a quick fire in cold water, and as soon as it comes to a boil they are done.—Orange Judd Farmer.

—Apple Pudding: Pare and slice two quarts of tart apples. Stew them with a cup of boiling water until they can be beaten smooth with a spoon. Add the yolks of four eggs, well beaten, a tablespoonful of lemon-juice, and sugar to taste. Mix thoroughly, and bake half an hour in a hot oven. Draw the pudding to the edge of the oven and cover it with a meringue of the whites whipped to a stiff froth, with a tablespoonful of powdered sugar and a teaspoonful of lemon-juice. Leave it in the oven long enough to brown, and serve either hot or cold.—Ladies' Home Journal.

—Brilliant light makes even a scantily-furnished room look cheerful. But there are some people who know not how to make their lamps burn well. A lamp should be thoroughly cleaned every fortnight. The oil should be poured out of the fount, leaving no dregs on the bottom. The fount should then be washed in strong soap-suds, rinced in warm water, and dried. It should then be filled with fresh oil. The burner should be boiled in soda and water until the network that crosses it is freed from dirt and dust. If the wick has become clogged with the sediment, replace it with a new one.

TOQUES AND ROUND HATS.

Fresh Novelties in the Line of Fashionable Millinery.

The small toque of black lace, net, or tulle is considered appropriate with almost any costume, whether black or colored. It is worn alike by young and middle-aged women, the special difference existing in narrow strings of velvet or gold ribbon added at the back for those who are no longer young. A pretty toque of sheer black lace is edged with jet, and has two bands of spangled gold and silver around the lace crown. A pink ostrich pompon and high black aigrette trim the back.

Glace ribbons are on many of the new round hats. They are set in high wired loops in front or back, and fine wire is sewed invisibly in single ends of ribbon to keep them erect. This trimming does away with the low effect so long desired for round hats, though many of the largest size are mere plateaus of open straw lace, chip, or Leghorn mounted over a slight crown, which extends below, and holds the bandeau of flowers or ribbon that rests on the hair. A large hat with indented brim of gold and straw lace has a crown of black velvet leaves; great clusters of poppies, some red, others black, are set at the back, and high bows of pale green glace ribbon trim the front and back. Other hats with wide brims of open straw have a soft crown of embroidered faille, as one of maize-color wrought with silver and trimmed with silver wheat and silver bows. Maize-colored strings are set at the back.

A novelty is a rustic hat made entirely of natural-looking oats, trimmed with a brown bird and bows of brown velvet ribbon. Large Leghorn flats have soft crowns of ciel blue or rose pink crepe de Chine embroidered with gold and silver. A frill of point de Genes lace falls on the brim, which is turned up in the back, and trimmed there with yellow or pink roses.—Harper's Bazar.

Window-Seats.

Every one knows how delightful the deep window-seats are which are found in old stone houses in the country. It is very easy to arrange such seats before any window, and they make a very attractive part of the furniture if properly upholstered. In a sitting-room where there is a lack of closets, if these seats are made in some way to open, they make a very good stowaway place for various articles. The best form for them is a low, narrow divan shape, several inches lower than the bottom of the window. Chintz, rep or any material used in the upholstery of the room is suitable for covering them. The top should be stuffed with hair or some material to make a soft seat, and may be tufted. A simple valance, reaching to the ground, finishes the sides of the seats.—N. Y. Tribune.

Reason for Doubt.

A MEAN MAN.

How He Rendered His Enemy Helpless and Then Defied Him.

During the halcyon days of the roller skating rink I was in the ticket office of a rink in Louisville when a man came in and asked if he could hire the floor for one hour. It was about ten o'clock in the forenoon, and after some figuring he was told that he could have it for ten dollars.

"I want to bring a friend here and teach him to roll," he explained, "and I want it understood that no one is to raise a hand to help."

That was agreed to, and he paid the money and went away. When he returned, ten minutes later, he had his friend with him, and he selected one pair of rollers, strapped them to the man's feet, and after a little led him out to the center of the floor, where there was a single column leading up to the roof. Here he loosened his hold, stood back with folded arms, and said:

"James Burns, you are a cheat and a liar! You lied me out of fifty dollars a year ago!"

"Look here, Sam; what does this mean?" demanded the other, who was clinging to the post for support.

"It means that the hour for my revenge has come at last! James Burns, you are a scoundrel! Yes, sir; you are a contemptible, miserable wretch!"

"You—you must be crazy!" gasped the victim, as he recovered from a "slew" made by one of his feet.

"No, sir! Far from it! I planned this to get revenge. You are a low-lived, miserable cur! Words fail to express my contempt for you!"

The other made a move at him, but "slewed" right and left and came near going down. He got a new grip on the post, and stood there with his legs wobbling and trembling. The other steadfastly regarded him for a long minute, and then exclaimed:

"Liar, villifier, slanderer, I defy and spit upon you!"

He advanced and spat, and then turned on his heel and walked away. The other was so mad and helpless that he shed tears, and he offered an employe five dollars to come and help him sit down and get his skates off. This was against the bargain, however, and no one went near him. He got so mad that he decided to try it alone, but the instant he let go of the post one foot shot one way and the other in a contrary direction, and he came down like a block of stone. After ten minutes' work he got his skates off, and then he crawled across the floor on hands and knees. His companion had disappeared, but as he was ready to follow after him he waved his hand to us and said:

"I will hunt him! I will find him! I will skin him, and use his skin for fish bait to catch bullheads with!"—N. Y. Sun

A TRAGEDY IN HIGH LIFE.

Everything Was Right Except the Coming Down Part of It.

"You say you love my daughter?"

"Madly!"

The two men who stood facing each other at the moment when this brief conversation occurred were excellent specimens of American citizenship. The wealthy banker, Peter E. Gotrox, portly, suave and well groomed, and Jerolomon Harkinson, the inventor, poor as yet in this world's goods, but bearing on his brow the promise of great achievements.

"Harkinson," said the banker, "I was poor once myself. I respect the man none the less on account of his lack of money, but I can not throw my only daughter away on a man of no financial standing. You are an inventor. If within three months you shall have invented a machine, appliance or what not that is worth $50,000, Gladys shall be yours. I would gladly give you more time, but my wife is insisting every day upon my buying Gladys a prince."

For ninety weary days and an equal number of sleepless nights Jerolomon Harkinson toiled, until the product of his genius stood complete—a flying machine that positively would fly. Then he invited the banker to be his guest on the initial journey of the aerial queen.

Floating above the city at an elevation of 1,000 feet, the two men, the man of money and the man of genius clasped hands. For a moment not a word was spoken. Then the capitalist broke the silence:

"My boy," said, he "fame is yours. And fortune."

"And Gladys?"

"Yes. But it is growing late. Let us descend."

The inventor gasped and turned white.

"I—I'm dinged," he said in broken tones, "if I didn't forget all about that part of it. There is no descending attachment to the dod dasted machine!"—Indianapolis Journal.

An imitation of Nature

—that's the result you want to reach. With Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, you have it. They cleanse and renovate the whole system naturally. That means that they do it thoroughly, but mildly. They're the smallest in size, but the most effective—sugar-coated, easiest to take. Sick Headache, Bilious Headache, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, and all derangements of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels are prevented, relieved, and cured. Purely vegetable, perfectly harmless, and gently laxative, or an active cathartic, according to size of dose. As a Liver Pill, they've been imitated, but never equaled.

Before You Start

On a journey by sea or land, procure Hostetter's Stomach Bitters as a defense against traveler's nausea and climatic influences. Colic, cramps and dyspepsia don't stand the ghost of a chance against this paramount alterative and stomachic. Neither do malaria, kidney trouble, sick headache and biliousness.

causes derangement of the entire system, and begets diseases that are hazardous to life. Persons of costive habit are subject to Headache, Defective Memory, Gloomy Forebodings, Nervousness, Fevers, Drowsiness, Irritable Temper and other symptoms, which unfits the sufferer for business or agreeable associations. Regular habit of body alone can correct these evils, and nothing succeeds so well in achieving this condition as Tutt's Pills. By their use not only is the system renovated, but in consequence of the harmonious changes thus created, there pervades a feeling of satisfaction; the mental faculties perform their functions with vivacity, and there is an exhilaration of mind and body, and perfect heart's ease that bespeaks the full enjoyment of health.

DELANO DIARY.

--William Gross has had his name placed on Uncle Sam's pension list and is to have $12 a month hereafter.

—What has become of the additional street lamps our council talked about getting. As the town grows more are needed.

—Mr. Shrader, the elder, is improving his property by constructing a picket fence about his house and garden.

--Delano's sodawater fountain's is now in running order and supplying customers with as good a quality as city stores do.

—Mrs. Kaspohl on the Montrose road has her new farm residence up and enclosed and will soon move in. She will have a nice place.

—Pasturage is getting short about Delano and it is necessary to go to the country, in some cases quite a distance to find good feed for animals.

—The county officers of Wright county set a good example. On Arbor day each one planted a tree on the courthouse square, and each tree so planted was duly labeled.—Carver Free Press.

--Fair day was a fine one and at 8:30 in the morning many teams and people had already arrived. Considerable stock was sold at fair prices for beef Spring pigs went for $1.00 a head and less.

—Messrs F. H. Lindsley, C. H. Vorse, and lawyer Cristie, of St. Paul, put in a couple of days at the County seat this week concerning the settling up of the Breed Atwater and Payte business.

—Mrs. Julia Schwirene and family were at work this week planting their large garden. They will have vegetables enough for the city market judging from the size of the garden and care put upon it.

—Cal. Stewart Sr. has sold his farm near Otto's to Mr. Wandersee, and has purchased the old homestead of his father, 126 acres, adjoining his old place, and now has one of the finest farms about here. Cal Stewart, Sen, with his family resides on their farm in Rockford Township.

—The Breed, Atwater and Payte property in Delano, has been put in shape so that persons desiring can acqure title to it when purchasing. There was about $10000. worth according to appraisal. Over $5000. worth was sold at auction, and over $1700.00 taxes was paid this week.

—Farmers living near town are cleaning the manure out of the allies in pretty good shape. They are learning that it pays to haul it onto their farms, and they are doing so, more and more each year. This is much better than dumping it in a heap in the next block to the school house.

--The Chaska City council has passed on ordinance, which we saw in the Valley Herald authorizing the police to take care of such horses as are left tied on the streets for too long a time, at the expense of the owner, who shall also pay the officers fee of $1.00. Some law like that would sometimes be handy in Delano.

--Street Commissioner, O'Leary has fixed up Watertown street this week in a way to be long remembered, by those having occasion to use it. If the R. R. Company were earnestly requested to remove the piles that now assist in supporting the bridge across the road, from their present position and widen the roadway another improvement could be made.

—At a meeting of the stockholders of the Cereal Factory held in the Council room at the city hall, on Monday evening, there were present Schaffer, Buckley, Maxfield, Lindsley, J. W., Lindsley, F. H., Catlin, Swedeback, Erickson, Cramer and Arup. The soliciting committee reported 282 shares as having been sold. Mr. Wescott had been to Minneapolis and procured the very best figures possible on machinery and reported that the cost of the entire outfit would be about as follows:

Building lot,	$300 00
Building 30x50, 16 feet posts	650.00
Machinery, Rollers,	1200.00
" " Iron,	482.52
Special Machines,	1500.00
Belts and Pulleys	295.76
Machines built in Mill,	300.00
Freights,	10.00
Setting up machinery and starting up	100.00
Total costs ready to Run.	$5328.28

On motion it was voted that the stockholders authorize the incorporators of the Association to proceed to secure a site and build a building 30x50 feet 16 feet posts, cost not to exceed $650.00 and lot not to cost over $300.00.

On motion the Secretary was instructed to buy a Record Book and transcribe the minutes into it.

On motion it was voted that the incorporators be authorized to sign the contract, as presented, with Delano Roller Mill company for the use of power.

On motion the chair was authorized to appoint a committee on constitution and By-laws for the association.

Chairman Schaffer appointed as such committee, F. H. Lindsley, T. J. Catlin and A. W. Wittman.

On motion meeting adjourned till Friday evening.

—Station agent Bolton is putting on the finishing touches to recent repairs to his residence.

—Spence Brothers has built a portico on to the front of his River Street residence and is shining up in good style.

—Justice Bohn is fixing up his residence, on Second Street formerly used as a photograph gallery and expects soon to move in.

--Persons whose dishes were not returned after the M. E. Sociable will find them with Mrs. M. A. Chance.—Call and claim your own.

—Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Murphy left on Monday for Fair Haven, Washington, to visit Mrs. M's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Luther Cunningham, formerly of Delano. Mrs. Cunningham has been quite sick for some time was the occasion of the trip.

—The funeral of Mrs. Eliza Smith was held this morning at the residence of her son-in-law Mr. F. H. Lindsley. Services were conducted by Rev. Jabez Blackhurst and the remains taken to the Cemetery south of town where they were laid to rest. Mrs. Smith was a woman beloved by all. Her sister Mrs. M. E. Hanna of Kansas was present with her for several days at the last. The sorrowing family have the sympathy of the community.

— Memorial Day, May 30, 1891, is to be observed in Delano. A meeting has been called for Tuesday. May 19, at the City Hall, at 8 o'clock, P. M. Thirty years ago the men of our country went forth to battle. Some never to return. Others came home and many of them have died, and been buried in the cemeteries all over our land. Memorial day comes once each year and then we are called upon to visit the silent cities of the dead and strew flowers over the loved ones last resting place and at the same time not forgetting those whose bones have been left in the Sunny south, many of them in graves marked unknown. Turn out to the meeting, time is short, and help prepare for this occasion as becomes a village of our pretentions.

—Scarcely a day but some one on looking up and down Second street as far as they can, is herd to remark. How much nicer it would be, if this street could be opened up, the hill near the school house graded off a little and the low ground on either side filled a little, and the depot moved out of the street. How much it would add to the appearance of the street and village and enhance the value of property on this street. Third street too would appear much if the eye could run the whole length of the street down to Maxfield's taking in at that place, beautiful park which could now be easily procured. Let the grades on all our streets be established so that people can know just where to build their residences that are now going up in every part of the village. So that they may conform to some kind of a system.

A sad accident happened to a son of P. Johnson of section 34, last week. The young man was kicked by a horse and his skull fractured He is very low at this writing, but his father is of the opinion that he will recover.—Cokato Observer.

Mrs. Swan Eckstrom has closed the road passing through her land, which lies a short distance north of this village. It appears that the county commissioners ordered a road through this land, and the road was duly laid out but Mrs. Eckstrom, not being satisfied with the adjustment of affairs appealed to the courts and now by a decision of the court she closes the road.—Cokato Observer.

Monday at the County Seat.

Monday with the average family is washday consquently a busy one. Monday at the county seat appears to be no exception. A visit to the beautiful little village among the hills on the shores of Buffalo Lake at this season of the year is something to be enjoyed by citizens of the county as well as some from abroad. Monday, last found Probate court in session in the court room. Judge Alley was patiently listening to the testimony of the witnesses and the sharp thursts of Attorneys Pidgeon and Culkin as he pondered over the pros and cons of the case of Mrs. Samantha Snedgrass vs. the Mrs. Hayes estate, being a suit for pay for taking care of the old lady, Mrs. Hayes, in her last sickness and amounting to $175.00. About two dozen persons were interested in the case.

Messrs Vorse, Lindsley and Cristie were at work with the County Auditor and his assistant straightening up the Breed Atwater and Payte titles question, to lots and lands in Delano.

Isaac Podas and Billy Cochran were busy as ever with those county records. They never seem to get through or have a moment to spare more than to say. How do you do sir? Fine day. C. E. Oakley, the banker, was hunting over papers in the vault.

Treasurer McKnight and assistant Junken were hard at work receiving the hard earned money of the real estate owners, whose taxes must be paid before June 1, or have the penalty added. Mr. McKnight finds time for his dry jokes just the same, on returning change for instance, he managed to have the nickles and cent pieces appear to the view of the taxpayer while the half-eagle was hidden from his view by the great grating that has been built as an additional safe-guard to the funds of Wright county's Treasury, and to keep off "attacks" from that genial officer. Assistant Junken is quite proud of his new cash book and says he can tell every night how much money the county has and exactly where it can be found. This book is one of Mr. J's own get up and is a great help to the county officers.

Mr. O. J. Steward, District Clerk, was not in, probably at work on his farm, near Lake Pulaski. His proxy, Mr. Brewster was on hand ready to assist those desiring anything in this line.

County Attorney Cutting was quite busy pouring over the volumes of legal lore, in his office, over the Buffalo Journal, but later in the day was called upon to prosecute the case of State of Minnesota vs. Samuel Cronk, for assaulting J. J. Banker. The defendant having just been brought in by Sheriff Nugent and deputy Anderson to appear before Squire Junken.

Senator A. Y. Eaton was seen here and there, dodging about on business, in his shirt sleeves, his angular form, swinging arms and shuffling gait, reminding one of a picture of the late lamented President Lincoln.

Attorney Wendell was not to be seen though his office was wide open to the public. He was probably not far off, superintending the beautifying of his home, on the shores of the lake. He has spent time, and toil and money, on his place, until what was naturally a nice location now appears a splendid residence spot, and with his handsome dwelling should be a comfort to any fortunate occupants.

John Elsenpeter is getting his hotel ready for customers. He proposes to run the house himself again.

James Ryder has a new express wagon and with his new harness presents the airs of a regular city drayman.

R. Sproul, of Minneapolis, lately returned from the west was shaking hands with his many old acquaintances and pouring into willing ears many big stories of the beauties of the Great Yellow stone Park, Montana, Washington and other western countries.

Pliny Putnam was keeping store while Putnam, Senior was attending Probate court.

Austin Knights towering frame was noticeable, now and anon as, he picked his way hither and thither. He still has an eye for a good horse.

W. H. Frazee and Verine, our fellow townsmen formerly, were engaged in carrying their Agricultural implements about. Their depot is very near the lake.

Louis Krack is getting his large store room nearly completed.

The Hotels were apparently doing a pretty fair business.

Buffalo lake was dotted over with boats. Fishing seemed to be good.

The County seat shows enterprise and thrift. The streets are being graded. The court house grounds, beautified and many improvements were noticeable.

JUDGE NOT IN HASTE.

Ne'er be hasty in your judgment,
Never foremost to extend
Evil mention of a neighbor,
Or of one you've call'd a friend.
Of two reasons for an action
Chose the better, not the worst;
Oft, with some, the meaner motive
Ever strikes the fancy first.
Then be gentle with misfortune;
Never foremost to extend
Evil mention of a neighbor,
Or of one you've call'd a friend.
Judge not with detracting spirit;
Speak not with disdainful tongue;
Nor with hard or hasty feeling
Do no human creature wrong.
Words there are that, sharp as winter,
Strip the little left to cheer;
Oh, be yours the kinder mission,
Prone to soothe, not cause a tear.
Then be gentle with misfortune,
Never foremost to extend
Evil mention of a neighbor,
Or of one you've call'd a friend.

"SAVIN' MOTHER."

The farmer sat in his easy chair,
Between the fire and the lamplight's glare;
His face was ruddy and full and fair.
His three small boys in the chimney nook
Conned the lines of a picture book.
His wife, the bride of his home and heart,
Baked the biscuit and made the tart,
Laid the table and steeped tea,
Deftly, swiftly, silently.
Tired and weary and weak and faint,
She bore her trials without complaint,
Like many another household saint,—
Content, all selfish bliss above,
In the patient ministry of love.

At last, between the clouds of smoke
That wreathed his life, the husband spoke;
"There's taxes to raise an int'rest to pay.
And of there should come a rainy day.
'Twould be mighty handy, I'm boun' to say,
T' have somethin put by. For folks must die,
An, there's funeral bills, and gravestuns to buy,—
Enough to swamp a man, purty nigh.
Besides, there's Edward and Dick and Joe
To be provided for when we go.
So 'f I was you, I'll tell you what I'd du;
I'd be savin' of wood's ever I could;
Extra fire don't du any good;
I'd be savin' soap, an' savin' of ile,
And run up some candles once in awhile;
I'd be rather sparin' of coffee an' tea,
For sugar is high,
And all to buy,
And cider is good enough for me.
I'd be kind o' careful about my clo'es
And look out sharp how the money goes;
Extry trimmin'
'S the bane of women.

I'd sell off the best of the cheese and honey,
And eggs is as good, nigh about, 's the money.
And as to the carpet you wanted new,
I guess we can make the old one du;
And as for the washer an' sewin' machine,
Them smooth-tongued agents, so pesky and mean,
You'd better git rid of 'm slick and clean.
What do they know about women's work?
Du they calculate women was born to shirk?"

Dick and Edward and little Joe,
Sat in the corner in a row.
They saw the patient mother go
On ceaseless errands to and fro;
They saw that her form was bent and thin,
Her temples gray, her cheeks sunk in;
They saw the quiver of lip and chin;
And then, with a warmth he could not smother,
Outspoke the youngest, frailest brother:
"You talk of savin' wood and ile
An' tea an' sugar, all the while,
But you never talk of savin' mother!"
—The Northwestern Agriculturist,

A CYCLONE passed over Missouri, on May 20. Twelve persons killed and many injured.

MINNEAPOLIS had a fire of Twenty million feet lumber yesterday. The fire is said to have orginated from the smoke stack of H. C. Ankeley's saw mill.

THE new party organized at Cincinnati yesterday and adopted the Declaration of Principles, endorsing the platforms of St. Louis, in '84; of Ocala, Florida, in '90, and of Omaha, in '91. It is to be called the People's Party. They voted down an attempt to have a prohibition plank in the platform.

Tariff Pictures.

American mowers and reapers, made by highly paid protected mechanics, are the best. The foreign demand for them is increasing. In March, 1890, we exported them to the value of $253,909.

Our March exports of these articles this year were $427,115.

The McKinley tariff has not hindered exportation of mowers and reapers. —New York Press.

The Press says American mowers and reapers are the best. And gives as a reason for their being the best that they are made by highly protected mechanics. Is this the reason? Is not a more plausible reason that they are made in America, an agricultural country, where the leading mechancis, in many intances were farmer boys, and, knowing for what mowers and reapers are made, know better how to make them best adopted to cutting grain and mowing grass. Has the fact that they are highly protected anything to do with their being better? And will not people buy the best when they can?

The foreign demand for them, the Press says further is increasing. Is not the fact that they are the best sufficient reason to sell them where such implements are needed?

The Press winds up its article with its usual assertion that the McKinley tariff has not hindred the exportation of mowers and reapers. Did anybody ever think it would? On the other hand the Press gives figures to show that the increased exportation of these articles of manufacture has been largely increased. Does this aid the farmer? Does it help any farmer in our community to raise more wheat or get better prices for what he sells? To the contrary every reaper and mower that is sold this year in excess of what was sold last year represents a new farmer in that foreign land who is raising grain to compete with our farmers at home. What grain is harvested and marketed in foreign countries stops the sale of that raised in this country. We don't know how the statistics of reapers and mowers in the country compare as between last year and this, but; if other countries raise their own breadstuffs it stands to reason that the sale of thes machines at home, will soon, if not already, feel the effects in a decreased sale. As our farmers are obliged to give up their grain raising about the only thing they have to depend on in many instances, for ready cash with which to purchase articles of manufacture and pay their taxes and meet other obligations. The farmer is told to raise horses, cattle, sheep, and hogs. All very good, but when he ceases to be a farmer, and goes into raising horses all together he finds very soon that he has on hand, as at present, in our locality more horses than he wants, and that there is scarcely a sale for any but choice animals. Pigs are cheap, nice spring pigs were sold for one dollar and less per head last Fair Day in Delano. Of what use is this protective tariff bill to the farmer, any way. Of course if the foreign market for reapers and mowers is increased as rapidly as the Press would have us understand there will of course be a raise in the price at home. If all the machines can be sold abroad the prices at home will have a tendency, very soon, to stiffen materially and the farmer's pocket book is bound to feel the effects both ways. The more reapers needed aboard, the more grain raised in foreign lands, the less is called for from ours. The greater the foreign demand for reapers and mowers the better the chance for an advance in prices on these machines in the United States.

ALTHOUGH many republican papers try to discourage the belief that the tariff battle is to be fought over in 1892, having the odds of several thousands of popular vote against their protective theories, such as not to give up one iota of the protective idea, the leading New York Organ of the G. O. P. comes out about every day with articles telling what vast benefit to the public the McKinley bill has been. Here is a specimen:

"McKinley protection to our finer cotton goods industries has increased our imports of fine foreign cotton for nine months of the fiscal year to $1,996,201, as against $1,048,262 in the corresponding three quarters of the last fiscal year. Remember, there was no change in the duty on the raw cotton itself, for it is and long has been on the free list. The greatly increased demand is due solely to the increased protection of the product and the development of new American cotton industries."

How can it be from a protective stand point? A product of this country like cotton, with no tariff on, to be manufactured here, at home and compete in the markets of the world, and that after being worked up on our protected machinery and with the high wages we are told so much about in this country and then to be actually gaining in the amount exported looks as if RAW MATERIALS on the free list is no detriment to manufacturing in this country. This looks like a slip for the great paper to have made the admission so emphatically, or perhaps they are swinging around to the good old Democratic belief that raw materials should be on the free list. Let her swing around if she wants too she is likely to have company, lots of it between now and '92 if she does.

PRICES of nearly every farm product rule high, and prices of nearly every thing else rule low. Compare prices of eggs, butter, potatoes, oats, wheat and corn with those of the last three years. These prices have advanced in spite of "gold bugs" and "silver bugs," of railroad extortions and robber tariffs, of grasping monopolies, and greedy corporations, which the before election campaign orators charged with being the cause of low prices. The fact is, that it is only when the supply exceeds the demand that these enemies of prosperity can get in their work. They may have the slightest influence at all times, but they can control prices only when there is a surplus to help them. The Chicago packers have been able to control the cattle market for years, because there was a surplus, but if the demand once outgrows the supply, their control is gone and prices will go up in spite of them, and the seller will have his day.- The Northwestern Agriculturist.

SECRETARY BLAINE has been sick for a week or so. The health of Presidential aspirants seems to be a topic of general discussion as the time draws nigh for nominations to be made. For our part we are not of the opinion that the advocate of Reciprocity will cut a very big figure in the nominating convention, of the G. O P. Reciprocity don't seem to take well with the average protectionist and is very good for as it goes, with democrats: but democrats favor making Recipsocity general and not limiting it to those countries who compete with us in agricultural products mostly, or with which we have already been having free trade. Therefore Reciprocity and its advocates will, most likely not find reciprocity a part of the republican doctrine about that time.

THE Sioux Monument at New Ulm will be dedicated on Memorial Day. – St. Peter Journal.

The great Republican party has things "down fine." If the consumer buys foreign goods his tariff tax goes into the Treasury, from which it is taken and squandered by Republican Congresses. If he buys American goods his tariff tax goes into the pockets of the manufacturers, who then contribute a part of it to the Republican campaign fund.—Courier Journal.

CORRESPONDENCE

Annandale Annals.

Rev. Higgins officiated in the M. F. church last Sabbath. The morning discourse being a continuation of the subject of the travels of the children of Israel out of Egypt.

It is understood that there will, hereafter, be services in the Swedish Luthern church here once a month; Rev. P. A. Warner officiating.

The carpenters have commenced work on Will W. Cotton's building, the foundation of which has been laid several days.

Wm. Krohn, a practical jeweller from St. Paul, has opened a shop next door north of the Printing office.

Dwellings and other structures are going up all about the village. Mr. Pratt, the town site man, says there are twenty dwellings in process of construction and to be constructed in the village in the course of the season. Cofield & McDonald are just completing one for rent. By the way we had occasion to call at the large Furniture ware house of Cofield & McDonald a few days ago and was surprised to notice the large amount of furniture on hand, indicating a much larger trade in that line of goods than I had supposed carried on here.

M. C. O'Loughlin, proprieter of the Pleasant Lake House, reports a very healthy business. "Mike" is popular with his guests and Mrs. O. L. knows how to take care of her part of the house.

H. F. McLane has recently sold his house, corner of Elm St. and Cherry Avenue, to Henry Shaum. Mr. S. bought for investment and has already rented the place, as we understand.

One old girl of our village has used some of the Klatt's Roller Mills flour and is so delighted with it that I believe she would kiss the young miller, Mr. Craig, if she dared to and he would let her and his wife was not there.

We had a little affray here last Saturday afternoon. Mr. Desire Lenoir, proprietor of the Annandale House, has been in the habit of pasturing three or four cows and other animals upon unoccupied lots in the village, they being herded by his boys and dogs. The boys like other boys get a little negligent at times and the animals occasionally have trespassed a little, so the council passed an ordinance forbidding such practices and notified Mr. Lenoir. He being a Belgian Frenchman and not understanding the English language much, immagined that he had a right to graze his animals on lots where he had permission of the owners but, the council thought otherwise and sent Frank Cleveland, poundkeeper, after the animals, Lenoir got wind of what was up and repaired to the field armed with a Ball Bat and addressed himself to the job of breaking Cleveland's head but the latter being a spry man managed to dodge around the horse he had in hand and avoid the bat till he let the horse go, when Lenoir discontinued the warfare; and Cleveland encouraged and assisted by 30 or 40 others assumed the aggressive and after a short chase, either as Poundkeeper or Marshal captured Lenoir and draged him off either to the Pound or Lockup, afterwards Lenoir was brought before Justice W. W. Towle; Lawyer King appeared for defendant and soon pricked a hole in the papers but the court was equal to the emergency and immediately issued another set, whereupon a change of venue was moved for and, pending the discussion of the matter, Lenoir thought of something he wanted to attend to at home and, in disregard of the protestations of the Court and interference of the constable, uttering a defiant exclamation in French, walked off and did not come back yet. There appears to be a controversy between the court and Lawyer King as to whether the venue was changed, King claiming that it was and was tranferred to Justice McLane and an adjournment ordered by Justice Towle to the next Tuesday, at 4 o'clock but, although a record of such venue was made and announced the court, for some reason, reconsidered the matter and denied the motion and is at present in the fog as to the real status of the case. King put in appearance for the defence at 4 o'clock at Justice McLane's office but there was no prisoner or papers there, so there was nothing to be tried. Where and what next?

J. F. Gorman, of Little Falls, made a brief visit at the parental domicil.

Business was lively on our streets, Saturday.

The Waverly correspondent in giving to the public an account of a birthday party disclosed the age of the young lady in whose honor the event was celebrated From time immemorial the age of a young lady was supposed to be among the unknownable and inscrutable secrets; beyond the ken of mortals; perhaps he guessed at it or may be it was one of those egregions mistakes to which the worthy scribe is so susceptable.

ON DIT that John Hamilton is seriously considering PRO ET CON the advisability of committing the crime of matrimony.

Jos Anderson is progressing finely with the construction of his summer cottage on Lake Ramsey.

The village marshal and one of Maple Lake's substantial farmers had quite a tilt over the latter letting his team stand without being hitched. The farmer assured the marshal that he was able to stand any damage his team did, this appeared to satisfy the officer and he took a walk.

The Alliance met last Saturday night J. F. Collins delivered a brief address which seemed quite satisfactory to the organization.

ROCKFORD RIPPLES.

The shower of rain, Tuesday, was very much needed. It will help the growing vegetation.

Mrs. J. W. Drayne, who has been visiting her sister, in St. Paul for past two weeks, returned last night accompanied by her sister.

Geo. Irving has just got in a new stock of road carts and it would be well for any one wishing to buy one to call on him and examine his stock before purchasing elsewhere.

Elder Warner, Rip Sackett and C. D. Mills took their tenting outfit to Lake Rebecca, last Monday. They are shipping 200 pounds of fish to the city every day. Elder is the champion fisherman he caught a pickerel that weighed 42 pounds and he had to shoot it before he dare take it in the boat.

Lewis Dorman is having a tustle with the measles.

Henry Young and A. Wood, our butter maker, took in the city Monday.

D. R. Farnham visited Buffalo, Saturday.

Mrs. S J. Finley moved her bag and baggage to Minneapolis, on Wednesday. She is going there as "nurse."

WATERTOWN WAYS.

Mr. C. G. Halgren made a business trip to Howard Lake, on Monday of this week.

Messrs. J. F. Campbell, G. U. Miller and Jacob Yager, three of our village councilmen, went below Thursday of last week and purchased the bill of lumber for the new town hall.

Mr. August Johnson, of Waconia was in Watertown on business, last Friday.

Mrs. Chas Metzger, who has been visiting with her brother and family, Mr. C. G. Halgren during the winter returned home on Tuesday of this week.

County Superintendent E. A. Taylor spent a couple of days visiting the schools in this vicinity this week.

Mr. Pat Gaven was doing buisness in Delano on Tuesday of this week.

Mr. Wm. Hesse started, on Thursday, for Chicago to bring home his daughter who has been there for some time with Mr Kretchmar's family and is now sick.

Henry Dressler is home from Minneapolis to spend a few days with his parents and witness his sister's wedding.

The Miller Dessler wedding on Wednesday was one of the finest that has been in Watertown in a great many years. They were married in the Swedish Lutheran church by Rev. Mr. Maass, the German Lutheran minister. Miss Pauline Dressler and Miss Amanda Miller acting as brides maids and Mr. Henry Dressler and Mr. — Dressler as groomsmen. After the ceremony was performed about 75 people friends and invited guests partook of a most bountiful dinner at the residence of the brides parents, Mr. and Mrs. F. Dessler, in the evening the band serenaded them and spent the evening in merry making and dancing. Every body had a most enjoyable time. The presents were numerous and we will be unable to mention them until next week.

A FARMER'S COGITATIONS.

Independence, Minn., May 19, 1891.

EDITOR BUFFALO GAZETTE:—All things continue as they were from the beginning except times are harder than they were before this present administration begun. The protective duties McKinley put on eggs will never save the country unless its salted. Many of the farmers and working class are beginning to cry out, "men and brethren what must we do to be saved?" Some will tell you vote the Republican ticket straight and sing the praise of the McKinley bill. But that does not go down as easy as it did some five or ten years ago. Men are beginning to think for themselves, more than they did. Some of them have just got it through their head that "all men are created free and equal that, they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. If Adam from the time of his creation (calling it 6,000 years) had received $30,000 dollars a year up to the present time he would not have as much money as the Vanderbilts are said to have and he, with a few others, we might say, own the wealth of the nation. And it is a fact that can not be denied that when the wealth of any nation gets into the hands of a few men they can control the nation, they can make times hard or they can make them good. They can contract the currency. They can bring on a war, if they like. And, in fact they can do any other thing, almost, they see fit to do. We boast having the best and purest government on earth. If so, may God help the rest; for we, as a people, and nation, are not what we once was. The liberties are being taken from the common people not by word but by the money power it is estimated that the state of Kansas has bonded debt of $14,229,675.00 and a floating debt of $683,-105 making a gross of $14,817,780 this is in the year of 1890, and in 1880 it was about half the above amount and a majority of the states heavier in debt now than they were ten years ago. In 1880 Minnesota's bonded debt was $798,-727. In 1890, $3,126,438. Now what may we judge by this, it certainly does not indicate better times and besides this counties municipalities and individuals are getting in debt more and more, every year, and, some time, in some way, these things will have an end; and we fear the result of it will be sore distress to the debtor; but, many tell us we have no cause for alarm; farmers are getting good prices for their produce; and there is employement for all who wish to work, and at remunerative wages, too. This is so only in part. If the farmer happens to get good prices for his produce for one or two years and the laboring man is paid good wages for a while this is all taken in by the capitalist, the banker, the manufacturer and money sharks: and the poor man only gets away with so much money after all. Capital and the devil is fast getting control of this country, and if things do not take a change it is only a question of time when the poor of this country will be serfs, and will be compelled to bow in submission to the rich. Can we, then, longer boast of free America, or must we be compelled to say our flag is a floating lie, and our condition a covenant with death and a league with hell. It is getting time to hew to the line and the chips fall where they will, but, if my conception of the Scripture is any thing to me, it teaches or foretells of just what we are having in these days.

MAPLE LAKE MUSINGS.

The village council meets to-night.

There is some talk relative to having a 4th of July celebration. In case we are to have a celebration there is no time to spare. We see no reason why Maple Lake can not have a grand celebration this year.

P. Leahy was at his old tricks again last Sunday, tempting the finny tribe.

Mrs. Glynn, who has been quite sick for the past fortnight has nearly recovered.

Dr. Tessier is kept very busy attending his patients.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

Washington, D. C., May 15, 1891.

Mr. Harrison's fool friends put all Washington into an amused titter today. They decided several days ago that it would not do to announce the hour of the arrival of the royally equipped special train bearing Benjamin, the candidate, because forsooth, he desired to escape the crowd that would meet him if they knew when he was coming. If the hour that the train would arrive had been announced for days before in all the local newspapers and had been placarded on all the bill boards and dead walls in town it is possible that two or three hundred idle negroes and hoodlums might have congregated at the station from curiosity, but to suppose that there would have been a crowd large enough to worry the gentlemen is the most humorous thing of the season, and it has set every body in town to laughing.

Mr. Blaine's being confined to his room in New York by illness was good enough for the sensational newspapers to gull those who knew no better with: it didn't go down with those who knew that Mr. Blaine left Washington because of the irritation caused by the dictatorial tone of the telegrams with which Mr. Harrison was flooding him, and if he does not resume the active duties of position for sometime it will not be on account of his health, but because he wishes to get even with Mr. Harrison by leaving him in charge of matter over which he is almost certain to blunder.

I have good reasons for believing that Mr. Harrison's treatment of Mr. Blaine, who thinks he has a grievance, during the next few days will settle his chances for a re-nomination. It is certain that Blaine doesn't care for the nomination, and that if Mr. Harrison has the tact he can have the Blaine strength thrown to him which would make his nomination certain; but it is equally certain that Mr. Harrison will have to drop the I-only-am-the-administration style, which has so irritated Blaine, in order to succeed. The outcome will be watched with interest, and were it not for the "big head" which the courtesy extended by the people to the high office he fills has given Mr. Harrison it would not be in doubt. Blaine holds the winning cards, and he knows it too.

Representative Hooker, of Mississippi, thinks the democratic party will do well to go west for its candidate next year, and that it could not do better than to take Hon. William R. Morrison, of Illinois, at present the democratic member of the Interstate Commerce board of Commissioners.

Senator Peffer and Representative Jerry Simpson, unite in the declaration that the convention of the Farmers' Alliance and Labor organizations which meets in Cincinnati next week will not form a third party, but will confine its public work to the issuing of an address to the people.

Representative Crain, of Texas, who is here on private business, says the outlook for the democratic candidate, whoever he may be, next year, could hardly be brighter. He doesn't think there will be a Farmers' Alliance national ticket nominated, nor does he think there is the slighest doubt of the election of his colleague, Mr. Mills, to the Speakership of the next House.

Keep your eye on Representative W. L. Wilson, of West Virginia. He is a young man, but he is growing as rapidly as any man now in public life. His name is heard on all sides here, and nothing but praise is spoken of him. He is deeply interested in the organization of Democratic clubs, and he is at present making speeches out west in their interest.

Again the rumor is revived that Justice Bradly, of the U. S. Supreme Court, intends retiring, and that Senator Edmunds will be nominated as his successor. Justice Bradley is past the legal age for retirement, and it may be that he intends to retire—Many people wish that he had retired before the notorious 8 to 7 decission was made—, but I cannot understand why Mr. Edmunds, who, when in good health, on two occasions declined going upon the bench, should, now, when his health is beginning to break down accept the position.

There is something rotten somewhere in the connection of this government with matters relating to Chili. The public has never been given the true inwardness of this Itata business.

It is expected that the names of the new judges of the U. S. Circuit Court will be announced in a few days.

Ex-Senator Ingalls has surprised every body by turning up here, and the newspaper men are itching to learn what he came for.

Woman's Column.

For God and Home and Humanity.

EDITED BY MRS. E. A. STACY.

What can we, W. C. T. U. women do. We, so few comparatively, and so weak, and so many of the few, half-hearted in their interest. What can we do?

Beloved comranes, listen! It is just because of our littleness: just because of our half-heartedness; just because we are far more interested in our own personal matters, than in the work of the world's salvation from this curse of rum, and death and crime. that this curse is not removed. If we were only as intent on the Prohibition of the liquor traffic and the salvation of souls from its awful power as God is to exterminate and destroy it—it would have been done before this, and we should have not only Prohibition in Minnesota but we would have in our Legislature and in the offices of power and government in the state, men who would not only give the submission of the question of Constitutional Prohibtion, to the vote of the people, but whose business and whose interest it would be to carry it, by overwhelming majorities, and then enforce truly and righteously the law. We need to-day as W. C. T. U. women so much of Christ in us, so much of the faithfulness that "overcometh all things," that out of our lives, out of our intent determined earnestness, out of the Christ-life that is in us there shall go forth in every community in this state power to make voters hate and despise not only the liquor traffic but the very thought of voting for any man who will sanction it or license it. We ought to be able to say all this truth concerning the iniquity of political affiliation with rum and the powers of darkness —with so much of God shining through what we say, that as of old when the apostles spake, so to-day when we speak, men shall be convicted of sin, and cry out, "What shall I do to be saved?" For no man is saved of the Lord, who is helping by his vote or influence or legislation to drag men down to death and eternal ruin. That man is a sinner, no matter what position of influence or trust he may occupy. God's standard of right and of righteousness must be ours. We who love Him and who are called of Him into this battle for the Home against the Saloon, must remember that love to God is proved by love to man and He saith, "he that hateth his brother is a murderer."

Oh my sisters, let us be more than ever in earnest and in the truth, seeking "not to be conformed to this world, but transformed by the renewing of our mind." Then shall we be able to be instrumentalities in God's hand such as He can use for the accomplishment of His own blessed purposes.

That you and I may "grow daily in the knowledge of His will," and by and by may enter into His presence with joy unspeakable is the earnest prayer of

Your sister in labor and hope,
H. A. HOBART.

A Mechanical Wonder.

The Decoration Day issue of the Albany, N. Y. TELEGRAM will be the most original, unique and popular paper ever presented to the American public. Nothing like it was ever attempted by a newspaper in the nineteenth century. As a mechanical wonder and a military literary library there will be nothing to even compare with it issued in this country. It will be printed on red, white and blue paper and consist of 16 pages. If there is no agent in your town you can have the paper mailed to you at 5 cents a copy.

GEORGE FRANCIS TRAIN is due in New York July 4, returning from his second trip around the world.

ROBERT SHAW, of Brooklyn, N. Y., owns the old gun with which Israel Putnam shot the wolf.

HON. HORACE CLINTON, successor to Senator Reagan, resigned, will be the first native Texan to sit in the United States senate.

NEXT fall a gentleman fifty-three years of age will enter the class of '94 of Princeton college. During the civil war he was a sophomore in that institution, but left it to fight for his country.

SOMETHING like 200,000 oil wells have been drilled in the United States since the discovery of petroleum, which at an average cost of $2,000, which is very low, gives a total expenditure of $400,000,000.

A MAN in Arkansas has, after two years of litigation, been acquitted of the charge of killing his neighbor's pig. It has cost the state $5,000, the accused $6,000 and the time of over 100 witnesses. The pig was valued at $3.50.

QUEEN VICTORIA has signified her willingness to pay Prince Albert's debts, amounting to $1,500,000. She, however, stipulates that none of the money shall pass through his hands. However pleasing a gentleman he is, the queen doesn't regard him a good financier.

A GIRL in Kentucky has recovered five hundred dollars damages from a steamboat company for naming a boat after her without asking her permission, and they must rename the boat. She took offense at the marine item stating that "Kittie Marshal took the lower chute and run her nose into a plantation."

THIS is the latest opinion promulgated by Col. Ingersoll: "There will never be a really great civilization until women enjoy the same rights as do the men. The highest ambition of any man is to win the love of some noble girl, and the highest ambition of any good girl must be to win the love of some good man."

AN American girl in Paris, writing to a friend in this country, says: "We generally managed to make our French understood enough to order what we wanted. But the rub came when papa wanted some mustard. We asked for it in French, Italian and Spanish, but all to no purpose till mamma said: 'Mustard, you idiot.' 'Oh, mustard,' said the waiter in utter contempt; 'why didn't you say so before?'"

THE New York Tribune says that the forest fires raging in different parts of the country carry a stern warning of what may happen if we continue to neglect measures for their prevention. The destruction is enormous. In the census year of 1880 more than 10,000,000 acres were burned over in the United States and over $25,000,000 worth of property was consumed. With proper precautions nearly all this might have been saved.

THE internal revenue receipts of the United States for the first nine months of the current fiscal year are greater by $7,000,000 than for the same time twelve months previously, and considerably in excess of the estimates. If the same rate be kept up to the end the receipts of the fiscal year will exceed $150,000,000 for the first time in two decades. For the year ended with last June the total was $142,500,000, against $130,800,000 for 1889.

THE greatest diving feat ever achieved was in moving the cargo of the ship Cape Horn, wrecked off the coast of South America, when a diver named Hooper made seven descents to a depth of two hundred and one feet, and at one time remained under water forty-two minutes. Siebe states the greatest depth to which a man has ever descended to be two hundred and four feet, equivalent to a pressure of eighty-eight and one-half pounds per square inch.

PROF. JOSEPH LEIDY, of Philadelphia, and his brother, Dr. Philip Leidy, bequeathed their brains to the Anthropometric society, of which the professor was a founder. "The brains of the two brothers," a Philadelphia newspaper tells us, "were of the same weight to a fraction of a grain. Both were noticeably below the normal size, confirming the deduction of anatomists that quality of tissues rather than quantity distinguishes the valuable brain from the ignorant."

THE net profits for the last five years of the principal firm engaged in manufacturing chewing gum are said to be $655,735.39. These figures do not exactly speak for themselves, but they are uncommonly suggestive. Think of the number of human jaws that the stuff which produced this large sum has set in profitless motion, ofttimes, too, to the annoyance of unwilling witnesses. The chewing-gum habit is far from being a survival of the fittest. Some physicians claim a therapeutic value for chewing gum, but, like the application of a blister, its use ought to be entirely private.

IT is not surprising to find that a man of such kind impulses as Bishop-elect Brooks should become the victim of misplaced benevolence. While walking up Beacon street in Boston one evening he was attracted to a boy who was trying in vain to pull the door-bell of a house. Advancing to the door, Dr. Brooks seized the bell-knob. The urchin, whose eyes followed the movements of the "big man," retreated meanwhile to the bottom of the steps. Giving the bell a vigorous pull, the eminent divine turned to the urchin, who shouted: "Now scoot!" and ran, leaving him to make his escape as best he could.

MRS. JOHN B. GOUGH, whose death was announced recently, was the second wife of the great temperance apostle. They were married at Worcester November 24, 1843. She was a woman of strong New England character. In his early struggles it was her faith and struggles that held Mr. Gough up, and in later years her constant care and wifely devotion had much to do with his ability to perform his work. In the town of Boylston, the home of the family for the last thirty or more years, Mrs. Gough was held in the highest esteem. In the church and social life of the town she wielded a great influence.

LATER.

Blown by Dynamite.

TARRYTOWN, N, Y., May 19.—There was a horrible accident near here today, by which the loss of life is estimated at between sixteen and twenty and the injured as many more.

An engine and one flat car were conveying a load of Italians and twenty-four cases of dynamite, each case containing fifty pounds. The Italians were being taken to a section of the road where a third track was being laid. A coil of rope lay in front of the truck of the engine. Just as the train was passing Holmes Point, midway between Tarrytown and Irvington, a spark from the locomotive ignited the coil of rope. The moving train fanned the flames and before the Italians realized their danger one of the packages of dynamite exploded.

As to the number of men on the train accounts differ. Some say there were fifty-three. The lowest estimate places the number at over forty, Disston, the boss, thinks there were over forty, and as a matter of fact the number of those blown either to atoms or into the river is to a certain extent a matter of speculation.

The train was torn to atoms, the railway tracks tipped from their beds and a great hole dug out of the earth.

Three of the Italians died in the Tarrytown hospital after being removed from the wreck. Ten bodies were picked up along the track, while five were taken out of the water.

Annual Meeting of the Order and Election of Officers.

At the annual meeting in Red Wing of the Ancient Order United Workmen the following officers were chosen:

Grand master workman, George M. Laing, of Windom; grand foreman, E. Southworth, of Shakopee; grand overseer, J. E. Porter, of Mankato; grand recorder, Olof Olson, of Willmar; grand receiver, J. J. McCardy, of St. Paul; grand guide, W. B. McCormick, of Minneapolis; grand inside watchman, J. D. Gillespie, of Morris; grand outside watchman, Alfred Anderson, of Red Wing.

The financial exhibit of the order showed that the receipts of the beneficiary fund during the year were $99,575 and of the general fund $112,114.80. The disbursements in the beneficiary fund were $98,319.73 and in the general fund $13,771.58, a total of $112,091.31. The membership of the order on April 1, 1891, was given at 7,723, an increase of 1,786 during the year.

SILVER BY THE BUSHEL.

Ore Worth $20,000 a Ton Being Dug in Minnesota Mines.

Assistant State Geologist H. V. Winch arrived in Duluth on his way back to the Thunder Bay silver district where he has lately spent several months and where he expects to stay several more. "The mines up there are doing remarkably well," said he. "At the Porcupine, which is only down about 100 feet, they are taking out native silver in chunks as big as a bushel basket—silver that goes with what impurities it carries well up to $20,000 a ton. I don't know how much of this kind of bonanza they will be able to strike, but they shipped away over twenty barrels of it the other day, and there was money enough in the twenty barrels to pay for a good deal of work."

A FATAL SHOT.

A Rock County Man Meets Death in a Peculiar Manner.

Merton, a 15-year-old son of D. A. Hardin, of Springwater township, Rock county, started from his home to hunt plover with a breech-loading gun. He drove a horse hitched to a cart. A couple of hours later a neighbor caught the horse, which was straying around the prairie, but later turned him loose and headed him for home. When the animal reached home Mr. Hardin became anxious and started for where he supposed his son was, and he found him about 5 miles from home dead. The gun had slipped from the seat, discharging at the same time, the load entering his abdomen. Indications showed that death was not instantaneous.

Southwestern Minnesota Editors.

At Worthington the Southwestern Minnesota Editorial asssociation completed its organization. C. S. Eastwood, of Heron Lake, is president; E. C. Huntington, of Windom, vice president; James Duan, of Slayton, secretary, and F. N. Van Duzee, of Luverne, treasurer. Joel Heatwole, of Northfield, delivered an address, and papers were read by Editors Huntington and Eastwood. There are about twenty-three papers in the district and a majority of the editors of these were in attendance. A banquet at the Worthington hotel was given n the associatior by citizens.

Minneapolis Millers Combine.

The new mill combine in Minneapolis has become a certainty. The company has been spoken of as the Northwestern Consolidated Mill Company, but the name is not yet decided upon. The officers are still to be elected, but it is practically certain that A. C. Loring will become manager. The capital of the new company will be $2,250,000.

Took a Dose of Strychnine.

Gustave Schill, the landscape gardener at Duluth, committed suicide by taking a drachm of strychnine, mixed with water. The deceased was 36 years old and unmarried. Hard drinking was the cause of his rash act. Two doctors were called in immediately, but they labored over him in vain, and he died in half an hour in terrible agony.

The News Briefly Chronicled.

T. F. Byrnes, of Minnesota, has been appointed organizer of the National Republican league.

James Brown, of Echo, committed suicide by hanging himself. The cause of the rash act was not known.

Simpson & Co., of New York, have bought of Duluth parties for $600,000 the Crown Point silver mine, situated in the Thunder bay district, Canada.

James Harvey, of Bruceville, Ont., committed suicide at the Tremont hotel in St. Paul.

The post office at Norseland was broken into and robbed. The loss to the postmaster was about $800.

James Stow fell from a load of hay at Northfield, causing internal injuries. He is 78 years old and it was feared could not recover.

Willie Noonan, of Wabasha, was killed by being dragged by a colt.

The grand jury at Fergus Falls indicted Albert Goheen for murder in the first degree on the charge of shooting Rosa Bray.

Amherst Wilder Merriam, a 3-year-old son of the governor, died at his home in St. Paul.

D. N. Ware, senior member of the lumber firm of D. N. Ware & Son, and for upwards of a score of years an honored resident of Winnebago City, died at the age of 65 years of apoplexy.

Work has begun at Little Falls on the $50,000 hospital and school building of the Franciscan sisters, who make that city their headquarters.

Lewis Scott, aged 62 years, a member of company F, Eighth Minnesota, dropped dead at Little Falls while attending to his duties as janitor of the Episcopal church.

John Roche, city comptroller since 1864, dropped dead on a cable car in St. Paul as he was en route to the depot to meet his wife. He was 60 years old and came there in 1852 from New York city. His widow, a son at Northfield, Minn., and two daughters in New York survive him.

The postmaster at Minnehaha Falls has resigned and no candidate could be found to take his place.

Mr. and Mrs. George A. Pillsbury, of Minneapolis, celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage.

Three vessels loaded with ore have sailed from Two Harbors for Cleveland. It was the first ore shipment of the season.

John Reagan was accidentally shot by his son at Perham. While passing in a door behind the son the hammer of the gun struck the doorjamb sending the full charge of shot into the father's breast, killing him instantly.

IN NATALIE'S DEFENSE.

Gallant Students Frustrate an Effort to Expel the Unhappy Ex-Queen from Servia—Fired on by Troops, Two of Them Are Killed and Several Wounded.

BELGRADE, May 19.—The prefect of this city, who was charged by the regents with the duty of expelling ex-Queen Natalie from Servian territory, went to the latter's residence Monday and, in spite of her earnest protests, compelled her to enter a carriage which drove towards the Quay on the Danube, where the royal yacht was moored.

NATALIE.

The news that the ex-queen was really to be expelled from Servia had in the meantime spread throughout Belgrade and had reached the students' quarters. The latter promptly turned out in force, and as the carriage containing the unhappy lady was being driven toward the Danube it was surrounded by a crowd of students, who seized the horses' heads, brought the vehicle to a standstill and loudly cheered the royal prisoner. The students then detached the horses from the carriage and dragged the vehicle back to the ex-queen's residence, cheering loudly as they passed through the streets. The prefect, assisted by a force of gend'armes, tried in vain to regain possession of the ex-queen and several collisions took place between the gend'armes and the students.

After Natalie had been taken back to her residence by the students the cabinet assembled immediately and at 9 o'clock p. m. the ministers were still in session. The citizens and merchants generally side with the ex-queen. The residence of Natalie is defended by students. Intense excitement prevails.

A conflict occurred during the afternoon, the troops firing upon the queen's supporters, killing two and wounding many others. The premier received a deputation of citizens who asked him to intervene in the ex-queen's behalf.

OPINIONS ON LIVE ISSUES.

Prominent Men Define Their Positions on Political Questions.

BOSTON, May 19.—The Industrial Alliance sent out from this city the following questions, addressed to the members of the next congress:

(1) Do you favor government ownership of the telegraphs of the country?

(2) Do you favor government ownership of the railroads?

(3) Do you favor the establishment of postal savings banks?

(4) Do you favor the restoration of silver to the position it occupied before 1873—namely, on an equality with gold as a monetary standard of value?

(5) In your opinion what should be the volume of currency per capita in the country for the proper conduct of its business?

Replies have been received from thirty-three democrats, twelve republicans and nine who are classed as representative of the Farmers' Alliance. Some answered all of the questions, others answered only one or two. To the first question five democrats, five republicans and eight alliance men answered "yes"; eighteen democrats, six republicans and six alliance men answered "no."

To the second question "yes" was answered by two democrats, three republicans and six alliance men; "no" by twenty-one democrats, seven republicans and two alliance men.

Fourteen democrats, nine republicans and eight alliance men favored the establishment of postal savings banks; nine democrats and two republicans opposed it.

The silver question, the fourth in the series, was answered in the affirmative by twenty-nine democrats, ten republicans and nine alliance men; in the negative by two democrats—Messrs. Harter (O.) and Sperry (Conn.).

The last question was answered in only half of the letters received, and the per capita amount of currency varied from $30 to $100, the latter sum being mentioned by Jerry Simpson.

SHE WILL NOT FIGHT.

The Esmeralda Unable to Aid the Itata and Rendered a Non-Combatant by Reason of Her Failure to Obtain Fuel in Mexico.

CITY OF MEXICO, May 19—The war department has received a dispatch from Acapulco which says there is no probability of a fight between the Charleston and Esmeralda.

WASHINGTON, May 19. — Important dispatches received from the United States consul at Acapulco late Monday afternoon state that the insurgent steamer Esmeralda is a non-combatant because of its inability to get coal. It may remain at anchor in the harbor a reasonable time and obtain provisions, but the Mexican authorities are rigidly enforcing their neutrality laws by refusing it the privilege of coaling. The possibility of a fight between the Charleston and the Esmeralda therefore ceases. The Charleston may now continue its search for the Itata without the Esmeralda being able to give the fugitive vessel any aid. The insurgent man of war will hardly put to sea with the idea of reaching Panama or some port outside of Mexico under sail. It can do manœuvering from a naval point of view that will aid the Itata. It is believed at the navy department that the fugitive is also in distress, and the news received through the state department tends to confirm this view.

WINTER IN ENGLAND.

Severe Frosts and Snowstorms in Many Parts of the Island.

LONDON, May 19.—Winter still seems to linger in many parts of England. The hills about Monmouth were covered with snow Monday morning, and much damage was done to garden crops and fruits by severe frost. In North and East Essex a hard frost has prevailed, the ponds and streams are frozen, and in some places the ice is a quarter of an inch thick, whereby much damage is done to the fruit and all garden stuff, especially to the potato crop.

Found Watery Graves.

PHILADELPHIA, May 19.—Mrs. Susan Pascoe, aged 24, her infant son Christopher and Miss Mary Carr were drowned in the Schuylkill river, off Gibson's point, Sunday afternoon by the upsetting of a sailboat.

LOWELL, Mass., May 19.—Two Roberts brothers and Andrew Hardy were drowned in the Merrimac river, near North Chalmsford, Sunday by the capsizing of their canoe.

VERNDALE, Minn., May 19.—R. F. McDougall and his 5-year-old son were drowned Sunday in a mill pond by the capsizing of a boat.

WORSE THAN A CLUB.

The Man Who Sat on His Hat Had to Suffer for It.

It was on a suburban train coming into Jersey City. A bald-headed, fussy-looking man, with a pair of spectacles on his nose and his hat on the seat beside him, kept rubbing his pate in a nervous way and hitching about on the seat as if he was afraid of tacks. Opposite him sat a man who was closely watching his movements and chuckling and grinning until the attention of a dozen people was attracted. He was finally asked to explain, and he said:

"The old chap over there sat down on my hat, stepped on my toes and elbowed my ribs, and didn't apologize. I determined to get even with him. He always sits in that seat if it isn't occupied, and he always hunts around to find a paper instead of buying one. I'm getting even with him this morning."

"But how?"

"That paper is just three years old to-day. It cost me fifty cents to procure it, but I've had fifty dollars' worth of revenge. I left it on the seat, and he's been reading it for the last twenty miles. See?"

The old fellow struck the headlines of a railroad accident, looked puzzled, bobbed up and down, and slowly shook his head. He jumped from that to a murder—on to news from Washington—and for a minute was interested in the stock market. Then he folded the paper up, removed his glasses and looked out of the window with a troubled expression on his face.

"He's wondering if his mind isn't giving way, and is half-scared to death!" chuckled the joker. "Been flattering himself that he is good for twenty years yet, and the first thing he does when he gets to the city will be to buy some brain food and a liver pad. I'm not a bad, bad man, but the chap who sits down on my hat must at least apologize."—N. Y. Sun.

A Doctor's Ingenious Trick.

A curious story comes from Berlin, showing how a cheat was discovered. A man who was accused of theft set up a plea of insanity, thereby hoping to escape punishment. Prof. Mendel, a noted specialist, was deputed to examine the prisoner and report on the state of his mind. He found the man lying in bed. To all the questions put, such as how old he was, where he lived, what he was called, the prisoner invariably answered: "I don't know." Then the professor took a mark out of his purse and asked how much it was. "I don't know," was the answer, as before. The professor then asked for the prisoner's purse, out of which he took a mark, and once more the man declared that he didn't know its value; whereupon Prof. Mendel put a groschen into the prisoner's purse, while transferring the mark to his own. "Why, doctor," cried the patient, hastily, "you've made a mistake!" The imposture was made bare and the impostor convicted.—Golden Days.

MODERATE YOUR VOICE,

Or You Are Apt to Give a False Impression, Says Talmage.

Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage is fond of any story that will illustrate a sermon or beautify a moral? Here is one that he tells now and then in his own original way:

A German family emigrated from the Fatherland to this country and settled in Milwaukee. The oldest boy, in his teens, concluded he would start out for himself. Finally he brought up in New York city and soon spent all the money the old man had given him. Then he wrote to his father this kind of an appeal:

"DEAR FATHER: I am sick and lonely, without one single cent. Send me some money quick. Your son, JOHN.

Now the father was illiterate, and could not read, so he went to a great strapping butcher and asked him to read the letter. The butcher had a gruff way of reading, and a loud voice. When he finished reading John's letter, the father was furious, and declared he would not send a penny, even if the boy starved to death. He had never heard of such an impudent demand for money. On his way home the father thought the butcher might have made a mistake in reading, and a desire to hear the letter read again overcame him. A consumptive baker, with a low falling inflection, was next asked to read the son's letter. When he concluded, the father said, with tears in his eyes; "My poor boy. I'll send him all the money he wants." The baker had read, word for word, the letter as it was read by the butcher.

"German Syrup"

Here is an incident from the South—Mississippi, written in April, 1890, just after the Grippe had visited that country. "I am a farmer, one of those who have to rise early and work late. At the beginning of last Winter I was on a trip to the City of Vicksburg, Miss., where I got well drenched in a shower of rain. I went home and was soon after seized with a dry, hacking cough. This grew worse every day, until I had to seek relief. I consulted Dr. Dixon who has since died, and he told me to get a bottle of Boschee's German Syrup. Meantime my cough grew worse and worse and then the Grippe came along and I caught that also very severely. My condition then compelled me to do something. I got two bottles of German Syrup. I began using them, and before taking much of the second bottle, I was entirely clear of the Cough that had hung to me so long, the Grippe, and all its bad effects. I felt tip-top and have felt that way ever since." PETER J. BRIALS, Jr., Cayuga, Hines Co., Miss.

ANDY'S WIDDA.

We allus fix his grave up good,
Car'line 'n' me—at least she does.
Poor Andy! When he fell I stood
Right by him—so—as if it wuz
Me here—him there. I broke his fall
With a quick grab, but—that wuz all—
He left his wife a widda.

'N' that wuz what he dreaded, too.
From firs' to las',
He used to say:
"Oh! you're all right. Ef I wuz you
I wouldn't car' much either way;
But when you know you're goin' to leave
Some one behind to fret 'n' grieve
'N' live a lonely widda!"

He had her pictur'—jes' a girl,
A pleasant young thing—well enough;
But Andy 'lowed she were the pearl;
The best, tip-topest kind of stuff!
He used to look 'n' look 'n' smile
'N' say: "Old boy! she ain't the style
Now, is she, fer a widda?"

'N' my! I got that pictur' yet.
I kep' it kinder for his sake
When I fetched home his things 'n' met
His folks 'n'—her. I had to break
The news, 'n' mighty hard to do,
Seein' I'd brung poor Andy, too,
Home to his little widda.

Hard work, I tell ye, boys, that's so!
'N' sakes! ye'd oughter heard her cry!
Be good 'n' glad you didn't though;
But—well, she ca'med down by 'n' by,
'N' then I hed to tell about
Jes' how the whole blame scrape come out,
To that inquirin' widda.

'N' so on Decoration day
I git his grave up extra fine,
Or—Car'line does. I hev to stay
Most of the time in marchin' line—
A-filin' here, salutin' there—
Us vetterns got to do our share
Fer every soldier's widda.

But Andy, poor old boy! his grave—
We tend to that, or—Car'line does;
'N' then, of course, she likes to have
Her little quiet cry, becuz—
Well, jes' hectic—'twixt you 'n' me
It's on'y natural—for, you see,
I married Andy's widda.

'N' so it's kinder comforting
When Decoration day comes round
With the rememberies it bring
Of them old comrades underground,
It's really comforting to drink
Poor Andy's health 'n'—well, to think
His wife ain't left a widda.

ON SOLDIERS' GRAVES.

A Pathetic Story of Two Kind Little Girl Decorators.

"TAKE me back to mother," said the pallid lips of a bronzed young face, as it gazed beseechingly from one to another of the bystanders. "Take me back to old Tennessee," and the entreaty in face and form moved the people about him strangely, although he was their enemy.

A torrid afternoon in July of 1863 was dragging slowly along toward night. The little Indiana town, that for many days had been disquieted by martial sights and sounds, was deserted by nearly all the male population. Morgan, the raider, had whirled through it four days previously, after scattering the bands of citizens and militia who had gathered to oppose him. The next day Hobson had followed him, and was joined in his pursuit by the reunited home guards. Several of Morgan's wounded who were too severely injured to take along had been left in the care of the ladies of the place, who had hastily changed a church into a hospital.

The nurses were now gathered around this boy's couch, awaiting the arrival of the death angel. He was delirious, but his poor homesick heart could prompt one thought that seemed somewhat coherent; the thought that many a brave lad, southern and northern, voiced with his latest strength: "Take me home."

Little Lila Reynolds stood in the group surrounding the dying confederate. Her tears were falling fast, while the ladies were trying to hide their emotion. These mature women felt ashamed to weep over the death of a foe, when only a few days before they had assisted in every way they could to bring about that death. Lila's little sympathetic heart could feel only how horribly wrong it was for this beautiful boy to die so far away from home.

"WHY DON'T YOU TAKE HIM HOME?"

The feverish glances of the dying youth fell upon her, and he piteously begged:

"Little girl, make these people take me home."

The child was so overwhelmed that she turned upon the ladies and said:

"Why don't you take him home?"

Mrs. Reynolds here stepped forward and led the little girl away. The last words she heard Charles Wallace utter were:

"Little girl, they're cruel; they won't take me home."

As the sun was setting he died. The next morning early his remains were buried in a corner of the village graveyard. Lila visited the grave in the evening with flowers from her mother's garden. She tenderly smoothed the mound and tastefully arranged her floral tribute upon the fresh-turned earth.

As long as there was so much as a chrysanthemum in bloom Lila placed fresh flowers upon that lonely Southron's grave. She saved her pocket money and had a cedar plank painted white. Then she had the painter to place upon it the inscription:

CHARLES WALLACE,
A CONFEDERATE SOLDIER WHO WANTED TO GO HOME,
BUT I COULDN'T TAKE HIM.
LILA REYNOLDS.

The next spring Lila sodded the grave, planted a rose bush near its head and cared for the little mound as tenderly as her own bit of flower garden at home.

The summer of 1864 brought the sad intelligence to Judge Reynolds that his son, a soldier in the federal army, had fallen in an affray with guerrillas near Memphis. Harry Reynolds' captain wrote to the judge that Harry had been buried in a village cemetery a dozen miles from Memphis, and a cedar plank, upon which his name was carved, had been placed at his head.

Lila passed through a tempest of grief over the death of her brother, and then said:

"Maybe some little Tennessee girl that hates this wicked war like I do, will take care of brother's grave; so I'll keep poor Charley Wallace's grave nice, anyhow."

The tide of war flowed here and there throughout the south. As a rule, the women of the south were engaged in the sterner duties of life occasioned by the absence of so many of the male population. The terrible reality of war was ever near, and they, in many cases, became inured to the bloody scenes of those times. No sympathy could be wasted upon even their own dead, and of course they had little to spare for the northern troops.

In the town of Barrett, Tenn., where the remains of Harry Reynolds lay, the ladies were especially vindictive against the federal troops. Capt. Leslie had buried Harry in the village graveyard, because he wanted to leave a well defined clew to his resting place, by which his friend, Judge Reynolds, might find the grave of his son. The act was bitterly resented by some of the ladies of the place, and a few even talked of removing the body. One of them said:

"After all we've suffered from the ruthless tramping of northern soldiery over our homes, they place their dead alongside of ours. I say, take the Yankee's body up, and put it off to itself."

A little child with dark brown eyes here spoke:

"But, mamma, this Yankee can't do our dead any harm. The Yankee captain said his people will come some day and take him away. If he is left where he is, his father can find him easily. Captain Minter wrote from Chicago where he is in prison, that Charley was killed in the Morgan raid through Indiana. Maybe he was buried in some graveyard, and perhaps we we will some day find him. I should feel awful if we treat this poor Yankee boy badly, and then find out that my brother's grave had been cared for by northern people."

The ladies gathered at Mrs. Wallace's were touched by these tender words of little Cora Wallace. She saw her advantage, and continued:

"I think you might let me take care of Harry Reynolds' grave. I was standing by when they put him in the coffin. He was an awful pretty man. Not the same kind of pretty that my brother Charley was. His hair was light, but it clung to his forehead in the sweetest curls. Brother was dark, and I used to play with the coal-black hair on his head as it clustered about his temples. We think the northerners are wrong, but I suppose they think we are wrong. Anyway, this poor Yankee soldier and brother Charley cannot do any harm to either side. Let's treat the Yankee right, and maybe some one will treat Charley right."

One of the visitors here said:

"Cora is right, Mrs. Wallace. We cannot afford to carry our resentment into the graves of our enemies. Let us remember that once we were Christian people, and the day may come when we can again be such; and let us not do too much now, that we may regret after awhile."

Under the mellowing influences of talk like this, Mrs. Wallace softened, and her little daughter asked:

"May I fix up the Yankee's grave mamma?"

"Yes, dear, do as you wish."

So it transpired that Cora Wallace performed the same sad sweet offices for the grave of Harry Reynolds, that Lila Reynolds had been performing for the grave of Charles Wallace.

The war closed, thank God. The soldiers of both armies returned home, and purple pinioned peace spread her beauteous and benign wings over the land. The nobler hearts of both sections set steadily to work to heal the wounds of war. Among these peace makers were Col. Wallace of Tennessee, and Judge Reynolds of Indiana.

The judge had been deterred by official duties from visiting the south, and removing his son's remains until the summer of 1865. He started about the first of July, accompanied by Lila, upon this sad errand. He arrived in the middle of an oppressively hot afternoon. Lila insisted upon proceeding immediately to the grave. Getting directions from the hotel keeper, they passed down the shady streets and out to the cemetery. Entering the inclosure, they saw a little girl about Lila's age arise from a grave, from which she had been pulling the weeds. Lila whispered:

"O, papa, that little girl looks like my rebel."

As Cora gazed at them she thought:

"How much like my Yankee that little girl looks!"

"My child, can you show me the grave of a northern soldier named Harry Reynolds?"

"Yes, sir; this is it," was the low sweet reply.

The strong man and the little girl knelt reverently by the grassy mound. Cora drew back a few paces, and viewed the scene. She understood the case, and was in thorough sympathy with it. After the judge could control his emotion, he asked:

"Who has cared so tenderly for my boy's grave?"

"I, sir," again came Cora's low sweet voice.

"And what is your name my, child?" he asked, arising, and taking her hands in his.

"Cora Wallace, sir."

Here Lila eagerly inquired:

"Did you have a brother Charley in the Morgan raid through Indiana?"

"Yes, he was killed on that raid."

"And I have been keeping his grave up, in the same way you've done for Harry's."

The two children here flew into each other's arms, and clasped each other in a long embrace of subdued joy, while Judge Reynolds shook and swayed with uncontrolled emotion. He and his little daughter were that night the guests of Col. Wallace.

The following day the remains of Harry Reynolds were placed in a casket and started north with Judge Reynolds and Col. Wallace accompanying them. The children sat with arms entwined during most of the journey. Three days later, Col. Wallace, in gray regimentals, gave the command "Fire" to the company of union soldiers as they fired the military salute over the last grave of Harry Reynolds.

"YES, SIR; THIS IS IT."

Three days still later, Charley Wallace was laid in his new grave at Barrett. Cora wrote a description of the funeral to Lila, who said, as she finished the letter:

"He got home to Tennessee at last."

HOW PHRASES ORIGINATED.

Curious Expressions That Have Become Household Words.

The origin of the phrase, "I can't see it," is traced to Lord Nelson, who at the battle of Copenhagen was told that a signal was given to cease firing and the direction pointed out to him. Seizing a telescope he applied it to his blind eye and exclaimed: "I can't see it."

"Hauling over the coals" dates six or seven centuries back, when feudal barons often used harsh methods of extracting gold from the rich Jews by suspending their victims above slow fires until they paid ransoms or died. There was a scene of this sort in "Ivanhoe," in which the Front de Boeuf endeavors to extort money from Isaac of York, father of Rebecca.

The term "blue stocking" was originally used in Venice about the year 1400 to designate literary classes by colors. In Mill's "History of Chivalry" we are told that members of the various academies were distinguished by the color of their stockings, blue being the prevailing color. The application of the term to women originated with Miss Hannah More's admirable description of a "Blue Stocking club" in her "Bas Bleu."

"Corporations have no souls" is a much older expression than most people imagine. It originated with Sir Edward Coke, who, in the sixteenth century, was considered one of the best legal writers of the age. He says in one of his treatises: "Corporations cannot commit trespass, nor be outlawed, nor excommunicated, for they have no souls."

The phrase "I acknowledge the corn" originated with a slave. He was charged with stealing corn found in his possession. Having a sack with him he was also charged with stealing that. His reply was: "No, sar; I 'knowledge de corn, but I ain't gwine to 'knowledge to de sack."

"Any color so it's red," originated among the class of characters called Jakeys in the local drama. One of them being on a committee appointed to procure a new fire engine was asked what color the company desired the apparatus painted. He replied: "Why, any color so it's red."

"Drowning the miller" originated from the following fact: If the mill stream below the mill is dammed or stopped the water is pounded back and the mill becomes what the millers call "tailed." There is too much water, the mill will not work and the miller is said to be "drowned out." Hence when too much of any one article is put into a mixture it is called "drowning the miller."

"Better late than never," was used over three hundred years ago by Thomas Tucker in his "Five Hundred Points of Good Husbandry." Later on Bunyan used it in his "Pilgrim's Progress."

Not a few of the phrases in use at this day originated with Lyly and are found in his Euphues, a popular book published in 1580. Among them might be mentioned "caught napping," "a crooked stick or none," "brown study," "catching birds by putting salt on their tails," etc.

When people do not particularly like each other it is sometimes said "there is no love lost between them." The phrase occurs in the old ballad, "The Babes of the Wood," and in a tale of the days of Shakespeare entitled "Montchensey."—Chicago News.

SCATTERING FLOWERS.

Scatter your flowers alike to-day,
Over the graves of the blue and gray.
Time has healed all the nation's scars,
Peace has hushed all the noise of wars,
And north and south, and east and west
There beats but one heart in the nation's breast;
The grass is green and the flowers bloom
Alike upon soldier and sailor's tomb;
So scatter your flowers alike to-day,
Over the graves of the blue and gray.

Ah! each was gallant and brave and true,
Whether he wore the gray or the blue;
Alike each sought for a soldier's fame,
Alike each won him a soldier's name;
Yet what the guerdon each soldier found?
A dreamless sleep 'neath a grassy mound!
O let us forget what coat each wore,
Let us scatter our flowers freely o'er
The sacred spots where sleep to-day
The dead who once wore the blue and gray!

Alas! for the tear drops shed like dew
Over the gray and over the blue;
Alas, for the eyes that sought in vain
For the soldier dead on the battle plain—
Came death alike to friend and to foe,
To wives and mothers like grief and woe!
And the bitter sorrow our sad hearts knew
Was felt for the loss of both gray and blue;
Then scatter your flowers alike to-day,
Over the graves of the blue and gray.

Oh! by the bitter tears we shed
Alike o'er our lov'd ones lying dead,
Oh! by the common grief we knew
Whether we mourned the gray or blue;
By the drops scarce dry on the widow's cheek,
By the common language our children speak,
We have bid all malice forever cease,
We have blessed the land with a lasting peace,
And scatter our flowers alike to-day
Over the graves of the blue and gray.

DOMESTIC CONCERNS.

—Hot tallow is said to remove machine oil from white goods. Repeated applications will also remove ink stains, if exposed to the rays of the sun.

—Hot Sauce: Set a bowl in a basin of hot water, refilling so as to keep it hot. In the bowl beat one egg and one cupful of sugar; flavor. When ready to serve, beat in one-half cupful of boiling milk. Stir as it is served, so it will be thick only on top.

—Corn Bread: One quart of cornmeal, one pint of flour, one pint of thick, sour milk, one egg, two tablespoonfuls of molasses, one teaspoonful of soda; mix all together, adding the white of the egg well beaten; last, steam one hour in a two-quart pail, and bake ten or fifteen minutes to brown.—Boston Herald.

—For Swiss roll mix together one teacupful of flour and one teacupful of granulated sugar previously rolled, one teaspoonful of baking-powder in the flour and two eggs, which should not be beaten. Butter a baking tin, spread on the mixture and bake in a quick oven about eight minutes; then spread it with any jam you may choose, roll it up, dust it over with sugar, and serve when cold.—N. Y. World.

—Baked Custard: A very good rule is to beat four or five eggs, add a little over half a cupful of white sugar, pour in one quart of rich milk, grease a basin or pudding dish; pour the custard into it, grate nutmeg over the top; set the dish in a dripping-pan of hot water and bake in a moderate oven. Try them with a teaspoon handle. If the oven is right, and they are not baked too long, they are very nice.—Housekeeper.

—Milk Toast: Slice some bread, toast it of a nice light brown on both sides. Boil a pint of milk; mix together two teaspoonfuls of flour in a little cold water; stir this into the boiling milk. Let it boil about one minute, then add a little salt and stir into it two ounces of butter. Dip the toast in the milk, place it on a dish, and pour the remainder of the milk over it. The toast may be made much richer by increasing the quantity of butter.—Boston Budget.

—Bananas in Jelly: Make with boiling water a quart of strong and sweet lemonade, using only the juice of the lemons. Soak half a box of gelatine one hour in a cup of cold water; stir it into the boiling lemonade and set it where it will cool, but not harden. Cut three bananas in lengthwise halves and lay them in a mold wet with cold water, cover them with half the jelly, and set the mold upon the ice until the jelly sets. Then slice in three more bananas and pour in the remainder of the jelly. Serve with cream and soft custard.—Ladies' Home Journal.

—Many performers on the piano do serious injury to their eyes by neglecting to pay proper attention to the arrangement of the light. If you sit facing a light, either natural or artificial, you are helping to make a fortune for the oculist and the optician. The light should fall on the music over the shoulder, either the right or the left, according to the location of the piano. The striking combination of black and white on the keyboard and of black and white on the page of music is trying in the extreme to delicate eyes, and every possible precaution should be taken to render the light as agreeable as possible.

—To Broil Sheep's Kidneys: Take a sharp knife and cut each kidney open lengthways, but do not separate them; skin them, and put a tiny skewer under the white part of each, to keep them flat; heat the gridiron a little, rub it over with butter, and place the kidneys on it, open part down, and broil over a clear fire; broil carefully on both sides, season with pepper and salt and put a piece of butter in the center of each, and a few drops of Worcestershire sauce, and place each kidney on a piece of well-buttered toast; they must be served as hot as possible. Pigs' kidneys are prepared in the same way.—Boston Herald.

HOW TO CUT VELVET.

A Simple Suggestion for the Uninitiated Dressmaker.

The amateur dressmaker has usually a number of petty worries, and one special to her is the cutting of velvet. As it is used so much, even on cotton costumes, it is necessary that she should know just how it should be done. Dressmakers prefer to cut velvet with the pile running up, for then it doesn't flatten down from wear; however, no matter what way you may cut it, at least to have it all alike.

When you cut any figured or floral design do not make the mistake of cutting two pieces at once, as is often done with plain goods; the figures and stripes should always match perfectly, and this is not possible when two sections are cut together.

About velvet folds. Don't rely on having the last ones the right size by laying the first one on the material and following its outlines; the result will be waste of fabric and irregular folds. The same care in measuring must be taken with each one, and it is not wise to rely on the eye for exactness, but to mark the line with chalk and then to cut it.

It is most desirable to put braid on by hand; hem it down, because then it will not curl up at the sides. Do not put it on very tight, as it draws and looks very ugly.

Never tear lawns or cambrics; it rolls the edges. Draw thread and then cut the widths.

Do not under any circumstances make a bodice that fits you like a tight glove. It is not good to look at, and it will certainly stretch at the seams and ravel and proclaim that it was made by some one who didn't understand the art of dressmaking.—N. Y. Sun.

A Girl's Clever Game.

Here is the latest in the way of a bright game as told by a clever girl: First, she wrote down all the names of her guests on slips of paper and put them in a hat. The hat was passed around and each person drew a slip. Each one in turn was to go out of the room and, on entering it again, personate the man or woman whose name he had drawn. The other guests were then to guess the name. Some of the impersonators were so clever at catching the mannerisms and phrases of their friends that the others guessed almost instantly who the original was. But, besides a genius for originality in the author of this idea, it demands a genius for common sense and kindly feeling on the part of the players in the game. For any touch of unfriendliness or ridicule, or of anything that would put one pang into the pure fun of the occasion, would spoil it all. And so, you see, the very ability to play it successfully becomes a kind of touchstone of character.—Chicago Journal.

DELANO DIARY.

—John Cunningham has sold his team of colts to Dr. Catlin.

—John Brasie has a new buggy. One for business and one for pleasure.

—George W. Bolton has sold his driving horse. Leon Frazee has bought a new one.

—A crew of men have been putting down new tamarack ties on the Great Northern's track, in the yard, at this place.

—Louie Wandersee had a runaway on Sunday, near Ottoes on the Buffalo road. The buggy was considerably demoralized and the young lady lost a ride.

—Albert Williams and his crew of men and teams are apparently dropping a few of their seeders, among the farmers in this vicinity. Headquarters at Danforth's Hotel.

—Tom Lanway was a Gazette caller on Wednesday. Tom is opening up a new farm near the Advent Church, in Hennepin County. Neighbors say he is a hard worker, early and late.

—If your taste hankers for green stuff call for it at Cramer's butcher shop. Frank keeps lettuce, radish, cabbage, asparagus, onions and such, also, anything in the meat and sausage line and will smile on you if you give him a chance.

—The two little tourists, who have been putting up at Young's Hotel for a few weeks past, have left town almost as suddenly as they came.

Later, they returned and the younger has again taken up his abode at the hotel while the elder has gone west again.

—William Hawker and Ephraim Ball hitched horses and made a trip to Twincite, this week, with some perk, etc. They were belated some what and returned home on Wednesday, Eph coming in on foot and Mr. H. stopping at lake Sarah and enjoying a good fish.

—The new law relating to the practice of midwifery requires a license to be obtained from the State Medical examining Board, and a fee of $1.00 to be paid. Persons, other than licensed or Physicians and Surgeons engaging in the practice, are liable to a fine, of from $10. to $50. or imprisonment from 10 to 30 days.

—On Tuesday the hearts of our farmers were made glad, and their faces assumed more pleasant shapes, and the old time twinkle came into their eyes when they saw the thickening clouds come over their heads and felt the warm pattering drops and beheld the gentle rain descending upon the earth which had for several day shown the need of moisture.

—Editor Buckley was noticed prowling around the back alleys, bear-headed, and puffing like a porpoise the other evening. On enquiry we learned he was searching for oyster and fruit cans, to place around his plants in the garden, as the pestiferous cut worm was about to take every thing. Of course we suggested that he get McKinley to raise the tariff on tin so as to make tin cans more penty.

—Street Commissioner J. D. Brandon, commenced operations Tuesday morning, and is building a dirt bridge for a sidewalk on Second street between River street and Third, hauling dirt to cover the rubbish pile near the Public School Building, and doing what he can to make things look right. If he was furnished with a grade of some kind to work to, perhaps future Street commissioners would not have to remove so much from some of our high places, where dirt is now being hauled.

—Two teams and four men have been set to work hauling manure out of the alleys and off of the premises, of Delano citizens. Due notice has been given for the past month that this would be done. All rubbish hauled away from any premises will be carefully kept account of, and persons desiring to pay can do so after the job is done, or the amount will be placed as taxes, against the property. Any swine found within the limits prescribed will be summarily ejected. citizens act accordingly.

—An interesting meeting of the town supervisors of Rockford and Franklin townships was held on Thursday May 14, on the banks of the raging Crow, near Ruckoldt's bridge. After partaking of a lunch provided by bridge builders, the Franklin board refused to take part in the opening of bids as they were bound by a vote of their constituency at the last town meeting not to do so. The Rockford board opened the bids three in number, one for $3080. another $3150 and still another for $3250. The bid of S. M. Hewitt being the lowest. It was decided by the town board of Franklin that in case there would be a special town meeting called and two thirds of the voters saw fit to cast their ballots in favor of aiding in the construction of a bridge they would take part. It seems that the signature of a dozen freeholders to a petition to the Town Board asking them to call an election to vote to assist in building a bridge is necessary, before the Town Clerk, who is rather averse to haying the bridge rebuilt will call post notices. Let those interested in the matter move, appears to be the state of mind of the Clerk, at present.

—S. A. Cutter, a former St. Peter boy, is home on a visit. He has lately been working at his trade, sign making, at Delano, Minn. He will be here two weeks.—St. Peter Tribune.

—Charles Weise has been to the city and purchased a fine driving horse, for family use.

—Jim Nelson was looking for a crew of men to work on the Railroad, on last Sunday. Men seem to be employed at present.

—When John Coolen throws his ponderous form onto a brake the train is apt to stop before long, pretty quick, as was demonstrated on Monday.

—Postmaster C. H. Vorse has commenced the erection of a dwelling on the lots on Second Street, near the school building recently purchased by him of the Breed, Atwater & Payte estate.

—A couple of barrels of cowbells were shipped from Delano to Jenny Sample & Co, Minneapolis on Monday. They came from Watertown where they were manufactured by Mr. William Bledhorn.

—Johnston Mealey, of Howard Lake passed through Delano, on Monday, with one of his fine driving horses, on his way to the cities to feel the state of the horse markets. He stopped in Delano long enough to take a drink and give his horse one from the town pump.

—One of our fellow townsmen is said to have rode half a mile, or so, beyond what had paid fare for on his return from Minneapolis, Monday evening and had to foot it on the back track to town. The stations should be called loud enough to prevent occurrences of this kind.

—William Weldelee is finishing up his house with Acme cement instead of common plastering. This is something new, comes from Indiana, and makes a very firm wall. No hair is used in working it. A. Rewoldt is doing the plastering. John Coolen expects to use it on a part at least of his new residence.

—Watertown seems to be taking a boom, and the spirit of enterprise is about to manifest itself in the building of a city hall, fitting up school buildings, grading streets and other ways among which druggist Halgren being bound to keep up with the times is going to have his drugs dispensed from a new prescription case.

—William Ziebarth was in to see us on Wednesday. He is not very favorable impressed with the Eagle's version of assessments. He claims the equalization boards should bear some blame. We guess he is about right about it. What do we have equalization boards for if not to equalize people's taxes, correct any inadvertances of the assessor or the property owner who gave in the list of his property? Let all parties share the blame or the honor if there is any.

—The Cereal Factory has gone to pieces, struck a snag. Not many evenings since a few of those interested gathered together at the Eagle Office, and a couple of them had been to the cities looking over prices, prospects etc, etc, and expressed themselves as not satisfied with things, in general, when Mr. Wescott moved that the whole matter be dropped. The was put and carried. In order to have things move smoothly it is necessary to pay tolerably strict attention to parliamentary laws, and thereby leave no chance for complaints. Every share holder should be given a chance to vote to the extent of his shares, or share, as the case may be, on a question like that. For half a dozen members to come together and disband the whole concern after the ground had been broken to commence the building on, seems like rather peculiar proceedings. If such a move was to be made it should have been in a meeting called for that purpose or, if in a regular meeting, the members should have been notified so that they could vote on the question.

Memorial Day.

The 30th of May has been designated as a holiday. Places of business are to be closed, and every body is expected to turn out and visit the cemeteries where lie all that remains of once strong arms and healthy men, who, thirty years ago left their plows in the field, left their mills, their shops, their offices and their counters and bidding adieu to friends, to families; to their mothers and fathers, to their children and wives, shouldered their muskets, fell into line and marched to the far off south, to do battle with their fellow countrymen, with foemen worthy of their steel. This day is universally observed in every city, village and community. On the 30th of May is brought vividly to mind the days of '61 when to the fife's shrill notes and the drum's rub-a-dub the flower of our land wended its way to the front and placed names to the rapidly lengthening list of those who were willing to go; to the call of "Old Abe" for three hundred thousand more.

A meeting for the purpose of arranging to observe the day, at this place was held at the city hall, on Tuesday, and adjourned to Wednesday to consult with the band as to whether they could furnish music for the occasion. At the meeting on Wednesday they said they would come out for half a day.

The meeting then adjourned until Saturday evening, May 2nd, at the Post Office, as the City Hall has been engaged for other purposes. Those who are interested, and who is not? Are asked to come and take part in organizing committees and making a programme for the occasion. We do not wish to be behind other places in observing the legal holidays of our land nor in paying respect to those who have aided in making our country peaceful and prosperous. Bome to the meeting on Saturday evening.

—Subscribe for the Buffalo Gazette.

—Attorney O'Hair and family visited the west bound train last night and shook hands with his eldest sister on her way from Iowa to Waverly, for a visit.

—We are glad to note that the School Board have voted at last to take steps to fix up the heating and ventilating apparatus in the school house. This is a long and badly needed innovation.

—Charles Wandersee vs. Henry Liederbach of Rockford was before Justice Bohn again yesterday, a change of venue was taken to Squire Grafft's court. I. H. now has the case, taking the three days, granted by law in which to render a decision.

Fred Lindsley's new pony created quit a stir at 2 P. M. to-day by running down Railroad Avenue at full speed with the express wagon with three bundles of pitchforks on. He ran from Lindsley's store to the Post office, demolishing the wagon considerably. No one hurt.

Village Trustees Meeting.

At 8 P. M. on Monday, evening, May 18, the Village Trustees met at the council room. All present, Wittman presented a petition from Messrs Swedeback and Steffes for use of City Hall for Band Benefit. It was voted to grant the use of the hall free of charge.

The Koch Lymph Discredited.

The practical abandonment of the Koch lymph in all the Philadelphia hospitals for the cure of tuberculosis is highly significant. It is another indication that skilled American physicians, after thorough and long continued trials of the lymph, are coming to the conclusion that its value as a curative agent is so slight that it is not worth while to use it. The extravagant claims at first made in behalf of the fluid inspired many sanguine persons with an implicit belief in its invincibility in pulmonary diseases.

This belief was quickly dissipated in most instances by the failure of the lymph to produce the desired results. Dr. KOCH'S remedy has been for some time discredited in public opinion. The verdict rendered against it by a great majority of the ablest physicians in New York and Philadelphia must tend to condemn it utterly.—New York Press.

BE CAREFUL WHAT YOU SAY.

FROM THE PRISON MIRROR.

In speaking of a person's faults
Pray don't forget your own;
Remember, those with homes of glass
Should seldom throw a stone;
If we have nothing else to do
But talk of those that sin,
'T is better we commence at home,
And from that point begin.

We have no right to judge a man,
Until he's fairly tried,
Should we not like his company,
We know the world is wide;
Some may have faults—and who has not?
The old as well as young—
Perhaps we may, for ought we know,
Have fifty to their one.

I'll tell you of a better plan,
And find it works full well;
To try their own defects to cure
Before of others tell;
And though I sometimes hope to be
No more than some I know,
My own shortcomings bid me let
The faults of others go.

Then let us all when we commence
To slander friend or foe,
Think of the harms one word would do
To those we little know;
Remember, curses sometimes like
Our chickens "roost at home;"
Don't speak of others faults until
We have none of our own.
—Dallas Liberator.

THE Charleston is reported as having arrived at Callao, without having found the Itata.

Blaine to resign the important office of Secretary of State, is among the latest news.

CONGRESSMAN HOUK, of Tennessee accidentally took arsenic in water for ice water, at Knoxville, Tenn., and although the mistake was made in a drug store and physicans were immediately summoned who endeavored to save his life he died at 6 o'clock Monday morning He was a Republican and had been congressman from Tennessee for seven terms

PORTER VS. SABINE, in Chicago, this week is a case said to have grown out of Mr. Porter having been induced to invest in old Symour Sabin & Co. stock, in the car manufacturing business, at Stillwater. The suit is to recover $100.000.00.

THE Republican papers are already pitching into the new party formed at Cincinnatti the other day, the People's Party, in great shape. Nothing seems to be severe enough for them. Words don't express their feelings. The N. Y. Press has a picture of a horrid monster coming forth from a pumpkin and labelled. "Forth from the pumpkin cometh monstrosity even its parents knew cannot survive." Among other leaders against monopolistic views is portrayed the form of Cipher Donnelly, in the back ground. This we think wrong. The Sage is bound to have a prominent part. No back ground shadow for him, if you please. Still we are of opinion that the boat has been overloaded, even if a Prohibition plank was voted down.

UNIVERSITY students at Iowa City turned out about 300 strong to welcome home their base ball team that had been to Grinnell and come of victorious. The police interfered with some of their demonstrations and a general row occurred. University students should not allow the exuberance of their joy to be too great, neither should the police seek to be too officiacious when the students desire a little recreation. It is hard telling at this distance from the scene of action and from the reports at hand who is to blame. But peacable people prefer that peace prevails.

QUITE a lively discussion is going on in St. Paul, over the question of whether people shall be taxed in America, to teach foreign languages to their children, or whether St. Paul shall abolish the teaching of German from her schools. The Daily News has interviewed quite a number of the leading citizens of St. Paul on the subject. Some of the German's stick up for the teaching of their mother tongue, in good shape. But the weight of argument, with those interviewed, appears to be in favor of abolishing the study of any language but the English, from the schools. Admitting that it is an accomplishment to be able to speak in foreign tongues and, many times, handy, it seems to be an expense to a large majority of the people for the benefit of the minority who wish their children to speak German. All our public affairs are conducted in English. Every American whether native born or adopted, should learn English, the language of America, and not only speak but read and write the language of his country as soon as possible. Languages foreign to our tongue should be treated alike. Persons wishing to learn them should do so as they learn other accomplishments, as higher Mathematics, Sciences and so on. First be a good citizen of the United States. Then if need more can easily acquire it. All children in this country desire to, and should learn English reading, writing and spelling. All wish to learn Arithmetic. The public moneys should be used for the public good. Those desiring other studies than does the entire school, should receive them as painting and other embelishments are acquired. If one foreign language is taught, others have an equal right to demand that their children be instructed in their mother tongue. And what a Babel we would have. Imagine one of our country schools with the children of different nationalities gathered in little knots by themselves, a few French here, half a dozen Scandinavians there; in this corner the German, there the Polls, and by themselves the English speaking part of the school. Where would the teacher be found to take charge of such a school? Better learn our country's language at school in this country. Then when our children are larger grown, they will not need an interpreter to inform them what is going on in Courts of Justice. They can read for themselves what our government officials are doing and take an active and intelligent part in the conducting of pubic affairs, far better than if they adhere to mother tongues to the exclusion of the language of their adopted country.

Carlton's New Telescope.

Special to the Globe.

NORTHFIELD, May 26.— Carlton's new telescope, the only one of its kind in the United States, has arrived, and preparations are being made to put it in place. Carlton will have one of the best equipped observatories in this country.

A Poisonous Well.

CENTRALIA, Wash., May 26.—While grading a street here this morning a laborer uncovered an old well to ascertain its depth. He was overcome by foul air and fell into the well. Three other laborers who went to his assistance were also precipitated into the well in the same manner. After the air became pure, the men were brought to the surface. Only one, a man named Ford, could be resuscitated. The names of the dead are Burns, Perry and Dobson.

THE KENTUCKY CAPTURE.

The attempts to break up the career of SCHWEINFURTH, the Illinois Messiah, have apparently been untilized to make proselytes to the new faith. The recent dispatches report him in Kentucky preaching his doctrines so powerfully as to convert nearly all the congregation of a Methodist church. It possessed not only a neat church edifice but a new school house, and the account indicates that both were given to the Lord as personated by the Illinois fellow. Kentucky is not a state where the people jump at novelties, whether in religion or other relations. If the Illinois claimant can capture churches in Kentucky as a body, it is not surprising that women in other sections can be fascinated or hypnotized into becoming angels in his paradise. The religious phenomena are hard to account for at times.—St. Paul Globe.

SANCTITY OF PERSON.

The Supreme Court Settles a Very Important Question.

WASHINGTON, May 26.—The United States supreme court has in the case of the Union Pacific railroad against Clara L. Bottsford made an important ruling on the subject of the right of corporations sued for personal injuries to insist on examinations by their own surgeons. The case came before the court April 1, from the decision of the circuit court of Indiana against the railroad company. Clara L. Bottsford sued the company for alleged injuries to her spine caused by the fall of a sleeping car berth which was negligently constructed. Three days before the trial the company asked the court for an order requiring the suing party to submit to an examination by the company's physician, the examination to be made with as little exposure of the person as possible, and in the presence of the physician of the injured woman. The court overruled this motion on the sole ground that it had not the legal right to enforce such an order. The case came before the supreme court on the correctness of this ruling. The court, in an opinion by Justice Gray, sustains the lower court, and says it appears that it is an invasion of the sanctity of the person to a degree that the law does not recognize, and that it is inconsistent with the common law. The opinion said that the court could not find until within a generation it ever was thought that a court of common law had such power as was demanded in this case. Justice Brewer said that actions for damages for personal injuries, now so common, were very infrequent years ago, and that it was therefore an open question and one not determinable under the old common law procedure. If a person permitted exposure for the purposes of examination by the physicians who would be called to testify in her behalf it seemed to him but common justice that an order should be made to permit examination by the opposite side. He did not think it right that any person after making disclosures of the person where her interests were promoted should be permitted te refuse this examination to a physician representing the company sued on the plea of sanctity of the person.—St. Paul Globe.

ANNANDALE ANNALS.

Religious services in the M. E. Church Sunday evening, Mr. Higgins officiating. The sacrament of the Lord's supper was administered in the forenoon at Grace Church in Southside by Elder Ringer assisted by Elder Higgins. The attendance was large, there being many there from neighboring churches.

Mr. John Sheyer, one of the enterprising farmers of Corinna, is erecting a wind mill for pumping water and other purposes.

The citizens of the village of Annandale, held a meeting Monday evening, to consider the matter of celebrating the Fourth of July:

It was decided to celebrate and Miss H. Huntington, J. J. Reunie, John H Buri, W. D. McDonald, John B. Dally, W. W. Towle and Herman Klatt were appointed a committee to make all needful arrangements.

Mr. L. Williams, our druggist, made a business trip to the cities Tuesday and Wednesday.

Joseph Cleveland has commenced the erection of another house on Cherry Avenue, this one being for a tenant.

We were agreeably surprised last Saturday morning by finding a nice string of fish in our veranda, and desire to recognize the compliment and thank the donor but are at loss as to whom we are particularly, indebted. We have learned, semi-officially, that a trio of professional gentlemen were out fishing the night before—a preacher, a doctor and a lawyer also a druggist and to make a sure thing of it we hope the preacher may, in the future, be as successful in building up the cause he labors in as in the past; that the doctor, for the sake of his patients as well as himself, may have his usually good success in his practice; that the lawyer may continue to maintain his reputation as a successful practitioner and as for the druggist we hope his medicines will cure all the ailments they are prescribed for.

Presiding Elder Stanford stopped off the train here Tuesday morning on his way to Silver Creek, for the purpose of dedicating the M. E. church there, and administration of the sacrament. Rev. Mr. Higgins accompanied him.

The Editor of the Post spent last Saturday and Sunday in the twin cities returning Monday evening.

Henry Dobel has taken a desk and window in the Music Store of Davis & Adkins and offers his services at Reparing and cleaning watches and clocks also jewelry.

A. J. Zeviner who has been the wheat buyer for the Flatt House for the past two years has closed the house and gone back to Blooming Prairie, his former home.

George Eagy, of Albion has the job of putting in the new front to the Drug store and is doing the work this week.

We learn that W. H. McDonald and wife, who went to Washington a few months ago are about to return to this place, also Frank Garey and wife.

FIRE at South Haven Saturday night (23d) at about 12 o'clock, fire was discovered in the oil room of A. G. Lano's store and extended to the store of Monitor & Perry thence to dwelling house of Chas. Weeks and both stores and contents were destroyed except a small amount of goods out of Monitor & Perry's store. Mr. Weeks saved none of his furniture. Mr. Lano's loss in building and goods $5,000. Insured $3,000. Monitor & Perry's loss $1,000. chiefly on building, no insurance. Week's loss $600., no insurance. Mr. Lano with his family lived over the store and the fire cut off egress by the stairs and Mr. L. jumped from a second story window and injured one foot badly. Mrs. L. swung herself with a child, from a window and hung there till help came to her rescue, another older child was rescued with much difficulty, being bewildered with smoke and fright took refuge under a bed. The Hotel across the street, owned by C. M. King, was considerably damaged.

WATERTOWN WAYS.

Guy Halgren returned home, from his studies in the business college, to spend a week.

Commissioner Boylan went to Chaska last Monday on official business.

Dr. Catlin and Miss Julia Cunningham, of Delano, were visiting with C. G. Halgren and family last Sunday.

Miller Wescott of Delano was doing business in Watertown on Wednesday of this week.

Mr. Eugine Heck spent Sunday in Minneapolis with his sister. He also visited Central Park on Sunday while there, and took in the sights.

Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Johnson of Rockford spent Tuesday at the parsonage with Rev. and Mrs. Davies.

Rev. J. R. Davies and wife went to Cedar Mills last Wednesday to visit with Mrs. Davie's sister who resides there, they expect to be absent the rest of this week.

EDITOR BUFFALO GAZTITE:—To the money lords, the trusts, monopolies and combines who the people ignorantly worship. It has been a custom in all monarchial governments for the monyed men and rulers of the country to heap heavy burdens upon the poor. Even when the children of Israel were in Egyptian bondage there task masters put upon them all they could bear, and it seems to have followed in the same line one generation after another up to this present time and has even crept into Republican governments. This country is not governed by one man power as if it were ruled by a king, or sovereign, but there is a power creeping into the folds and free institutions of our republican form of government that is eating like the canker worm, and that is the money power. We read in the book of Daniel about that Babylonian kingdom, that king Nebuchadnezzar set up. It was the first universal monarchial kingdom ever established. It was the gold kingdom, "though art this head of gold." Now the Vanderbilts, the Goulds and others are setting up a golden immage in this country for the poor to fall down and worship then a herald cried aloud, "to you it is commanded O people, nations and languages, that at what time ye hear the sound of the coronet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, dulcimer and all kinds of music ye fall down and worship the golden image that the king hath set up (money lords of this country). Is this not coming to pass right here at home, under our own observation and who dare deny it? When it becomes a fact that the wealth of a nation is in the hands of a few, there is no more good times for the poor class unless the evil has a remedy and that speedily.

In 1862 during the rebellion, a few in this country combined with some of the money lords of England to make money while the war was going on and apportunity offered a chance; have kept on, step by step, until it has grown from an ant-hill and become a mountain, that will be hard to remove. Our country is becoming alarmed. The farmers and laboring classes broken up into small factions, each demanding there rights and protection from the government, and we claim you may follow every faction and avenue of discontent and it will lead you to the belief that the money power is the fountain head of all this trouble. Has it not been demonstrated that money will control the ballot box, also our state legislaturers and our national Congress? Then what more is needed? And if the people will get at the money power of this country and first control that, they can govern every thing else accordingly they are then at the root and fountain head of everything else, but it will be a hard matter to choke these fellows off; they have been at it so long it has become second nature to them. They have been sucking the government cow for the last 30 years and they will be hard to wean "For we remember the fish which we did eat in Egypt freely, the cucumbers and the melons and the leeks and onions and the garlick." Num. 11:5 we have a Prohibition party in this country that is fighting one of the worst evils a nation ever had, the whisky traffic. Their principles are good but they never can control it as long as our monetary system remains as it is. Legislatures and congress legislate in favor of the liquor traffic in order that men may make money out of it, they do not want the whisky as much as they want the money and you can find plenty of men who willingly sacrific every thing for the almighty dollar. Class legislation has been one of the main features in bringing about the condition of things at this present time the working class have found out the dollar they honestly earned and that should have gone to them that other fellow got, and they think it is about time to kick and we do not wonder but there seems to be a few of these poor fellows yet who have no conception how things are going but content themselves to follow the same old traditions their fathers taught them years ago. We admit that it is hard even for the most intelligent mind to conceive an idea of just how a reformation of things may be brought about that would do the most good, to the greatest numbers, but, we know there is a remedy and it should be brought about in some way, and that speedily. Our country is large and her resources immense and it takes wise legislation, men of forethought to see the drifting of things as they now exist and presence of mind to govern them before they go to far.

Yours with hope that all may yet be well.

JOHN MCGARY.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

Washington May 22, 1891.

Mr. Harrison isn't living up to the reputation given him by his son Russell's paper It he is the brains as well as the head of the administration, why doesn't he take hold of the very important questions now in an unsettled condition before the Department of State? Mr. Blaine's absence could not have been better timed if it had been previously arranged—which it may have been—to give Mr. Harrison an opportunity to show the country that Mr. Blaine has been nothing more than a clerk to him. But the gentleman from Indiana is too shrewd to give himself away; he finds the matters pertaining to the other departments so pressing that he informed Mr. Blaine's assistant, who carried a big bundle of papers to the White House, that he was so busy that he would defer foreign matters for a few days. In the mean time he is probably praying that Mr. Blaine will return before these papers are again brought to him.

If Mr. Blaine should take it into his head to go away on the sick list, or to resign entirely on the ground of ill health, it would not take long for those now ignorant on that subject to discover who has furnished the brains for this administration.

Mr. Wanamaker is fathering a scheme that for pure unadulterated "gall" surpasses anything in the history of the republican party, and that's saying a good deal. He wants to make ten year contracts with favorite parties for carrying the ocean mails in various directions under the mail subsidy act, of the last Congress. Of course that involves the ultimate expenditure of many millions of dollars, while the appropriation made, which was for only one year, was $2.500.000. Mr. Harrison approves of the scheme, and in order to give it a better aspect the question has been referred to the Attorney General for an opinion as to whether the Postmaster General has a legal right to make contracts to run ten years. Of course he will decide that he has, and then the country will have the pleasure of seeing forty or fifty millions of its money placed where it will help to renominate and re-elect Mr. Benjamin Harrison. What ever other people may think Mr. Harrison doesn't think that he made a mistake in putting John Wanamaker at the head of the Postoffice.

Another little scheme of Mr. Wanamaker's was the establishment of a regular mail service to Alaska and the awarding of the contract for carrying the mails to the North American Commercial company, whose steamers have to go there anyway, and whose business makes probably ninety-nine hundredths of the mail to and from there. This company didn't make any money taking seals last year, and the administration sympathises with it to the extent of an entirely unnecessary mail contract.

A party of prominent democrats were gathered in although the circumstances preclude the use of names, the conversation was too interesting at times to be entirely lost, so I reproduce a portion of it herewith;

"Did you know", asked a Southern Senator, "that the Florence, South Carolina, Times, had run up the name of Wade Hampton for Vice Presidnet?"

"Wish we could get him there", said a Western Representative.

"I join heartily with you" said an Eastern Representative, "and I can tell you how it can be done".

"How?" asked everybody in chorus.

"Well, you see", he replied, "The democratic party has three great prizes to distribute, the Presidency, the Vice Presidency, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives. Now you all know that I am not in favor of sectionalism in any form, and yet I recognize the fact that the country is almost certain to be geographically divided into three parts and that one of these great prizes will go to the South, one to the East, and one to the West, and I don't think any body can say that that isn't an equitable method of distribution. All the South has got to do if it wants a place upon the national ticket is to let the Speakership go to the East or West."

"A bird in the hand", laughed a Southern Representative who is in the line of the Speakership lightning himself.

"But have you got it in the hand?" retorted the Eastern man.

"You just wait and see", said the Southerner.

"How I should like to see Wade preside over the Senate, said a Senator who had been an interested listener, "but it he was nominated wouldn't the Farmers Alliance in ths Southern States defeat the ticket as they did him for the Senate?"

"That's a side of the question that had not occurred to me", said the gentleman who started the conversation; "but I would not fear to wager all I possess that a national ticket with Wade Hampton's name on it could carry South Carolina against anything that could be pitted against it; only nominate him, and my word for it he will be elected."

The Saloon in Politics.

[From The Atlantic Mouthly.]

"What have the 9,000 saloons of New York done for her? They have fastened upon her citizens the most shamefully corrupt government ever endorsed by a community indulging in the illusion that it was free. They have made it almost impossible for an honest, educated man to touch local politics, much less to take office: they have degraded the conduct of public affairs to their own low level: they have brutalized every institution they have had anything to do with: they have prevented and spoiled the democratic system, making a hissing and reproach of American citizenship and the suffrage, establishing political shackles, pandering to the worst views of the worst classes, defiling everything decent and pure with their ribald scoffing and producing at intervals as proof of their quality, tendencies and power, such abominable scandals as that of the Tweed ring, or the more recent sale of votes in the board of aldermen. But evil as are the results of the combination between the saloon and the politicians it is not just to hold the latter responsible for all the mischief they cause.

In truth they are the result of conditions which could not produce anything better, and it is unreasonable to blame the product while refusing to interfere with the generatory agencies.

The saloon is an arrangement for the maintenance of the worst vice with which humanity is afflicted; a vice which destroys every elevating influence, kills shame, manhood, ambition, family affection, honor, all that makes life worth living; a vice which fosters brutality, self indulgence and all the train of ignoble and degrading passion and inclinations.

Now the purpose and intent of the saloon being what it is, the developments noted are simply what ought to have been expected, when so large a share in the government of the county was premitted to be seized by this sinister agency. The American system of government is theoretically sound. The means of education are accessible to all. But when our children have passed through the public schools and entered into active life, if they wish to take part in public affairs they must descend to the saloon for instructions in politics, and in the same institution the foreign immigrants must graduate before they can exercise the right of citizenship.

They are our political schools in fact, and they give tone to our politics, city, state and national.

The candidate for office finds it indispensable to make himself "solid" with the rum power. He must buy the favor of the saloon keepers. He must frequent these places and flatter the vanity of those who gather there. Through them he must obtain the votes of the idle, the vicious and the criminal classes. He must be familiar with our ward "strikers" and loafers. He must be represented at the caucuses which are always held where drink abounds. He must defer to the views of men of the worst intelligence. He must subscribe to platforms drawn up by demagogues and time servers. Is it any wonder that self-respecting men so often shrink from these ordeals and prefer the obscurity of private life to a political career demanding such sacrifice and such abasement?"

In twenty years there has been no counterfeiting of Uncle Sam's postage stamps.

The post office department at Washington is receiving favorable reports from the experimental delivery service established in small towns.

Hiram Maxim, inventor of the Maxim gun, has spent $45,000 in the construction of a flying machine, and claims that he is on the eve of complete success. If it is like other machines of its kind there will be no flies on it.

An exchange says: "The summer girl is here." Of course she is. Life would not be worth living without her. If she were not here the summer resorts would close, grass would grow in the pavements and rust would accumulate on the rails of the great lines soon to be loaded down with two-story dog house trunks.

A young man with a mathematical turn of mind has solved the following: Axtel was sold for $105,000, he weighed 1,050 pounds, the purchaser paying $100 per pound. Pure silver is worth $16 per pound, and if the syndicate had paid in bullion it would have required 6,762½ pounds, or six times the weight of Axtel and 262½ pounds over.

The average construction of railroads in the United States during the last twenty years is said to have been 5,700 miles annually, so that the construction last year of 6,080 miles was slightly above the average, indicating a healthy, not a speculative, growth. This country now has 158,000 miles of railroad, which give employment to 700,000 men.

"Dona Isidora Cousino, in Chili, is supposed to be the richest woman in the world. Her monthly income is $80,000. She is a stately widow of 35 years and a famous horsewoman." The above paragraph has been floating about the press for the past fifteen years. If the lady was 35 when it started, she must be getting along somewhat by this time.

One of the beautiful souvenirs the president and Mrs. Harrison brought home from California was their invitation to the banquet of the Union League club of San Francisco. It is engraved on a gold plate four and three-quarters inches wide, seven and one-quarter long and one-eighth of an inch thick. The plate bears the seal of the state and the American flag treated in colored enamel. The plate is in a handsome case.

The boat that bore the body of John Wilkes Booth away from Washington, down the Potomac, has been sold for $15,000, and will be converted into a Philadelphia coal barge. The boat is the monitor Saugus, and she has lain for seventeen years at the Washington navy yard. She bears several huge dents imprinted in her stalwart sides through the force of cannon balls. Her turret also shows several huge dents, as well as the pilot house.

At least one person in three between the ages of ten and forty years is subject to partial deafness. The great majority of cases of deafness are hereditary and due to the too close consanguinity of the parents. Deafness is more prevalent among men than among women, because the former are more exposed to the vicissitudes of climate. It is thought that telephones tend to bring on deafness when one ear is used to the exclusion of the other.

It is characteristic of the grip that it produces dreadful fits of the blues, in which trivial matters seem to darken the patient's whole outlook. Several suicides have been attributed to this cause. If the sufferer will pause and reflect that his business is not really going to the dogs, that his backache is not kidney disease, or his loss of memory paresis, but that it is all influenza and will pass, he will see that there is no sense in cutting off his head to cure his cold.

The young emperor of Germany now has no less than three thrones. One is the old-fashioned affair of the days of the king of Prussia, another was furnished for the occasion of the Princess Victoria's wedding, and now he has a third to be used only when his majesty appears as supreme head of the United German empire. This last one is erected in the White hall of the German schloss, and its canopy is of yellow silk and gold brocade, into which the imperial eagle is beautifully woven. It is not stated which of the three has the softest seat.

Fatigue should not be treated as a light matter. Women often say: "I am perfectly well, only I get tired easily." Then you are not perfectly well. You need rest, care and possibly medical treatment. Try the rest first and set your mind free from worries and restraints. Do not exact from yourself work which you do not feel equal to; make it a rule to lie down two hours each afternoon, and go to bed early. Keep this treatment up for three months, with all the out-of-door life that you feel equal to, and you will realize what rest can do. The tired feeling means that you need rest.

The disembodied spirit does not always appear in darkness and through a medium. The account comes that in a photograph taken of an old homestead at Webster, Mass., recently appeared something not provided for by the photographer. When the negative was developed there was revealed the face of an aged woman looking out of a window. There was no explanation of this startling appearance, but the face was recognized as that of the mother of the owner of the house, dead for some time. The window from which the face appears looking was one by which the old lady sat a great deal when alive.

A dentist of Moscow is reported to have discovered a method of supplying the human mouth with false teeth which will grow into the gums as firmly as natural ones. Dr. Znamensky has performed several successful operations on dogs as well as human beings. The teeth are made of gutta percha, porcelain or metal. Holes are made at the root of the false tooth and also upward into the jaw. The tooth is then placed into the cavity. In a short time a soft, granulated growth finds its way from the patient's jaw into the holes in the tooth; this growth gradually hardens and holds the tooth in position.

TWO SUDDEN CALLS.

Judge Hauk, the Well-Known Tennessee Congressman, Swallows Arsenic by Mistake and the Error Costs Him His Life—David Butler, Nebraska's First Governor, Drops Dead.

Knoxville, Tenn., May 26.—Congressman Houk died Monday morning at 6 o'clock of heart failure, caused by accidentally swallowing a solution of arsenic. The poison was swallowed Sunday afternoon at the drug store near his residence. He called at the store, bought some cigars and asked for a drink of water, which was given him. He remained about the store for some minutes, going behind the counter where the prescription clerk was busy compounding a prescription and not noticing Judge Houk's movements. Going to the clerk's side and pointing to a covered glass on the counter Judge Houk asked: "What is that stuff in that glass? It don't taste very good. Is it a poison?" "Great heavens!" exclaimed the clerk, "you did not drink from that glass, did you? Why, judge, that glass contains enough arsenic to kill half a dozen men. Houk had swallowed part of the contents, thinking he was drinking a second glass of water. He was stricken with terror and begged the clerk to give him something to save him. The clerk at once prepared a mustard emetic and in a few seconds Houk was vomiting freely. A physician was immediately summoned and other emetics administered. He was then conveyed to his residence and a stomach pump was used until the physicians decided that no more arsenic was in his system. At 10 o'clock he was thought beyond danger and was resting quietly. The physicians called several times during the night, finding him in good condition, and at 6 o'clock a. m. his son Elmer, who had remained awake all night in his father's room, went to breakfast. He left Mr. Houk asleep, breathing naturally. Twenty minutes later a servant was sent to the room and on returning reported the patient looking very strange. Members of the family rushed to his room to find him gasping for breath, and in a few minutes he was dead. Physicians were summoned, who pronounced the cause of his death to be heart failure, brought on by excitement and exhaustion induced by swallowing the poison. The coroner's jury rendered a verdict in accordance with these facts. Judge Houk Sunday night exonerated the prescription clerk from all blame, saying that the swallowing of the poison was accidental and resulted from his own carelessness.

[Mr. Houk was a native of Siever county, Tenn., and had almost completed his 55th year. He attended school but three months during his lifetime, but after the close of his daily labors as a cabinetmaker devoted himself to study until, in 1859, he began the practice of the law, in which he continued until the secession of his state, when he entered the union army as a private August 9, 1861. In April, 1863, after he had become colonel of the Third Tennessee infantry, ill health compelled him to resign. He was engaged in newspaper work for a year following, but in 1866 resumed practice at the bar. Mr. Houk was a member of the Tennessee constitutional convention of 1865; served one term as judge of the Seventeenth circuit court of Tennessee; was for a time a member of the southern claims commission; represented his state in the national republican conventions of 1872, 1880, 1884 and 1888, and was seven times elected to congress. He was on the republican electoral tickets in 1864 and 1876.]

DEATH OF NEBRASKA'S FIRST GOVERNOR.

Omaha, Neb., May 26.—David Butler, the first governor of Nebraska and a prominent politician, dropped dead at his residence in Pawnee City Monday of heart failure.

[Butler has played a prominent part in the political history of Nebraska since his advent in 1858. In many respects his career has been sensational. He was born at Bloomington, Ind., and after losing a fortune in the financial crisis of 1857 he removed to Nebraska. His fortune was immediately rebuilt in the cattle business and he became a prominent figure in the state politics, being an uncompromising republican and free-state advocate and an admirer of Lincoln. In 1861 Butler was a member of the territorial legislature, and during those tumultuous periods was an aggressive figure. In the Kansas and Nebraska bill agitation he led the republicans. When the state was admitted he was elected its first governor by 146 votes majority. During his term many questions of importance incident to a new state were decided. He signed the bill removing the capital from Omaha to Lincoln. Butler was elected three successive times, but during that time made bitter enemies. The personal fight made against him culminated in his impeachment in 1871. The charge was malfeasance in office. The offense consisted in alleged frauds in the disposition of public lands. A hard fight was made by his friends. Secretary of State W. H. James was appointed his successor in June, 1871. He retired to private life for a long time thereafter, but later became an alliance man. It was thought that the deceased would play an important part in the new people's party movement, as he was prominently mentioned for office.]

BAD NEWS FROM BRAZIL.

A Yellow Fever Scourge Claiming Its Victims by the Hundred.

Baltimore, Md., May 26.—The steamship Elvaston, Capt. Steele, of the Maryland line, Baltimore and Brazil, arrived in port Monday morning on her first trip from Santos. The captain and crew report a terrible yellow fever scourge as prevailing in Brazil at the time of their departure from Santos—April 26. Hundreds are reported as dead and dying in and about the port from which the vessel sailed, while statements received from other localities by Capt. Steele would indicate great suffering and loss of life. Soon after leaving Santos the captain and crew of the Elvaston were prostrated by the fever, and the ship was hoved-to ten days until other engineers and help could be secured. Second Officer Howe and Fireman Wardell died of the disease soon after sailing. The remainder of the crew recovered, but they will not return to Brazil.

ROBBED AN EXPRESS OFFICE.

Burglars Bind and Gag the Agent at Carroll, Ia., and Rob the Safe.

Carroll, Ia., May 26.—The office of the American Express Company was broken into Saturday night about midnight. The night agent was bound and gagged, and with a revolver at his head was forced to give up the key to the safe, which was rifled, and about $3,000 in cash and a lot of papers taken. The man can give no description of the burglars. He was released after being bound for nearly two hours. The express office is only about 20 feet from an all-night lunch house.

MURDER AND SUICIDE.

A Horrible Tragedy in Iowa Caused by Insanity.

Harlan, Ia., May 26.—Mrs. Christian Pederson, a Danish woman, and four children, aged from 3 to 10, were found hanging in the cellar of their house 3 miles northwest of this town Sunday. It is thought they have been hanging since Wednesday night, the 20th. The husband was sent to the insane asylum about a week ago, and this series of murders and suicides show that the wife should have accompanied him as she must have been violently insane.

A VALID LAW.

Decision of the Supreme Court in an Original Package Case.

Washington, May 26.—The United States supreme court on Monday decided that the original-package law passed by the last congress was valid and constitutional, and that it went into effect in all states where prohibitory laws prevailed without reenactment by the states of the laws by which they forbade the sale of intoxicating liquors within their boundaries, whether imported from other states or not. Chief Justice Fuller rendered the opinion of the court, and the bench was united in support of the conclusions to which he arrived, though Justice Gray announced that Justices Harlan, Brewer and himself did not concur in all the reasoning of the opinion of the court.

The case upon which the decision was rendered was that of John M. Wilkerson, sheriff of Shawnee county, Kan., appellant, vs. Charles A. Rahrer, brought here on appeal from the decision of the circuit court of the United States for the district of Kansas against the state. Rahrer was the original package agent at Topeka, Kan., of the firm of Maynard, Hopkins & Co., of Kansas City, Mo., and was arrested the day after the original package law went into effect. He claimed that the law was unconstitutional, and also that it could not go into operation until the state had reenacted its prohibitory laws.

Chief Justice Fuller in discussing the case remarked that the state by the adoption of the constitution of the United States surrendered certain features of their rights to regulate commerce in the productions of other tates.

The court held that although the liquor in question arrived in Kansas prior to the passage of the act by congress it was not necessary for the state of Kansas to reenact its prohibitory law after the passage of the congressional act in order to shut out liquors in original packings.

The supreme court reversed the action of the circuit court and remanded the case for further proceedings. The decision is accepted by the prohibitionists as favorable to their cause and a support of the state laws inasmuch as it reverses the action of the lower court which had ordered Rahrer's release.

FORCED TO ASSIGN.

Failure of Potter, White & Bailey, an Extensive Eastern Shoe Firm, with Liabilities of About $1,000,000.

Boston, Mass., May 26.—The failure of Potter, White & Bailey, the big boot and shoe manufacturers, was announced here Monday afternoon. Following so closely upon the suspensions of the Davis Shoe Company here and the Hill Shoe Company at Memphis, Tenn., the announcement caused great excitement in trade and financial circles. George S. Bullent, president of the Revere bank, William Henry Allen, of the firm of Allen, Field & Lawrence, and Edward H. Dunn, of the firm of Dunn, Green & Co., are named as assignees. The liabilities are placed at above $1,000,000, and the assets are not known definitely, but are placed at nearly $1,000,000. The firm has done a business of about $2,000,000 a year and its credit has stood among the highest in Boston. For this reason the suspension came like a thunderbolt to all, and it was all the more a surprise because over their own signature the firm Saturday last in the daily papers denied the report that their liabilities to the Hill Shoe Company of Memphis, Tenn., were $198,000, or that the failure of that company would seriously cripple them. Of the causes that bought about the failure little definitely can be said, for the junior member of the firm, speaking for the others, said that he could make no statement at present. The assignees had little more to say, for the failure was an entire surprise to them as well as to others, and they had not had the firm's standing fully laid before them. The firm has manufactured through W. & J. M. Bent, Cochituate, and A. Nute & Sons, Farmington, N. H., and until within two months through M. N. Arnold, of North Abington.

A large portion of the trade has been south and west with the "Bent" brogan, the finer shoes being from the other factories. It is believed on the street that the falling off in this western and southern trade had much to do with the failure, though the firm was supposed to be doing a good business elsewhere. It is also believed that the Hill and Davis failures had much to do with this failure.

GIVEN TO CHARITY.

Supreme Court Decision in the Mormon Church Case.

Washington, May 26.—The supreme court on Monday entered a final decree in the case of the late church of Jesus Christ of the Latter Day Saints of Utah directing the disposition of the property of the church and the application of the proceeds by the receivers to such charities and purposes of a lawful character as most nearly correspond with the original purposes for which it was set aside. The final action in this matter had been delayed in order to give congress an opportunity to specifically name the method of disposition, should it desire, but in absence of such action by congress the court disposed of the matter as indicated.

STANFORD AT THE HEAD.

Third Party Leaders Claim That He Will Be Their Standard-Bearer.

Washington, May 26.—The leaders of the third party movement here profess to have direct assurances that Senator Stanford, of California, is ready to put himself at the head of their movement with all that is therein implied, and that he will be the standard bearer of the "people's party" in 1892. Some of the alliance leaders claim to be authorized to make public the alleged fact that Senator Stanford considers he holds his great fortune simply as "steward for the people."

Flames in a Prison.

Jefferson City, Mo., May 26.—A fire broke out in the J. S. Sullivan Saddletree Company's shop at the state penitentiary Saturday evening at 6 o'clock, and in an hour the state had lost nearly $100,000, the Saddletree company $60,000, and the Strauss Harness Company about $10,000.

Two Children Poisoned by Insects.

Nicholasville, Ky., May 26.—Two children of Rev. Mr. Johnson (colored), pastor of the M. E. church, died suddenly after eating gooseberries, said to be this year infested by a poisonous insect.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS

Examiners of Law.

The supreme court has appointed the following persons members of the state board of examiners in law, under the act of 1891: E. H. Ozmun, of the Fourth congressional district, and John M. Shaw, of the Fifth congressional district, for the term of three years; A. H. Snow, of the First congressional district and Knute Nelson, of the Seventh congressional district, for the term of two years, and F. J. Knox, of the Second congressional district, and Eli Southworth, of the Third congressional district, and John G. Williams, of the Sixth congressional district.

Sugar Beet Experiments.

D. M. Harper and M. W. Hays relate their experiments with sugar beets in a department of agriculture document. Their report includes a tabulated record of analysis of fifty-five samples of different varieties of sugar beets grown in 1890 at different places in Minnesota, and a compiled account of the methods of cultivation of sugar beets and the processes of the manufacture of beet sugar. In the samples analyzed at the station the per cent. of sugar ranged from 5.24 to 17.92, being over 12 per cent. in forty out of the fifty-five samples examined.

Lost in Gambling.

Judgment was entered by default at Duluth in the case of Nettleton vs. E. C. Howard, the defendant making no defense whatever. The complaint stated sums lost as follows: In Duluth, January 14, 1890, $700; St. Paul, May 25, 1890, $1,830.15; March 12, 1887, $5,000; December 12, 1887, $450.20; September 24, 1887, $1,000, or $8,957.35 in all. To this is added $700 for interest. The money was lost in gambling. Howard's father is one of the richest men in Duluth.

A Free Passage to Europe.

J. M. Church, traveling salesman for the Pruce-Tatsch Co. at Winona, has been awarded the prize of a six weeks' trip to Europe by the James G. Butler Tobacco Company for selling the largest amount of their tobacco in Minnesota or the Dakotas, from October 1 to May 1. Some twenty salesmen from all over the United States will take the trip, sailing from New York on June 10, and in return leaving Antwerp on July 11.

Dragged to Death.

Barney Falkaner, a young man who had been engaged at Merriam park, near St. Paul, in herding cows, was killed by being run away with by the pony which he rode. He was thrown from the animal's back, and being unable to loosen his foot from the stirrup was dragged nearly a mile and was horribly mangled and crushed when picked up.

They Pleaded Guilty.

The grand jury in the United States district court at Duluth has been discharged after having brought in six indictments, one for murder and five for selling whisky to the Indians. All but one of the alleged whisky sellers pleaded guilty and were sentenced to four months' imprisonment and to pay a fine of $10 each.

Raised a Bonus.

By subscription about fifty citizens of Winona have raised a $10,000 bonus for Schroth & Ahrens, whose planing mill, sash, door and blind factory and lumber yards were destroyed by fire. The bonus is on condition that the firm rebuild in Winona, and it is most probable that they will.

When the Schools Will Close.

The closing of the schools at Faribault will take place as follows: Deaf and dumb, Tuesday, June 2; blind, Tuesday, June 9; Shattuck, Thursday, June 18; St. Mary's hall, Tuesday, June 16; public schools on Friday, May 29, and Bethlehem Academy the last week in June.

Took His Own Life.

Charles H. Champlain, superintendent of the North Star woolen mills at Minneapolis, shot himself through the head the other morning. Champlain had been confined in bed for two weeks with rheumatism, and it was thought his distress overbalanced his mind.

At the session of the convention of the grand lodge of the Order of the Eastern Star at Duluth, Mrs. George G. Jacoby, of Minneapolis, was re-elected grand matron.

A FATAL ERROR.

Two Parties of Nebraska Vigilantes Mistake Each Other for Cattle Thieves and Engage in a Shooting Match—Judge Aikens, Treasurer of Blaine County, Killed—The Real Criminal Is Also Shot Dead.

Dunning, Neb., May 25.—Friday morning a questionable character by the name of McAlvey stole a couple of steers from a man named Craig, living in the southeast part of Blaine county. He drove them within 2 miles of Brewster to Dr. Palmer's place, which is vacant, and put them up in the stable. Craig followed him and a couple of his neighbors fell in, and they tracked the steers to where they were corralled. Craig wished to turn the steers out and take them home, but the neighbors decided that they had better watch and catch the thief. Meantime quite a crowd of people, among them Judge C. W. Aikens, treasurer of Blaine county, had assembled to assist in the watch. About 11 o'clock Friday night McAlvey came to get the stolen steers. The crowd collared him and made him acknowledge that he stole the cattle and also that a negro by the name of Eli Creighton assisted him. The watchers had separated without any sign or password whereby they could recognize each other. It was then decided to send McAlvey to Brewster in charge of Judge Aikens, and the rest of the regulars scattered in the hope of catching Creighton. McAlvey was accordingly strapped to a horse which was tied to Judge Aiken's animal.

The two men had gone about a mile toward Brewster when three men were heard riding toward them. The night was very dark and it was impossible to distinguish a person across the road. Judge Aikens took the riders to be the negro Creighton and some of his gang, and though the chances against him were desperate, he bravely commanded the three men to halt. Instead of halting, however, they opened fire at short range. The judge also pulled his revolver and returned the fire, but before he could fire a second time he was shot through the body and fell from his horse, dying instantly. Almost at the same instant McAlvey, the thief bound to the horse, was pierced through the heart by a bullet. The three men who had done the killing, after assuring themselves that both the judge and McAlvey were dead, rode hurriedly to Palmer's ranch and informed the vigilants on guard there that they had killed two of the thieves. The whole party at once returned to the scene of the tragedy, and it was not until then that the terrible mistake was discovered. A young man named Rittenhouse and two friends were the ones who did the deadly work under the impression that Judge Aikens and his prisoner were cattle thieves coming to McAlvey's assistance. They are nearly crazed at the terrible result of their mistake. The whole trouble was caused by failure to comply with the rules of the anti-Stock Thief association, which provide that in an emergency of this kind a signal and password shall be agreed upon by those participating. No arrests have been made. The unfortunate affair has exasperated everybody to a high degree against the stock thieves, and active search is being made in all directions for Eli Creighton, the negro implicated by the confession of McAlvey, and, if captured, it is certain that he will be hanged or shot on short notice.

The whole country is in mourning over Judge Aikens' untimely death as he was a man universally liked and respected. He was a prominent democrat, a delegate to the last national convention and a candidate for the supreme bench at the coming election.

BOTH WERE KILLED.

Two Indians Men Fight a Solitary Combat to the Death.

Petersburgh, Ind., May 25.—Saturday evening about 9 o'clock a horse and buggy were found by Joseph Dean in front of his house, about 2 miles south of town. The buggy contained the body of William Johnson with a bullet through his heart. In the buggy were two pistols with several chambers of each empty. As it was known that Johnson and Lafe Sprinkle had been together in the buggy search was made for the missing man, who was found about a quarter of a mile nearer town lying by the side of the road with a bullet through each of his lungs. Sprinkle, still alive, was taken to his home, where he died about midnight. It is not known how the shooting originated, as there was no witness of the affair, but it is known that both men nursed an old grudge, left town together in Sprinkle's buggy, and they probably fought it out with the above result.

CARRIED OVER THE FALLS.

Five Men Drowned While Crossing the Kettle River Near Sandstone, Minn.

St. Paul, Minn., May 25.—A terrible accident occurred in the Kettle river near Sandstone, Minn., Saturday evening. A boatload of men were crossing the river at dark and ventured too near Kettle falls. The boat was caught in the rapids and whirled over the falls. Thomas Barney, of Chippewa Falls, and Charles A. McGraw, of Augusta, Me., both prominent lumbermen, and Swan Peterson were drowned. A boy named Whitesides and a man whose name could not be learned are missing and are probably drowned.

DESTROYED BY FIRE.

Narrow Escape of a Large Number of Sunday School Children.

Chicago, May 25.—Immanuel Baptist church, Michigan avenue and Twenty-third street, was damaged by fire at 9:30 Sunday morning to the extent of $45,000. One hundred children who had assembled in the Sunday-school room on the second floor in the rear of the church escaped without injury, but a panic was only averted by the skill and good management of the teachers. The fire is supposed to have been caused by a defective flue in the basement.

Burned to Death.

Minneapolis, Minn., May 25.—Two children of Felix Lawler, a railroad man, were burned to death in a fire which broke out at his house. The children were alone in the kitchen, when a hot fire in the stove ignited some clothes hanging over it. They were dead before they could be rescued. The mother was badly burned in trying to reach them. The other children were saved.

Twenty-Two Lives Lost.

Berlin, May 25.—A vessel with a large cargo was capsized on the Havel Saturday and twenty-two of its crew were drowned.

THE IRREPRESSIBLE BOY.

He worried the cat,
He played rat-tat-tat
On the window panes, fully an hour by the clock;
He tried roller skates
Where dishes and plates
In jeopardy lay, till some fell, with a shock.

With an Indian yell
On a doll's house he fell,
And added that poor dolly's scalp to his belt;
Then knocked off its toes,
And its fair Grecian nose,
Which same was of wax—he proceeded to melt.

Two tubs he upset
Without one regret;
He stood on his head till his face turned sky blue;
A curtain he tore,
And then sighed for more
Inventively mischievous things he might do.

He hid granny's "specs"—
But that didn't vex;
Her face brightened up with his fun and his noise.
"One sweet kiss repaid
For all!" so she said,
Resigningly adding that "boys will be boys!"

But strangest of all,
At night's quiet fall,
How meekly, how placidly this rogue would say:
"Good night, mamma, dear!
Good night, papa, dear!
I've tried hard to be such a good boy to day!"

ANASTASIA.

A Little Love Episode of the Black Mountains.

WHEN pale Irene Muncy was told by her doctor that she must go "south or die," she began looking for a spot of southern soil where the air was balmy, resinous with pines, golden with sunlight, and, above all, not monotonous. A paradise in the mountains, somewhere in that vast territory known vaguely as "the south."

"You need change," the doctor said to her when he found that his medicine did her no good; "change is good for everyone, if it is only a change from hot food to cold. Go and get relaxation and amusement."

"But where shall I go, doctor? I am alone in the world now, as you know, so far as relatives are concerned. I do not take kindly to strangers. Where shall I go?"

"Go where glory waits thee," chanted the doctor, melo-dramatically. "I have it. Go to the Black mountains."

"Oh! It is a case of Mahomet going to the mountain, since the mountain will not come to Mahomet. Dr. Gregory, if you will map out the route, I will consult my bank book, and if it is possible I will go to your Black mountain."

This is how the pale Yankee schoolmistress happened to be located at the Brook Trout hotel, a two-story wooden building with long verandas, where judges, colonels, mountain moonshiners, crackers and other picturesque characters sat around all day wearing flapping hats and free and easy fatigue dress, flannel shirts and butternut trousers ornamented with one suspender, which, doing duty for both, hitched the aforesaid garment up to the shoulder blades of the wearers. And it was there she met Anastasia, and through her sundry other appointments in life.

There was nothing the matter with Irene Muncy except the slow fever of a loveless life. People say of some man or woman breadwinner that he or she ought to succeed, with only one person to work for and worry about. And that is just the secret of their non-success. There is no incentive, nobody to worry about as a dear, blessed incumbrance, watching our efforts with lovelit eyes. It is but a tread mill existence, without one precious obstacle to break the monotony.

With the Black mountains for a background and the Tennessee valleys at her feet, Irene made a silhouette worth looking at. From being described as "that peaked little gal," she became a "ra'al lik'ly un," then "peart an' chipper and kerflummexed good lookin'." That was the ne plus ultra of complimentary expression. The force of description could no further go.

"EVENIN', MISSY, I'SE DE LADY KIM FOH YURE WASHIN.'"

The landlady of the Brook Trout house told Irene about Anastasia. Only she called her by the two first letters of her remarkable name.

"There's a hull family livin' up on th' mounting in a cabin, an' they take in washin' n' scrubbin'," she told Irene.

One evening when Irene was sitting in her room writing to the doctor, somebody walked in and stood beside her. The apparition was black and good looking.

"Evenin', missy. I'se the lady kim hyah foh yure washin'."

The voice was soft and musical as the night's lullaby among the pines. Irene laid aside her writing and studied this new poem of nature. When she heard that many-syllabled name she nearly fainted, accustomed, as she was to the short, simple appellations of the north.

"My maw do th' washin'; I jes' tote de clus," she explained, in a lofty way.

Irene counted out the pieces. The washlady took no responsibility in this matter.

"Here are thirteen handkerchiefs," said Irene, adding them to the wash. But Anastasia started back.

"I ain't goin' tew tech 'em," she said, stiffly.

"Why not?" asked Irene, in surprise.

"Dem's hoodoo numb. Jes' make 'em one mo', missy, or yoh keep 'em outen dis yeah washin'. It am dreffu onlucky, it am, an' I'se a luck-chile, I is."

"What do you mean by that?"

"I'se de libin' picter ob me fader. When a gal in dis yeah parts dessembles de fader den she luck-chile."

"Oh," said Irene, much amused. "Well, now, here are fourteen handkerchiefs, all I have, and I hope you will do them up nicely."

She handed the clothes to a girl, who tied them up in a bandanna of her own, making a compact bundle with which she crowned herself.

"Thar," she said, "I specs I kin tote them easy, sure nuff," and she balanced them on her head, and walked off with the grace of an African princess. Irene watched her, delighted with the novelty of the whole proceeding.

The next night at sundown Anastasia appeared at the Brook Trout hotel, crying as if her heart would break.

"Lawd," she sobbed, "nobody know de trouble I'se got; Oh, missy, I specs it gwine done kill me!"

"Poor child," said Irene, consolingly, "don't cry so; is—is—your mother dead?"

"No, missy; wuss'n thet, wuss'n thet."

"Your father—"

"Wuss, an orful sight wuss, missy! Them ain't no account 'casions sides this."

Finally she dried her eyes, sat up very straight, and said:

"Missy, I done los' yoh washin' and dat ob anoder rich woman what gub me hers."

Irene was provoked. "I hope the other rich woman can stand the loss better than I," she said; "it is too bad to be so careless. How could you lose them when you carried them on your head?"

Anastasia was a creature of light and shade. She stopped crying dry tears and brightened up.

"I'se thinkin' powerful deep, an' I 'spees I gib my hed a toss an' them clus done fly off 'thout my never knowin' it. Yoh'll get 'em agin, missy; yoh's boun' ter 'cause I's de picter ob me fader."

Irene dismissed the "picter" rather crossly, her northern soul rebelling against such shiftlessness. A day later a card was sent up to her room with the name of a stranger written upon it in pencil. She went down and met in the hotel parlor a tall young man who wore the United States blue. He held in his hands a funny bundle that was tied up with a number of aggressive looking knots that stuck out like mule's ears.

"MY WASHING!" CRIED IRENE.

"My washing," cried Irene, by way of introduction; she recognized the bandanna.

"I found it far up on the mountain," said the stranger; "it had your name and address pinned on it and looked like a big pudding ready to be boiled."

They both laughed, and he told her he was there surveying a new road for the government. His name was Saunders and he was from Philadelphia. He offered to take Irene on a buckboard to the cabin on the mountain, and they had a famous ride, and saw Anastasia in all her glory among her own kith and kin.

"I'se done tell yoh I'se lucky, missy, kase I'se de borned picter ob me fader. I reckon yoh cocht a beau, too, missy."

This was very embarrassing and highly improper, but there was nothing to do but laugh it off, which the two young people did.

But prophetic Anastasia! This summer Irene is no longer alone or loveless, and on her wedding trip she will take in the Brook Trout house, the Black mountains and Anastasia.—Mrs. M. L. Rayne, in Detroit Free Press.

ANTS AS BIG AS FOXES.

Some Statements About Celebrated Insects Disputed.

Herodotus, the father of history, writing in the fifth century before Christ, tells a very remarkable yarn about certain ants in the country of Pacpycia which were bigger than foxes, though somewhat less in size than wolves.

These extraordinary insects lived under ground, heaping up the sand into hills. In this sand gold was mingled, being brought up from the depths, and the natives were accustomed to go with sacks to collect it, choosing for the work the hottest part of the day, because then the ants, which were frightfully fierce, were hidden in the holes.

Upon arriving at the place where the plunder was to be obtained, the men were wont to fill their sacks as quickly as possible and get away with the utmost expedition, for the ants, upon finding out that their dwellings had been disturbed, would pursue them, and, inasmuch as they were unequaled in swiftness by any other animal, not one of the robbers could have escaped being torn to pieces had they not had a long start.

A number of other chroniclers of the same period make similar statements regarding these insects, among them Nearchus, who speaks of having seen several of their skins, which were as large as those of leopards.

It has been surmised that the ants in question were in reality the small foxes of India, which may have been represented by travelers as ants, because they lived in holes in the ground.—Washington Star.

THE WHEELBARROW TEST.

A Woman Who Knew How to Try a Soldier's Bravery.

Three or four of us on the car were talking about Gen. Sherman's death, and, as might have been expected, one of the group modestly admitted that he was with the lamented general on his famous march to the sea. There was a woman in the seat ahead, surrounded by bundles and baskets, and evidently going somewhere on a visit. The war talk soon stirred her up, and she turned to the veteran and queried:

"Were you right in a battle?"

"Yes'm."

"Dead men all around?"

"Yes'm."

"Wounded crying for water?"

"Yes'm."

"Bombshells and cannon balls falling around you like hail?"

"Yes'm."

"And you didn't run?"

"No'm, I should hope not," he modestly replied.

"Stood right there and never got scart, eh?"

"Yes'm."

"Well, now, I don't believe it!" she bluntly exclaimed. "It ain't human natur'. It ain't accordin' to things."

"I hope you do not doubt my word, madam."

"Yes, I do," she sharply replied. "I don't believe you have got any more nerve than my Sam has, and Sam can't stand the test."

"Then you have a test?"

"Yes, I have. You jest get off at Scottdale, where I am going to stop. There'll be a wheelbarrow somewhere around there, and you just stand off about thirty feet and let me bear down on you with it. If you don't jump or dodge or climb a telegraph pole, I'll give in that you are the bravest man I ever saw!"

"I—I'm afraid I haven't time to stop off," he stammered.

"I knew you wouldn't have," she dryly remarked. "They never do. They talk about bombshells and dead men and slaughter pens, and they make out that they charged up to the roaring cannon; but the minute I talk wheelbarrow they knuckle. You needn't say no more. You've wilted."

And he hadn't another word to utter. —N. Y. Sun.

Fractional Loss in Handling Coin.

In calculations relating to machinery, the loss of power due to friction is always an important factor. That the loss incurred in a few seconds by the friction of a mass of coins, one upon the other, should rise to an appreciable amount, strikes the average mind as highly improbable. But there need only be enough of the coins—not more than are often required for a single shipment—to cause a waste which would make trouble for somebody if it were not accounted for. The Iron Industry Gazette states that careful experiments made at the United States mint shows that five dollars is lost by abrasion every time one million dollars in gold coin is handled. The experiments were conducted with bags containing five thousand dollars each, and it was found that the mere lifting to a truck of the two hundred bags making up the total sum resulted in the loss stated; and as the unloading caused a similar waste, there was a loss of ten dollars, or one-thousandth of one per cent., in the transfer of the million from one vault to another.—Mechanical News.

DOMESTIC CONCERNS.

—A melon mold is preferable to a brown-bread tin for all steamed puddings. Charlotte russe molds are plain in shape, and hold from one gill to several quarts. A pint and a two-quart mold are recommended for ordinary use.

—For jumbles take three cupfuls of sugar, two of butter, five of flour, one egg, half a teaspoonful of soda, and flavoring to taste. Roll thin, sprinkle with sugar, cut in round cakes and cut a small piece from the center of each. Bake in a quick oven.—N. Y. World.

—Cold Plum Pudding: Eight rolled crackers, one quart of milk (cold), one cupful of sugar (brown or white), three eggs, three-fourths of a cupful of butter, one pound of chopped rasins (less will do), spice. Bake four hours, stirring frequently till the last half hour.

—It will take six oranges of average size and juiciness to make one cup of orange juice. The flavor of five oranges and one lemon is often preferred to clear orange juice. In pressing the juice from the orange do not crush the peel, as the strong oil of the yellow part will injure the flavor.

—Jumbles: One cupful of butter, three cupfuls of sugar, four eggs, one teaspoonful of baking powder, mix with milk and roll out very thin, cut into small cakes just before removing them from the oven, shake over each cake coarse sugar, watch them carefully and remove them from the oven when delicately browned.—Boston Herald.

—A worn stair carpet can be made to do a little further duty if it is covered with crash for a season. Sometimes a stair carpet can be taken up and turned in such a manner that the edges which are apt to be worn first are on the flat stair. If a bit of old quilt or a piece of strong brown paper is tacked over each edge, it saves the wear of the carpet somewhat.

—Fricassee of Oysters: Drain a quart of oysters and put the liquor on to boil. Rub together a tablespoonful of butter and one of flour; add to the boiling liquor and stir it until it thickens. Season with salt, a very little cayenne and a blade of mace. Remove it from the fire, and add the beaten yolks of two eggs; mix thoroughly and return to the fire, stirring for a minute or two. Put in the oysters and boil up again. Pour over slices of buttered toast and serve. —Ladies' Home Journal.

—Premium Doughnuts: One cup sour cream, one cup buttermilk, one cup light brown sugar (no more), two eggs, one small teaspoonful soda, pinch of salt, flavor with cloves. Add enough flour to the above ingredients to mix soft. Fry in hot lard, then roll in white sugar. I beat the eggs and sugar thoroughly together. Then add the cream and the buttermilk, putting in the salt and cloves through the seive with about one quart of flour, mixing it with the other ingredients.—Detroit Free Press.

FOR WARM WEATHER.

Light Materials and Tender Shades for Dress Toilets.

Summer fashions promise to be decidedly summerlike in brilliancy of hue and daintiness of material. Light and tender shades of color abound, not only for dressy toilets, but also for those of plainer fashions. Indeed, it is difficult to find in summer wool material anything besides pale grays and tans, soft greens and dull blues. Materials have never been more beautifully soft, thin and ephemeral than are this year's chiffons, crepe lisses and gauze grenadines, powdered with summer blossoms tied with empire bows and true lovers' knots. The floral motif prevails in the decoration of every fabric, from broche wools up through challies and China silks to the sumptuous brocade, whose embroidered richness of roses and lilies will actually stand alone as in the old days of stately court pomp and splendor.

The revival of lace, and its most elaborate use on all manner of gowns, lends a very dainty and light effect to them, as does the fluffy crepe lisse and chiffon which sometimes take its place. All kinds of laces are employed, Mechlin, Spanish, empire, point d'esprit and other French varieties, and it is adapted to most unexpected and varied kinds of decoration, from the jabot and waist frills, which are the indispensable feature of a Louis XV. coat, to the panniers, basques and flounces of the gown. A last season's silk waist is transformed to the height of the mode, with lace epaulets, bretelles and a flounce of lace set just beneath the edge of the bodice to form a basque. Flounces are used from the narrowest little frills, set one above the other, to the number of five, or single deep ruffles extending nearly to the waist festooned with bows of ribbon. On China silks or the embroidered lisses these flounces are set on with a braiding run through with a ribbon the color of the flowers in the material.

This is a season of revival of old-time modes rather than of original invention, old-fashioned brocades and delaines panniers and puffed sleeves, high collars and slashed doublets. And among them, daintiest and sweetest of all, are the soft, old-fashioned muslins, organdies, and dimities. The beauty of these dresses live ever in their freshness, consequently they are simply made in order to laundery easily. They have found belted bodices, unlined and shirred at the neck and waist, with pretty curved yokes of open embroidery and bias mutton-legged sleeves, with flaring, turned-back cuffs of the embroidery. The skirts are made in the conventional fashion, with petticoat and drapery plain in front and fulled very much at the back, and have rows of open-work insertion set in between tucks, or deep Spanish ruffles made of the tucks and insertion. The sheer muslins, with their gay flowers, are trimmed with frills of lace, ever remembering that the most important one is that which falls from the belt to form the simulated basque. Lace ruffles are very much used in the waists, falling over the hand, to the great delight of ladies with fair hands, and with those that offend with ugliness as well.

Cheviot, wash silk waists are very prettily made with lengthwise tucks extending from the bust to the belt all the way around like a corselet, or made in spencer waists with double frills of silk down the front or scarfs of the same, with pointed ends to tie at the collar. Ginghams and batistes are made with waists carefully boned and fitted, and with linings of surah or taffeta silk. Their trimmings should be open-worked embroideries like Irish point and light Mechlin laces. The trimmings form jacket fronts and deep basques, and are used for entire sleeves or sleeves with a puff only of the material falling over them from the shoulder. Bretelles of lace and embroidery are used, and pointed belts or Swiss girdles also are employed as a finish.—N. Y. Sun.

A METHODICAL THIEF.

She Made a List of the Things She Wanted to Steal.

An apparently respectable woman was brought recently before a police magistrate, at Paris, on a charge of stealing about 2,000 articles from that great drapery emporium on the left bank of the Seine called the Bon Marche. Such acts of larceny are common enough in Paris, but in the particular case of this delinquent there were some details which were not altogether devoid of novelty. Thus, before proceeding on a pilfering expedition through the well-stocked departments of the big bazaar, the woman used to note carefully down in her memorandum book the objects on which she had cast her eyes and which she intended to annex.

On the day of her arrest the detectives discovered her notebook and found marked in it such items as the following: One pair of stays for self, twelve francs, size sixty centimeters; two pairs of the best braces for my old man, six pairs of the warmest socks for Louis, several yards of wool for Lucy's skirt, and so on. Each and every one of the objects thus jotted down, together with numerous others, were extracted from the leathern bag which she carried.

Her rooms were next searched, and another notebook was found, and on the leaves of which were inscribed: A pretty paper-weight for my son's English teacher, a dozen pocket-handkerchiefs for father's servant girl and a holy water fount for Sister Saint Vincent of the Gray Nuns. The memoranda, in short, showed that the dame was a most exemplary wife and mother, and generous toward those whom she came in contact. She was dealt with, however, by the bench in a most lenient manner, and has to undergo but a fortnight's imprisonment for her carefully-entered larcenies.—N. Y. Journal.

Good Bye!

This is a sad word when taking leave of the beloved, but when Hostetter's Stomach Bitters enables us to say it to an attack of liver complaint, it is by no means sad, but decidedly jolly. Similarly, if the great tonic alterative relieves from dyspepsia or kidney trouble we experience joy. Malaria, rheumatism and neuralgia are also tenants which this remedy dispossesses.

"August Flower"

Perhaps you do not believe these statements concerning Green's August Flower. Well, we can't make you. We can't force conviction into your head or medicine into your throat. We don't want to. The money is yours, and the misery is yours; and until you are willing to believe, and spend the one for the relief of the other, they will stay so. John H. Foster, 1122 Brown Street, Philadelphia, says: "My wife is a little Scotch woman, thirty years of age and of a naturally delicate disposition. For five or six years past she has been suffering from Dyspepsia. She became so bad at last that she could not sit down to a meal but she had to vomit it as soon as she had eaten it. Two bottles of your August Flower have cured her, after many doctors failed. She can now eat anything, and enjoy it; and as for Dyspepsia, she does not know that she ever had it." 59

DELANO DIARY.

—Swedeback & Erickson have about finished up the residence of William Weldelee. It is a nice one.

—A. F. Cory has returned home from his school, near Cokato. He expects to run his sorghum mill again this fall, at this place.

—Watertown teams put in a part of the week in hauling lumber from Delano, for the new city hall at that place.

—Notwithstanding the long dry spell small grain in this vicinity is holding its own quite well. Especially the early sown wheat.

—Mrs. Mary E. Lee, of Brooklyn, Iowa, is visiting, in Delano, with her brother, O. L. Billings, who met her in Minneapolis, last Monday, the Squire had not seen his sister for eighteen years.

—The suit of Chas. Wandersee vs. Henry Liederbauch held before Justice Grafft, last week, was decided in favor of Plantiff. O. L. Billings appeared for Plantiff and M. A. O'Hair for the Defendant.

—The five cent tariff or something else, seems to have acted as a stimulus to some of our enterprising villagers who now raise their own chickens and supply the home demand, regardless of the farmer hen.

—Mrs. Charles Eppel, is keeping up with the balance of the farmers' wives in the poultry business. She has about a hundred young chickens, twenty-five turkeys, and one wild goose a setting. Pretty good for the first year.

—We have seen one caterpillar so far, he was purched on the shoulder of one of our visitors from the rural districts of west Hennepin County, where they are said to abound in large numbers, devouring basswood leaves and other tender foliage.

—A wire trap containing ten young rats attracted considerable attention on Wednesday morning on corner of R. R. Ave. and River Street. A pretty good catch for one night. Three or four old ones were caught the night before. Len's trap beats the terrier all out.

—Peter Campbell's big gray team got tired of waiting at Coolen's lumber yard, on Saturday and struck out alone down Railroad Avenue and River Street their speed was so great they did not turn across the bridge but kept on to the mill where they were captured.

—One by one the old land marks go, Jos. Van Eman has this week torn down the old Mulford barn, on Second Street, leaving a long stretch without buildings on that Street. A fine place for some business blocks would be from the city hall to R. R. Ave on Second.

—The town board, of Franklin, are resting on their oars, waiting for some one to present them with a petition of a dozen freeholders, asking that they call a special meeting to vote on appropriating money to aid in building the iron bridge across Crow River at Ruckoldt's.

—The Memorial meeting held at the Post office in the absence of President Schaffer elected Dr. Catlin, chairman for the evening. Messrs. Schaffer, O'Hair and Conzet were chosen a committee to make a programme and appoint sub-committees to take part in decoration exercises.

—On Tuesday evening ice formed on water that stood in the open air over night. Yet the plums, gooseberries, currants and such seem to be all right, the bushes and trees hanging uncommonly full. A few early potatoes and other tender vegetation succumbed to the bites of old Jack Frost, however.

—A Gentleman from Greenwood, allowed us to look at four statements of taxation in his town, of lands adjoining each other: three 80 acre pieces and one 160 acre piece; those in school district no 102 were valued at, 160 acres $2280. special school tax was $6.16: 80 acres, valued at $1768. special school tax $4.77; 80 acres improved land valued at $1531, special school tax $4.13. An adjoining 80 unimproved land, valued at $1078. in school district No. 112 has special school tax of $9.70. By this it would seem that the Franklin taxpayers are not alone in having unequal taxes.

—In another column will be found a programme for Memorial Day, in Delano. It will be noticed that the procession is to form at an early hour, 8:30 a. m. and march to the cemetery south of town thence return and go to the Catholic Cemetery. It is expected to do all the marching before noon, in the cool of the day, then, if there is time, to have the address in the hall, at once. If it is noon when the pcocession returns to town it is proposed to adjourn till one or half past before the Ceremonies in the hall are held. Each year the old soldiers ranks grow thinner and fewer are the gray headed veterans who meet to shake hands over the increasing numbers of the little mounds in the grave yards, that marks the last camping place of those who stood shoulder to shoulder with them on the line of march; who were their comrades in arms when their country needed their services. Let all turn out and follow them to the graves to aid in strewing flowers to the memory of those who are but gone as an advance line where the rear guard will soon form in force.

—Fair Day, Saturday June 6.

—The scissors grinder was in town yesterday.

—Maxfield is turning out a lot of fine beehives.

—Quite a number of Delanoites went to Hanover to a dance on Saturday evening last.

—Village marshal Martin Nelson has a new horse, that don't eat oats, he keeps him on castor oil. He is of the bicycle breed.

—Assistant Bishop Gilbert and Rev. Purdy of the Episcapal church held services at the Presbyterian church on Tuesday evening.

—A couple of itinerant musicians amused the small boy and others yesterday afternoon with a bagpipe and flagolet. The music sounded some like a swarm of bees. A hand-organ and monkey visited town the same day.

—Miss Clarrie Sturman is teaching the summer term of School in the Welker school district.

—Charley Hitz has been trading horses and says people are not going to throw dirt in his eyes now.

—M. A. O'Hair now turns out with a fine two horse rig. He was heard challinging some of our horse owners the other day for a race.

—The examining board Messrs. Gutzwiller, Lindsley and Catlin have been putting in part of their time this week examining the teachers of the Delano School for Certificates.

—Editor Eaton, of the Journal, made us a call on Tuesday on his way home from Cokato where he had been attending some law business. He claimed that us Alliance men scared the Railroad companies into delivering their express packages.

—Mrs. William Mowatt, visited Twincite last week and purchased a couple of Light Brahma pullets and expects in the near future to add to the fleck, when she will doubtless be a strong competitor for first premiun at the County fair.

—The Young ladies of Delano are getting up a dance for the purpose of buying lamps for the band stand, so that the band boys can the better see the notes when they play evenings, or so the young ladies can the better see the band boys, or both. See their add in another column.

—Frank Cramer met with an accident on Friday evening while driving near Joseph Van Eman's pasture, his horse shied at a cow in the road and ran into the wire fence leaving Frank on the ground. The horse cut his breast requiring several stitches. Wire fences along public roads are a bad thing and if they must exist should have a board or pole along the top so they can be seen.

EDITED BY MRS. E. A. STACY.

THE INEVITABLE THING TO DO ABOUT THE SALOON.

BY REV. H. A. DELANO.

How true it is that we have exhausted all the force of the old methods in dealing with the rum traffic.

Prohibition is the climax of more than a half century's effort to dethrone the crime.

Philanthropies nameless have multiplied, and love, argus-eyed and hundred-handed, has sought how it might save the victim. But to-day, our Hospitals are more crowded, jails fuller of inmates, mad-houses more common than ever.

The bulwark of restrictions has lessened the rills but augmented the flood of fire-water, deluging the land. The breakwater of taxation is porous and thin, and has so fully demonstrated its inevitable "thinness" as to make brewers and distillers rejoice in its presence. It serves to attract the attention of people who are dazzled and dazed by the kaleidoscopic performances of "HIGH—license."

In the presence of teares which ceaselessly poured over the holocaust and sacrifice perpetual, deaf to prayers, indifferent to blood, and insolently laughing at the groans and travail cries of a sorrow-stricken nation, the rum power has grown.

It has grown vast in aggregations of power, grown adroit in evasion and political cunning; grown in its wealth of blocks, buildings, real estate; grown in its state craft and hold upon the functional elements of government, and now, does not lack for apologists in the pulpit, in party, press, or in many of the homes of this land.

Some things are proven beyond a question. One is this: THE SALOON CANNOT BE GOVERNED. It creates an atmosphere utterly reckless, antagonistic, diabolic every way, so far as good government is concerned. Indeed, the saloon cannot exist in a good government. A well ordered, peaceful, virtuous community, one thoroughly so, would starve a saloon to death in six months.

But alas, the saloon once planted, begins at once to create atmosphere, to make a place for itself, and will, from the first day of its arrival in town, open a political school, start a political caucus, and have the spring "slate" made up in less than a week. Hence, when good people talk about governing it, they find that it is governing itself, and the whole town beside.

AGAIN, THE SALOON CANNOT BE REFORMED. "Keeps a respectable place," is often said of some man who runs a saloon. Nobody ever saw it. There is no circle of society so low, no community so degraded, no man so fallen and depraved, as to seriously admit—in the light of virtue, purity, and morality—that a saloon is—can be—respectable. It is inevitably immoral. The day it reforms is the day it dies.

In order to exist, either by high license, low license, or no license, it must be immoral. Its pictures, its papers, its society, supporters, all there is immediately about it, must be low, degrading, depraved,

There is not a man in any Christian church, in any land, so pure, so good, so holy that by consent of universal Christian conscience in America, he could be allowed to keep a saloon.

No decent Christian church would license one of its members to keep the saloon which it might license by its suffrage, political. To reform it is to kill it, and nothing short.

There is not one sacred thing about it. This traffic, hoary now with age, a perpetual system of robbery, murder, sensuousness and crime of every hue, driving its tens of thousands annually to the grave, trembling, hopeless, specter-ridden, doomed and damned, must be strangled utterly, or, it will work the ravage and ruin of the Republic.

A million of Christian men in this country believe this. A million men, at least, believe in PROHIBITION.

If the saloon is ever done away, it will not be by reformation, governing, or "moral effort"; it will be by ANNIHILATION out and out.

When? Just as soon as the million come together, stand together, and work together. Then, they would soon have reinforcements, and would dictate ABSOLUTE SURRENDER. Why not combine at once?

We know the inevitable. Why not act upon it to-day? "How long, O Lord, how long?"

IT violates the Alliance doctrines of equal rights to all and special privileges to none. I do not believe that two wrongs can make a right, and because farmers have been systematically and outrageously imposed on in the past is no reason why they should demand class legislation for their benefit now. And then it is to be remembered that class legislation is unconstitutional and undemocratic and therefore wrong.—GOVERNOR TILLMAN OF SOUTH CAROLINA.—Saturday Globe.

HOWEVER strongly the platform adopted at Cincinnati may be objected to, it remains a solid fact that there is behind it a sentiment which is entitled to respectful attention already and which is growing in strength. It is the popular protest against the monopolistic tendencies of the times. While it is evident that this protest does not find sympathetic voicing through Cipher Donnelly's platform, it is true that that platform and the Convention which adopted it serve to accentuate its existence and ought to suggest to practical men that parties hoping to win popular support must plant themselves upon a platform that shall make distinct declarations against legalized robbery of the masses for the enriching of the classes.—PROVIDENCE TELEGRAM.—In the Saturday Globe.

The Queens Bad Boy.

The Prince of Wales seems, like dog Tray, though, perhaps, not so innocent as he, to have fallen in with bad company, and as a consequence is an important witness against the defendants in a law court over a game of bacarrat, while his poor mother, the queen of England, like any mother weeps, sorrowfully, for his lot. He should reform.

SENATOR SABIN ESCAPES.

The Jury in the Case of H. H. Porter Fails to Agree.

Special to The Journal.

CHICAGO, June 2.—A week ago today a jury was impanelled in Judge Gresham's court, to try the suit for $100,000 damages begun by H. H. Porter, a Chicago railroad man, against ex-Senator D. M. Sabin, of Minnesota. Porter, it was claimed, at Sabin's solicitation, invested largely in the Northwestern Car Manufacturing Company, and afterwards, he alleges, discovered that Sabin had misstated the assets and liabilities of the concern. The evidence was heard and the jury were unable to agree, seven standing in favor of Sabin and five against.

PRESERVE THE COUNTRY FOR ITS WORKING BOYS.

SPEECH OF CONGRESSMAN WILSON OF WEST VIRGINIA.

With our democratic institutions no child can be born so humble, so beset with difficulties, but if it desired to go upwards the ladder of opportunity reached to him, and he could rise to be just what he deserved to be under free government. Andrew Jackson one time worked at the saddler's bench. If he had done so in England, France or Germany his children, if he had any, and his grandchildren, and his great grandchildren, might have worked at the sadler's bench for all time to come. Fillmore worked at the weaver's loom. Andrew Johnson worked at the tailor's bench. Garfield drove the mules on a canal boat, and in one of the humblest cabins in Kentucky, with its battened windows, was born Abraham Lincoln. Every one of these men in other countries would have remained in the condition of life in which they were born. No talent, virtue, ambition or effort would have lifted them to high position in other countries of the world; but with us, under democratic institutions, the pathway was open and they were bid go forward and be just what they deserved to be.

This country is not worth having as a free country unless we can keep open the pathway of life to all the boys born within its limits. So in this great effort to purge our system of taxation from all taint of monopoly and private ownership and making it a private trust, it seems to me the great argument, after all is this argument for your boys and my boys. I oppose and ever will oppose the government ever taking money out of my pockets and bestowing it in largess and gift on some one else. I will oppose the government taxing the suit of clothes I wear $10 out of $20 to bestow it on some other citizen who has no more right under this government than I have.

I fight against the system of tariff taxation because it is massing the money of this country in the hands of a small part of its citizens; but I fight against it with infinitely more enthusiasm, zest and determination because it is massing the opportunities of this great free country into the hands of a few and a favored class, because it is taking from the boys that cluster around every fireside their opportunities in life that the democratic fathers kept for Jackson, Johnson, Filmore, Lincoln and for you.—The Saturday Globe.

A GOVERNMENT BY VULTURES.

FROM AMERICA (CHICAGO.)

Although President Harrison has been much happier in the prettily rounded speeches with which he has adorned his "swing around the circle" than was President Cleveland when he sought to become acquainted with the people south of Washington and west of Buffalo, yet it must be confessed that in the one address delivered by the ex-President at Buffalo last week he has given the people of the United States more food for reflection than is contained in all the rear platform oratory of the President. There is nothing light or trifling about the mind of the ex-President, He takes politics seriously. Only a man terribly in earnest could have seized the opportunity in addressing a marching club to scatter pearls of political and economic wisdom before a host of Democratic swine. Of a surety the word "Democracy" must in Mr. Cleveland's mind have a magic virtue to convert all descriptions of men, heelers and hangers-on, into devoted patriot's and disinterested politicians.

Mr. Cleveland took for the central idea of his speech praising the Cleveland Democracy of Buffalo the peril of our government from the "reckless and wicked extravagance in our public expenditures." He very properly characterised it as "the most fatal of all the deadly brood born of governmental perversion." The following passage in his speech is especially noteworthy as it condenses and points out in a paragraph some of the most flagrant abuses that grow up in our system of government by and for the vultures:

"Public Extravagance hides beneath its wings the betrayal of the people's trust and holds powerless in its fascinating glance the people's will and conscience. It brazenly exhibits to day a billion-dollar Congress. But lately a large surplus remained in the people's public treasury, after meeting all expenditures, then by no means economical This condition was presented to the American people as positive proof that their burden of taxation was unjust because unnecessary and yet, while the popular protest is still heard, the harpy of Public Extravagance devours the surplus and impudently calls upon its staggering victims to bring still larger supplies within the reach of its insatiate appetite. A few short years ago a pension roll amounting to $53,000,000 was willingly maintained by our patriotic citizens. To-day Public Extravagance decrees that three times that sum shall be drawn from the people upon the pretext that its expenditure represents the popular love of the soldier. Not many years ago a River and Harbor bill appropriating $11,000,000 gave rise to a loud popular protest. Now Public Extravagance commands an appropriation of $22,000,000 for the same purpose, and the people are silent. To-day millions are paid for barefaced subsidy; and this is approved or condoned at the behest of Public Extravagance and thus a new marauder is turned loose, which in company with its vicious tariff partner, bears pilfered benfit to the house-holds of favored selfish interests,"

Stripped of its rhetoric and its partisan bias here is an indictment of the dominating motive behind our political contention, which we must acknowledge justified by the facts, Turn where we will in national, state and municipal politics we have to admit that "the day of the eagle is past, we have only to do with vultures." In the language of the elder Dumas, "The loyal outbursts of the ambition and the counsels of egotism"—and greed. Kites hover where eagles soared. We elect legislators and rulers, but the lobby rules and the trail of a buzzard dollar is over it all.—The Saturday Globe.

CORRESPONDENCE

ANNANDALE ANNALS.

Prof King and wife and Elder Higgins took part in the Decoration services at Rockford last Saturday; the former to deliver the address of the occasion which was, as we understand, a scholarly production.

There was a sociable and strawberry festival announced (from the pulpit) to be held at the residence of Mr. John Scheyer, on Wednesday evening next. The Elder blushed some when he added that it was for his benefit: when he gets older he will not blush so easily.

George Garrison, of Southside, accidentally shot a ball into one of his legs below the knee slivering the bone. Dr. Munger of Fair Haven assisted by Dr. Ridgway removed the ball.

Frank Lewis who went from here to Washington several months ago returned last Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Rennie spent the day, last Sabbath, at Kimball, with Mr. E. Peck.

Mr. and Mrs. H. F. McLane have gone to board at the Pleasant Lake House, having rooms in Prof King's building.

A ludicrous mistake,—Lawyer King mistaken for Dr. Ridgway. The lawyer, assuming an attitude of profound attention, inquiring into the nature of the case was disgusted when it was stated, as it was, one for the medical man and not the legal practitioner. He lost a cliant but the doctor gained a patient.

Miller has commenced running a team to meet the trains, for his house at the head of Clearwater Lake. The house is very popular among sportsmen.

Messrs Manley & Hooker extensive cigar manufacturers of Minneapolis, were here last week and expressed themselves as much pleased with the appearance of our little town.

Mr. Fuller, representing some loan company, was with us last week soliciting for his company.

Mr. Eagy has finished the job of a new front to the Drug Store, adding much to the external as well as internal appearance; and the young Druggist is now almost happy.

Mrs. J. B. Dally now presides at the organ during church service, greatly to the entertainment of the audience.

The editor of the Post represented himself, last week, as "feeling very much like an OLD spring chicken". We hope he will be around again, in a few days, as good as new.

The Committee appointed last week to make arrangements for the Fourth of July celebration have since met and appointed officers of the day and the necessary sub-committees: W. H. Towle is appointed President of the day and J. W. Baker and Z. L. Rogers, Marshals.

Miss Mina Rudolph, daughter of P. S. Rudolph of Southside, started, last Tuesday morning, for Pennsylvania, to visit friends there, but chiefly on account of her health hoping a change of climate may be beneficial.

Doctors Ridgway of Annandale and Munger of Fair Haven removed a cancerous tumor from the breast of Mrs. Peter Burg of Maple Lake, last Tuesday.

ROCKFORD RIPPLES.

The fine rain on Saturday night was badly needed.

Mr. Mary Persion nee. Mary Biskey, visited Florence Murphy and friend last week.

Mrs. French who has been visiting her sister, Mrs. G. P. Perkins for three months past started for home, Nashua, N. H. via the "Soo line."

A new time table will go into effect on the Soo Line, June 7. There will be two passenger trains each way, and one freight. Trains going east about 8 A. M. and 4 P. M. going west about 10 A. M. and 5:20 P. M. Exact time will be known on Saturday.

W. H. Hatch, of Moline, Ill, is at present visiting the Florida family.

Amos Kinney, of Robinsdale, was up visiting particular friends.

Bert Kinney, of the Flour City was in Rockford over Sunday.

A. W. Dorman took in the sights at the city, Monday.

A. W. Rader & Co. have laid in another supply of wind mills, their motto is "quick sales and small profits." Call on him for prices.

The fishing syndicate has changed hands C. D. Mills being unable to manage the business sold out to Warner & Sackett. Warner is manager now.

Bert W. Eaton, of Rockester, called upon W. L. Haggerty, last week.

Andrew Wood, our creamery man visited the city, on Tuesday.

Rockford has decided to celebrate the 4th of July with G. W. Florida marshal of the day.

At a meeting of the council Frank Warner was appointed dog pelter, George Burch assistant.

Miss Rosie Ames returned from Argile, Minn, where she has been teaching school the past nine months.

SOUTH FRANKLIN SAYINGS.

Since the rain, on Saturday evening, farmer's faces are wearing a different aspect. The much needed rain was hailed with delight by all. Early sown wheat is looking fairly good, while late sown cannot amount to much. Timothy meadows will be almost an entire failure. Corn is coming up very irregularly.

Dr. Rader has the banner piece of wheat in these parts. Good for Dock. It shows that he is a practical farmer as well as a practical doctor.

Rev. Jabez Blackhurst preached at the Rader School on Sunday May 31, at half past 10 o'clock, to a fair audience. Text from third chapter, second Peter, and eighteenth verse. During his discourse he made many fine illustrations and his exortation was clear and concise and well recieved by the audience.

OLD TIMER.

WATERTOWN WAYS.

Fair day comes next Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. Acker, of Minneapolis spent Sunday with Mr. St- Johns family.

Messrs Charles and Bert Hainlin with their ladies from Winsted were in Watertown decoration day.

Mrs. Earnest Hainlin and Mrs, F. L. Halgren of Montrose were in Watertown, on Saturday and Sunday.

Levi Halgren came home from Minneapolis last Friday, he will remain in Watertown for a few days.

Mr. John Schamburg of Lester Prairie, was in Watertown on Saturday shaking hands with old friends.

Mrs. Bambock, of Minneapolis, has been visiting with her sister Mrs. A. C. Hilman during the past week.

Hon. Joseph Cravin, of Norwood, spent Sunday with friends in this vicinity.

Mr. and Mrs. Washington Rader and Mr. and Mrs. John Rader came up to Watertown on Decoration day.

The work on the town Hall is being pushed as rapidly as possible now.

There was a very large attendence on Decoration day, the largest that has even been in Waternown on a similar day yet. The speeches at both the cemeteries were excellent for some reason or other the Committee on arrangements was disappointed in getting a third speaker and there was no speech at the Swedish Cemetery.

Mr. and Mrs. P. F. Sexton of Minneapolis have been spending the week with Mr. Hecks family.

The fourth of July bids fair to be a great day in Watertown, this year.

Afro-Americans in Council.

A convention of our colored brethren was held in Minneapolis, May 28.

They seem to be dissatisfied with the social recognition they are receiving from their white brethren: they complain that they are excluded from all employments except menial ones on account of color, and that as a consequence they are forced to become servants. Bro. Graham, in his address to the convention says they "are shut out of the trades and rights enjoyed by others". That "if the Afro-American consents to be a servant for others he is a good fellow, but if he seeks to assert himself as a man he is pulled back." That "if they undertake to learn a trade our boys are driven out. If our girls are desirous of being milliners, clerks or salesladies they are told you are of the wrong color. And in schools if we want situations as teachers it is the same".

It is true that we find our colored friends in every avenue of servitude from that of barbers to boot-blacks and why is it so and whose fault is it? There are always plenty of "white folks" who would be glad of those places but they are crowded out by the colored people, who, it is claimed, are better adopted, by nature, to such service, being more subseverant.

It is a noteable fact that there is one source of employment that the colored man can, but does not, assert his manhood in and would not be "pulled back;" and that is heavy work, such as carrying the hod, speeding the plow, shoveling planting and digging potatoes, the same as white men and boys do. The colored brother has had an equal opportunity to Homestead land and become a farmer; why has he not done it?

By showing themselves worthy they will command recognition but they should observe that there are many white people of good moral and social standing who are not invited by Ex-Gov. Pillsbury to entertainments at his house, and yet they do not feel it to be a case of prejudice or slight. People have the rights to choose their associates and the white man who would pass by the charms of the colored lady and take a white one for a wife we should account it a matter of taste not prejudice against color. There is now and ever has been race prejudices among whites, but I never heard any complaint from the under dog that he was not properly recognized. The colored man in the free states has ever shunned hard labor, he is never found as a farm laborer but is found in some light employment, such as porters, waiters at tables in hotels and boot-blacks; such employments as require periodical service only with a large amount of idle time; but seldom to be found in the capacity of regular house severants. that is too irksome for the colored brother. His nature is indolent.

The colored brother has been coddled and babied for his vote till the coots have got it into their heads that they are not properly recognized; that the colored girl should be sought out and employed by white men as "sales-ladies" in their stores; and as teachers in the schools, they objecting to sparate schools for colored children, they deny that they are demanding social equality and yet every utterance of their convention is a whimper that they are denied social recognition; they parade their patriotism and their service in the war of the rebellion, even to giving the number they had in the service and the number of battles they were in. Has it never crawled through their wooley pates that the war was waged to make them free and that it ill becomes them to boast of the little they did to help themselves?

It is said that the half-breed Indian is a less reliable person than the full blood. How it is with the African negro, whether diluting his blood with that of the white man produces an inferior race I leave for scientists to say? When the colored man shows himself, by his industry and labor as a competitor with the white man then it will be that he will be accorded a better recognition but he must not affect to have all the soft genteel snaps and leave all the dirty heavy jobs for the white men and boys and girls, while he wears white kids, patent leather boots, silk hats and sports a cane. No go to work and be a man and not be continually whining and whimpering because your boys are not made governers and senators, and that your girls are not made school teachers for white children. Go to work and merit recognition and it will come to you without asking and in spite of prejudice; but by convention never. However much you may be coddled for the sake of your votes you are, by trying to force yourselves into social equality with white people, by holding conventions and virtually putting your votes up for bids, making laughing stalks of yourselves. Acquaint yourselves with the history of your race and learn what your people have done for themselves?

Are you not now the dupes of some white political hacks who are hoping to be boosted into office by the aid of your votes?

"The fittest will survive."

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

Washington May 29, 1891.

Mr. Harrison has at last, it is said, braced up his backbone sufficiently to inform Commissioner of Pensions Raum that he must hand in his resignation as soon as another man can be found with some political pull who is willing to take the place. Raum did the grand kick act, and has not yet consented to resign, saying that he prefers being dismissed; but he'll change his mind. They all do that way. When Tanner was asked for his resignation he swore that he would never write it, but he did all the same. It's easy to talk about being kicked but when the big hob-nailed boot is raised they all get out of the way if possible.

Just as might have been expected, the alleged attempt to begin criminal proceedings against young Raum and his partners in office selling has already practically petered out, and the District attorney, a republican of course, has begun to hint about the difficulty of securing the necessary proof to convict Raum or any of his pals, and the uselessness of bringing the case before the grand jury. It is always difficult to do that which we do not wish to do.

By the way, speaking of Pension Office matters, there was quite a farce played there this week. A man was tried for borrowing money, and Commissioner Raum, the man who acknowledged under oath that he had borrowed $12.000 from the king of the pension sharks, was one of the judges Ye gods, think of that. It was certainly the acme of absurdity. Of course the borrower was acquitted, but a victim had to be found, so the fellow who got the loan for him from a Washington ten per center was found to be too loose in his ideas of the amount of interest that ought to be charged for accomodation loans, and was accordingly dismissed in disgrace from the Government service. There are piles and piles of crookedness all over the Pension bureau awaiting the argus eye of a democratic Congressional investigating committee.

Secretary Proctor having given the War department several consecutive days of his valuable time has now gone back to Vermont to put in about ten days in looking after his private business

If it be true, as is generally believed here, that the instructions telegraphed the revenue cutters Rush and Bear as to the part they should take in the present sealing season in Behring Sea, are practically the same as those issued to them last season—to pretend to watch, but at the same time to be very careful never to see any illegal sealing—Mr. Blaine must feel very thankful that he was not here when they were issued.

The Attorney General has gone to the rescue of the Secretary of the Treasury, to a limited extent, by deciding that the last named official has authority to issue silver certificates against the $1,000,000 seigniorage that has been accumulated by the coinage of bullion. Mr. Foster has also, it is said, arrived at the conclusion that he can issue silver certificates against the $20,000,000 in fractional silver that he has been unsuccessfully trying to put into circulation for several weeks past. These are the methods by which the administration hopes to stave off that much dreaded deficit.

Mr. Harrison must have been reminded of the Conkling-Garfield trouble this week when ex-Senators Platt and Miller, of New York, each supported by a dozen or more friends, invaded the White House to engage in a fight over the appraisorship of the port of New York. Mr. Harrison finally succeeded in making Secretary Foster temporary referee of the contest, and he got rid of the gang by promising to come over to New York and look into things before making any decision. When that decision is made, the side that gets left will jump on Mr. Harrison for satisfaction, and he will wish as many another President has, that there were no Federal offices in New York.

Representatives T. J. Campbell, of New York, who is now here, is authority for a statement that will have a very important bearing upon the Speakership contest if he is not mistaken. He says that it has been decided that the twenty-three democratic votes which New York will have in the next House will be cast as a unite in the vote for Speaker. The candidate who is to receive these twenty-three votes has not been decided upon, and will not be until a conference is held; but Mr. Campbell is certain that the delegation will select the winner.

THE old method of the art preservative has been discovered by German ingenuity. The means by which the headbands of Egyptian mummies was preserved is to be adapted to fabrics, and they are expected to possess the property of never wearing out. ONE of William K. Vanderbilt's greatest hobbies is the raising of choice strains of poultry. He has just given a contract for the erection on his beautiful estate at Oakdale a poultry house to cost $15,000. It will be 385 feet long, and it will contain, in conjunction with original ideas of Mr. Vanderbilt's, every improvement known to professional breeders.

HIRAM HUNT, who recently died at Robbinston, Me., is said to have been the original clockmaker of "Sam Slick." He was selling clocks in Nova Scotia when he came under the notice of the author. He never felt proud of the notoriety which the book gave him, and resented allusions to it. His age at the time of his death was nearly ninety years. A number of his wooden clocks are still in existence.

THE yard was originally the length of a king's arm; the foot, the length of his pedal extremities. The word inch is derived from the Latin uncia, a twelfth part, but why the foot was divided into twelfths, instead of tenths or elevenths, no one claims to be wise enough to tell. Probably the inch was originally the length of the second joint of the forefinger. "Mile" is derived from the first word of the Latin phrase millia passuum, "a thousand paces."

THE young Chinese emperor has celebrated the completion of his 20th year by picking out a new wife. Precedent allows a man of his rank seven of these companions, and this acquisition is only the second. His mother examined the many candidates for the honor, and selected ten therefrom, out of which number Hwangti made the final choice. The maiden is the daughter of a mandarin of the yellow button, and is said to have the smallest foot in Pekin. To be an emperor's wife in China is not considered a very enviable lot, as after marriage she is never permitted to see her old friends again.

THE late Henry Shelton Sanford was in 1877 one of the founders of the International African association (now the Independent state of the Congo), and became a member of the executive committee representing the English-speaking races. He was United States delegate to the Berlin-Congo conference in 1885, which opened to free trade and neutrality the entire state, which includes 1,000,000 square miles, with a population of 50,000,000. Last year he was a member of the Brussels anti-slavery congress. In 1870 he founded the city of Sanford, Florida, and gave a large part of his time to its improvement.

RECENT experiments with that dynamite thrower, the Vesuvius, show that while she may be useful in bluffing a foreign belligerent, she is not cock sure of dropping a six hundred pound dynamite shell just where it is most wanted. The important discovery is that her entire usefulness in a fight depends upon how quickly and accurately her commander can estimate distances. Her three pneumatic guns are not movable, but fixed, and what with figuring the curve or a projectile's flight, and maneuvering the boat so as to get the desired line of fire, the man commanding her is up to his neck in business.

URGENCY NEEDED.

Secretary Blaine Explains the Need of Haste in the Behring Sea Dispute.

WASHINGTON, June 2.—The recent correspondence relative to the taking of seals in the Behring sea has been made public as a result of its disclosure in London.

The additional correspondence begins with a note from Secretary Blaine to the British minister under date of May 4, in which he reminds him that during March he (Blaine) had proposed that a modus vivendi be agreed upon touching the seal fisheries pending the result of arbitration of the question between the two governments. Mr. Blaine writes:

"The president's first proposal, which is submitted to you, was that no Canadian sealer should be allowed to come within a certain number of miles of the Pribyloff islands. It was, however, the conclusion of the president, after reading Lord Salisbury's dispatch of February 24, that the modus vivendi might possibly provoke conflict in the Behring sea, and to avoid that result he instructed me to propose that sealing, both on land and sea, should be suspended by both nations during the progress of arbitration, or during the season of 1891. On both occasions it was a conversational exchange of views, the first in my office at the state department, the second at my residence.

"The president was so desirous of a prompt response from Lord Salisbury to his second proposition that I ventured to suggest that you request an answer by cable if practicable. Especially was the president anxious to receive an answer (which he trusted would be favorable) before he should set out on his tour to the Pacific states. He left Washington on the night of April 13 without having heard a word from your government. It was then a full month after he had instructed me to open negotiations on the question and the only probable inference was that Lord Salisbury would not agree to his proposal. The silence of Lord Salisbury implied, as seemed not improbable, that he would not restrain the Canadian sealers from entering Behring sea, and, as all intelligence from British Columbia showed that the sealers were getting ready to sail in large numbers, the president found that he could not with justice prevent the lessees from taking seals on the Pribyloff islands.

"The president, therefore, issued an order placing the maximum number of seals to be killed at 60,000, in the discretion of an agent appointed by the treasury department. Eight days after the president's departure notification was received that Lord Salisbury would agree to a total suspension of seal killing. This was telegraphed to the president, who replied expressing great satisfaction, but stating that some seals must be killed by the natives for food; that the lessees are bound under their lease from the government to feed and care for the natives, making it necessary to send a ship to the Pribyloff islands each season at their expense; and that for this service, a very expensive one, the lessees should find compensation in taking a moderate number of seals under the lease. The president expressed his belief that this allowance would be readily agreed to by Lord Salisbury because the necessity is absolute."

Mr. Blaine then sets forth the responsibilities of the North American Company to the inhabitants of St. George and St. Paul islands, the furnishing of dried salmon and of salt and barrels for preserving sufficient meat supplies, also eighty tons of coal annually, comfortable dwellings, schools, teachers, churches and medical attendance. He continues:

"In short, then, the means of living, the facilities for education, the care of health, the religious teaching, the training of the young and old, and in a community of over 300 persons, are all imposed upon the community as its solemn duty by specific articles of the lease. The duties thus imposed upon the company must be discharged annually with exactness. If the company shall, as you say Lord Salisbury requests, be deprived of all privilege of taking seals, they certainly could not be compelled to minister to the wants of the 300 inhabitants for an entire year. If the lessees are not to be allowed payment in any form for the amount necessary to support these 300 people on the islands they will naturally decline to expend it. Seal life may be valuable, but the first duty of the government of the United States in this matter is to protect human life.

"In this exingency the president instructs me to propose to Lord Salisbury that he concede to the North American Company the right to take a sufficient number of seals and more than sufficient to recompense them for their outlay in taking care of the natives; and that all commercial killing of seals is prohibited pending the result of arbitration. After full consideration the president has limited the number to 7,500 to be killed by the company to repay them for the outlay demanded for the support of the 300 people on the Pribyloff islands. He further directs that no females be killed, and thus the productive capacity of the herd shall not in the slightest way be impaired."

Sir Julian Pauncefote replied at length to the communication of Secretary Blaine, and during the interval between this reply and the next note Secretary Blaine fell ill in New York and the correspondence was taken up in behalf of this government by Acting Secretary Adee. The revenue cutters were waiting for sailing orders and Mr. Adee wrote Sir Julian Pauncefote a note marked "personal," in which he urges a reply from England to Mr. Blaine's proposition of May 4. As this note failed to secure an official and formal reply Mr. Adee renewed his inquiry on May 26 and adds:

"The situation evidently calls for prompt action. Each delay increases the existing differences in the ability of their respective governments to make the proposed limitation of seal taking effective. Ample opportunity has been afforded to her majesty's government to bring this condition to a close and effective agreement but the result is still uncertain and to all appearances remote. The president would be glad to know that it is near at hand and certain but he can no longer hold back, in furtherance of a vague hope, to the detriment of the legitimate interests of the government and citizens of the United States.

"I am therefore directed by the president to inform you that orders have been given to the revenue steamer Rush to proceed to the sealing islands. Another revenue steamer, the Corwin, is at San Francisco, very nearly ready to sail, and will shortly put to sea. Should an agreement be reached before her departure appropriate orders may still be sent by her to the islands."

To this Pauncefote replied, urging that Salisbury was seeking Canada's action in the matter, and a determination might arrive at any moment.

The last communication ends the correspondence up to date.

BAGGED BY BRIGANDS.

A Train Derailed by Robbers in Turkey—The Passengers Abducted, and a Ransom of $40,000 Demanded for Their Release—The German Government Willing to Pay.

CONSTANTINOPLE, June 2.—A party of brigands near Tchereskei on Sunday placed obstructions across the railroad track and succeeded in derailing the Eastern express. When the brigands had thus brought the train to a standstill they found that there were several German and English tourists among the passengers. One of them was a banker of Berlin. The brigands have demanded $40,000 as ransom for the captives, and Chancellor von Caprivi has telegraphed to Herr von Radowitz, the German ambassador here, authorizing him to advance this amount. The remaining passengers were despoiled of their belongings and were then left alone.

The place where the act of brigandage occurred lies between this city and Adrianople. The band which made the attack on the train numbered thirty men, led by the noted Anastasius. The brigands seized the watchman on duty at the railroad station and when they had prevented him from giving an alarm they set to work and tore up the rails for some distance. They set no warning signal for the engineer of the train, but allowed the cars to dash on to a possible destruction. When the Eastern express reached the spot the engine tumbled over on its side, dragging over with it the tender, a baggage car and all the third-class passenger coaches. The first-class passenger cars, luckily, did not follow the other part of the train, but remained safely on the road. When the train was thus disabled the brigands rushed forward, uttering loud yells and brandishing their guns in a most threatening manner, and boarded the cars. Several of the passengers resisted the attack made on them by the brigands, who replied with a volley from their guns and dangerously wounded one of the men who sought to repulse them. The outlaws finally overcame the occupants of the cars and proceeded to plunder them, stripping the travelers of all valuables and looting their baggage. When they ended their work of robbery they seized four of the passengers in the first-class cars and also the engineer of the train and then started with their captives for their rendezvous in the mountains. The men carried away by the outlaws were Oscar Greger, Herr Israel, a banker of Berlin; Herr Maquel, a land owner of Siegelsdorf, Bavaria; Herr Oscar Kotysch, of Zorbig, Prussian Saxony, and Freundiger, the engineer of the Eastern express. Upon reaching their retreat the bandits sent Herr Israel to get the ransom of $40,000 which they demanded for the release of the prisoners. Herr von Radowitz claims that the porte will refund this money.

TITLED CARD SHARPS.

Opening of the Sensational Baccarat Case at London.

LONDON, June 2.—The trial of the suit of Sir William Gordon Cumming against friends of the prince of Wales for libel in charging him with cheating at cards began before Chief Justice Coleridge. The court-room was crowded to overflowing. The prince of Wales was present. Sir William Gordon Cumming testified, and emphatically denied that he had cheated at cards during the game under question.

[The incidents leading up to the trial and the facts which precipitated the scandal are about as follows: Last winter a large party of the nobility and gentry of England were being entertained in Leicestershire by Mrs. Arthur Wilson, wife of a member of the leading ship-owning firm of Hall, Wilson & Sons. Among the guests was the prince of Wales. In lieu of other amusement a spirited game of baccarat was started by the gentlemen of the party in the smoking-room When it came the prince's turn to keep the bank he noticed that Sir Gordon Cumming, one of the guests, who sat directly opposite him, was winning heavily and losing lightly. Suspecting some queer play, the prince watched him closely, and, it is alleged, detected peculiar proceedings. In his hand the baronet held several pieces of gold. These he would surreptitiously add to his stake when he won, while he would slyly reduce his bet when he lost. Suddenly he was caught in the act, denounced as a swindler, and the friendly game wound up in a row. He protested his innocence, but his accusers were firm. The prince finally interfered and suggested arbitration by two gentlemen present, he to name them. This was agreed to, and the arbitrators decided that all further reference to the matter would be dropped if Sir Gordon would sign an agreement never to play baccarat again. He agreed to the terms and signed. Unfortunately for all concerned there was a lady in the house who disliked the baronet. Her husband, who witnessed the row, told her of it and she spread the story. She accused Cumming one night, in a tiff, of cheating at cards. He demanded the name of her informant and she replied that it was Wales. Cumming went to the latter and threatened suit for libel unless an apology was forthcoming. This the prince refused to obtain, hence the present scandalous suit.]

TERRIBLY TORTURED.

How a Missouri Man Forced His Wife to Confess Her Misdeeds.

SEDALIA, Mo., June 2.—George Burnham, a young railroad man, suspected his wife of infidelity. He accused her of this, but she denied it emphatically. Angered by her denial he bound and gagged her, seated her in a chair, lit one match after another, and scorched her flesh until, in an agony of pain, she signified that she would confess. She was unloosed and then told her husband the story of her unfaithfulness, naming a number of men with whom she acknowledged having been intimate. When she had finished Burnham, instead of swearing vengeance on the heads of the men, decided that his wife and he should leave town.

CONTRACTS FOR ST. PAUL.

The Custom House Building Bids Have Been Decided Upon.

The treasury department has awarded John J. Rhodes the contract for furnishing fuel for 1892 to the St. Paul custom house building at $1,616.25. The contracts for furnishing gas and electric light were awarded to the St. Paul Gas Light Company; gas at $1.50 per 1,000 cubic feet and electric light at 1 cent per hour for each 16-candle power lamp burning. The St. Paul Ice Company secured the contract for furnishing 70,000 pounds of ice at 12½ cents per 100 pounds. Moodler Bros. were awarded the contract for furnishing miscellaneous articles at $12,613.

TIRED OF DRESSES.

Two Iowa Girls Found in St. Paul Masquerading in Male Attire.

Theodore Ferger, a well-known farmer of Osceola county, Iowa, found his two daughters, Minnie and Minerva, masquerading in male attire in St. Paul. The girls are 14 and 16 years old, respectively. They became tired of life on the farm, and a week ago clothed themselves in overalls and cut their hair short. They then boarded a night train for St. Paul with only $10. The girls claim they have been looking for work here and that they slept for two nights in a box car in the Kansas City yards. Mr. Ferger left for home with the runaways.

Paid in His Own Coin.

T. R. Yolton, proprietor of the Saddle Rock restaurant in Duluth, came to that city some months ago with a woman thought to be his wife, from Omaha, where he had been in the same business. The other day his wife No. 1 arrived and had Yolton arrested. She claimed that he robbed her in Omaha of $6,000 and left for Duluth in company with a paramour. Wife No. 2 left Yolton, carrying with her all his available cash, about $2,700.

A New Railway Line.

The Duluth, Mesaba & Northern Railway Company filed articles of incorporation with the secretary of state. The capital stock is $5,000,000. The company proposes to build a line from some navigable point on Lake Superior, St. Louis bay or the St. Louis river to some point on the northern boundary of the state to be determined hereafter. It will run through the Vermilion and Mesaba iron ranges.

An Insurance Company Beaten.

The suit of the Powers Dry Goods Company against the Imperial Insurance Company of London for insurance on their building which burned in St. Paul Nov. 27, 1890, has been decided, a verdict for $2,009.51 being given. This is the full amount of the claim with interest on the $5,000 policy. This is a test case and a number of other suits for amounts aggregating over $100,000 are pending.

Burned to Death.

Two children of Felix Lawler, a railroad man, were burned to death in a fire which broke out at his house in Minneapolis. The children were alone in the kitchen, when a hot fire in the stove ignited some clothes hanging over it. They were dead before they could be rescued. The mother was badly burned in trying to reach them. The other children were saved.

Hunting Bears in India.

Gen. E. F. Burton describes a novel method of catching bears practiced by the native hunters of India. Four or five sturdy men are armed, two with long spears, cross-barred on the handles close to the sharp two-edged blades, and two or three with ten-foot bamboos, of which the ends are smeared with birdlime. Thus equipped and leading several powerful dogs, the hunters sally out an hour or so before dawn, and pass along the base of the hills with the fresh morning wind blowing up from the plains below. If the hunters have luck, it is not long before the fierce dogs wind the bear; and though dogs of this species hunt as silent as death, their straining on the lash informs their masters that the shaggy game is nigh. The dogs are slipped and disappear in the darkness, and soon the roaring and growling show that they have found the game. The hunters run up to the spot where the bear is fighting with the dogs. The men with limed poles poke the bear in the ribs, and adroitly twist the ends in its long hair, thus holding it fast on either flank, and the spearmen complete the tragedy by repeated spear-thrusts. It is said that a party of experienced men with good dogs never fail to secure the bear in this way.—Youth's Companion.

"German Syrup"

Martinsville, N.J., Methodist Parsonage. "My acquaintance with your remedy, Boschee's German Syrup, was made about fourteen years ago, when I contracted a Cold which resulted in a Hoarseness and a Cough which disabled me from filling my pulpit for a number of Sabbaths. After trying a Physician, without obtaining relief—I cannot say now what remedy he prescribed—I saw the advertisement of your remedy and obtained a bottle. I received such quick and permanent help from it that whenever we have had Throat or Bronchial troubles since in our family, Boschee's German Syrup has been our favorite remedy and always with favorable results. I have never hesitated to report my experience of its use to others when I have found them troubled in like manner." REV. W. H. HAGGARTY, of the Newark, New Jersey, M.E. Conference April 25, '90.

THE LITTLE SHOE.

I turn the key of this old drawer;
That has been closed for years;
Stored with mementoes of the past
Of hopes, and fears, and tears.

Ah! what is this that I bring forth
With tender hands and true;
Covered with old-time dust and mold
A baby's little shoe!

Another's pulse may not be moved
At such a faded thing;
A burning to another heart
This relic might not bring.

I cannot on it coldly gaze,
As other eyes might view,
Because dead years draw hither
This little baby shoe.

It wakes again a childish voice
In that old homestead there,
And little footfalls on the floor
And patterings on the stair.

A mother's ever-deepening love,
A father's yearning, too,
Are firmly knotted in the string
Of this blue little shoe.

The paths for those small feet
They stretched away in vain:
Alas for hopes that sadly failed
Fulfilment to attain!

This little thing was put away
With tender hands and true;
And I was that there little boy
That wore this baby shoe.

THEIR MAY MOVING.

Why Mrs. Peregrine Post Thinks Her Cousin Very Generous.

It was the thirtieth day of April when my cousin, Peregrine Post, came into the office, threadbare and shabby as usual, with the nap worn off his hat, his garments threadbare with much wear and excessive brushing and a pair of fingerless gloves upon his hands.

I cannot say that I was glad to see him. My cousin Peregrine Post was one of those luckless fellows who are always losing property, making unfortunate investments and borrowing small sums of money, which are to be repaid without fail at the expiration of precisely one week from the date of the loan. But he was a good sort of fellow, too, in his way. He had made a love match with a pretty blue-eyed girl without a penny and had half a dozen dimpled babies, and how they lived nobody knew.

"Going to move this first of May, Cousin Jacob?" said he, beamingly.

"I suppose so," said I.

"So am I," said Cousin Peregrine. "Rent's getting too high—landlady has raised—all that sort of thing. So we're going to No. 11 Smith street."

I looked hard at Peregrine Post and made no remark. Was he going to ask me to lend him five dollars, or to demand that I should become security for his rent? I resolved in my inmost mind to say "No" to either proposition at once.

"And, as we're pretty low for furniture," said Peregrine, "it occurred to my mind that perhaps you'd send us any old odds and ends that you've no particular use for. Children's cribs, chairs, tables, washtubs—anything, in fact!" with a comprehensive wave of the hand which seemed to embrace the whole subject.

"Peregrine Post," said I, wrathfully, "do you think I've nothing to do but to buy furniture to give away?"

"Any old thing, you know," interposed my cousin, with imperturbable good-humor. "We aren't particular."

"I shall do nothing of the sort," said I. "I have no 'old things.' My furniture is all substantial and excellent—"

"Wish mine was!" interjected Peregrine Post, rubbing the palms of his fingerless gloves together briskly.

"And I do not propose to part with it. So I wish you a very good morning."

"No offense, I hope," said Peregrine Post.

"Good morning," I repeated, frigidly—and just then my clerk came in to tell me that the cartman was waiting outside for orders as to the moving ceremonial of the morrow.

I went home after business hours and told my wife about it.

"I am sorry, Jacob," said she, a slight shadow coming over her face.

"'Sorry!'" I echoed.

"Because, dear, there's plenty of little odds and ends we could have spared just as well as not," said my wife. "Furniture does accumulate so when one has been keeping house a long time; and I do feel so sorry for that poor little Nelly Post, with her flock of babies!"

"I don't," I resolutely asserted. "As people make their bed, so they must lie on it. And I've no patience at all with Peregrine Post."

"He has had very bad luck through life, dear," pleaded my wife. "Your path has been in the sunshine; his has lain in the shadow. We ought not to be hard upon each other in this world, Jacob."

"That's all nonsense," said I, stoutly. But I won't deny that my conscience did prick and sting me a little when I looked around at my own piles of stuffed easy chairs, Brussels carpets and springy chintz lounges neatly packed for the morrow's transportation, and thought of poor Peregrine Post and his blue-eyed wife and the six little Posts, with their humble plea for a few sticks of cast off furniture.

The morrow came—the cruel first of May, with its raw winds, tornadoes of dust and the inevitable showers which come down as if by malice prepense just as the mattresses and the silken sofas are piled on the top of the load. I was compelled to be at my office, but my wife was to be at the new house to receive the furniture, while Bridget, our ancient and reliable housekeeper, dispatched it from the deserted domicile.

At one o'clock I contrived to escape from clients and parchments and hurried to 111 Smithson square—a fine, aristocratic neighborhood, with a green jewel of a park in its midst and a general air of genteel seclusion about it, which suited my idea of a location exactly.

Mrs. Jacob Goldleaf sat alone on a campstool in the middle of the large, empty parlors, a shawl wrapped around her shoulders and a mingled expression of weariness and anticipation in her face.

I looked around in surprise.

"Where's all the furniture, my dear?" said I.

"That is the question," said Mrs. Goldleaf. "Where is it?"

"Hasn't it come?"

"Of course it hasn't," said Mrs. Goldleaf, a little impatiently. "I should think you could see that for yourself."

"There's some screw loose in the arrangements," said I. "I'll hurry back to the old place and find out what it all means."

I did so at once. Bridget, with an old handkerchief tied around her head and a red shawl enveloping her, a la Boadicea, queen of the Britons, was just locking up the house.

"Sure, I was goin' 'round to me cousin's for a bite of somethin' to eat," said she. "The second load has gone, and the man won't be back in a hour or more."

"Bridget," said I, sepulchrally, "where has it gone?"

"To the new house, sure," said Bridget. "Where should it go?"

"Did you tell him where to drive?" I asked.

"Sure, he had a bit of a caird that you wrote yoursilf," said Bridget.

I tore my hair. Who ever heard of a load of furniture getting lost in the streets of the metropolis like a black-and-tan terrier or a barefooted baby?

"What on earth does this mean?" I demanded, apostrophizing the dismantled windows, the fireless grate, rather than any actual personality.

At that moment Mrs. Goldleaf came hurriedly in.

"I've left the new house with the real estate's agent's boy," said she. "I couldn't rest quietly without coming to see what all this could mean. Oh, Jacob, shall we be left without a pillow to lay our heads on this night?"

"If the worst comes to the worst, we can go to a hotel," suggested I. "But it's the most mysterious example of an unaccountable disappearance that ever I heard of."

Just then there came a loud ringing at the doorbell, and in tripped Cousin Pergrine Post's blue-eyed little wife.

"Dear, dear Cousin Jacob," she cried, running up to me in tears, "I must thank you with my own lips."

"Thank me! For what?" I demanded, wondering if trouble and impecuniosity and an overplus of babies had driven the little creature mad.

"I could hardly believe my own eyes," said she, breathlessly. "And I'm so sorry I called you a 'hardhearted flint' last night, when Peregrine came home and told me how coldly you had repulsed him. How was I to know that you were all the while meditating this delightful surprise?"

I turned to my wife.

"Speak to her, Alice," said I, in a whisper. "Do contrive somehow to sooth her. I'm very much afraid she's going insane."

Mrs. Goldleaf, who had always been partial to my Cousin Peregrine's wife, went up to her with outstretched hands.

"Tell me about it, dear," said she.

"Don't you know?" said Nelly. "Ah! he is so good! He never lets his left hand know what his right hand does. It's the way with all real philanthropists. It's the beautiful furniture, Mrs. Goldleaf—chairs, sofas, tables, hair mattresses, a lovely set of china, all packed in barrels, bureaus, engravings—oh! everything that you can possibly think of! Our little house is furnished completely. And oh! we did so need it!"

"Stop!" said I, huskily. "How did you know all these things came from me?"

"I asked the cartman," she said; "and he said Mr. Jacob Goldleaf, the lawyer, had sent him; and he showed me a card with 'No. 11 Smith street' written on it, in your own handwriting."

This, then, explained the mystery. In my angry preoccupation of the day before I had written the address of the house which my cousin Peregrine Post had told me he was about to move into, instead of my own.

My wife looked at me with sparkling eyes of love and admiration.

"Dear Jacob," said she, "I knew—I knew you could be noble and magnanimous when you chose."

"Oh, how—how can I ever thank you sufficiently?" sobbed Nelly, covering my hand with kisses.

I said nothing. What could I say? To this day the Posts believe that I had a spontaneous burst of generosity on that first day of May. But I had to explain matters to my wife, and I checked the career of the cartman at once.

"Never mind, dear," said Mrs. Goldleaf. "We can buy new furniture. And your cousin, Peregrine Post, needs it so much, and Nelly was so grateful."

And that was all the consolation I had.—Amy Randolph, in N. Y. Ledger.

A CLEVER DOG'S TRICK.

How He Duped the Butcher and Swindled His Master.

A correspondent sends from Michigan a true story of a farmer's dog who has been found guilty of obtaining goods under false pretenses.

He is extremely fond of sausages, and has been taught by his owner to go after them for himself, carrying a written order in his mouth.

Day after day he appeared at the butcher's shop, bringing his master's order, and by and by the butcher became careless about reading the document. Finally, when settlement day came, the farmer complained that he was charged with more sausages than he had ordered.

The butcher was surprised, and the next time Lion came in with a slip of paper between his teeth he took the trouble to look at it. The paper was blank, and further investigations showed that whenever the dog felt a craving for sausage he looked around for a piece of paper and trotted off to the butcher's.

The farmer is something out of pocket, but squares the account by boasting of his dog's intelligence.—N. Y. Journal.

Long-Lived Fish.

Crows are commonly said to live for one hundred years, and turtles are reported to have even longer life; but the greatest amount of longevity is possessed by fishes. A naturalist once said that as a fish has no maturity there is nothing to prevent it from living indefinitely and growing constantly. He cited, in proof, a pike in Russia whose age is known to date back to the fifteenth century. In the Royal aquarium at St. Petersburg there are hundreds of fish that were put in over one hundred and fifty years ago.—Chicago Tribune.

A Cure for Insomnia.

There's a young doctor up town who will have to improve his methods or he never will have patients enough to maintain him. A woman came in to see him only two days ago looking haggard and pale.

"Well," he said, "what is it?"

"I'm troubled with insomnia," she sighed. "What shall I do for it?"

"Sleep it off, madam; sleep it off," he advised, curtly, and asked her for two dollars.—Detroit Free Press.

—Justification—"But, Fritz, you have made a mistake in your spelling. You must write 'Vater' with only one 't.'" "I don't see why vater shouldn't have as many t's as mutter."—Fliegende Blatter.

DOMESTIC CONCERNS.

—Paint stains on carpets, furniture or clothes, can be taken off by first greasing the spots, and then washing them off with chloroform.

—Chocolate Macaroons: Make frosting as for a cake, stir in two ounces of grated chocolate, drop on buttered paper, bake in a quick oven. — Housekeeper.

—Salt mackerel should be well washed in tepid water, the thin, black skin on the inside scraped out, the head and tail cut off, and the fish soaked skin side up over night in a large pan full of cold water.

—Boiled Leg of Lamb: Allow one hour and a half for five pounds; soak in warm water one hour, roll in a cloth and boil in salted water; serve garnished with a border of turnips, carrots and cauliflower; serve a parsley sauce also.—Boston Herald.

—A good plan for keeping butter cool and sweet in summer is to fill a box with sand to within an inch or two of the top; sink the butter jars in the sand, then thoroughly wet the sand with cold water. Cover the box air-tight. The box may be kept in the kitchen and used as a table.—Ladies' Home Journal.

—Potato Salad: Take one pint cold boiled potatoes, cut in dice, two hard-boiled eggs, cut fine; one teaspoonful finely-minced onion, one tablespoonful chopped parsley, mixed together; dress with three tablespoonfuls oil, three of vinegar, one saltspoonful salt and one-half saltspoonful pepper, mixed together.—Boston Globe.

—Dark Cake: One and one-half cups sugar, one-half cup molasses, one cup butter, one cup of milk, three eggs beaten before added, and four cups of flour. Dissolve one teaspoonful soda in the milk. Take of cloves, cinnamon, allspice and nutmeg each one teaspoonful. If fruit cake is desired add one cup of currants or raisins, or one-half cup of each.—Boston Budget.

—Orange Float: Two lemons, juice and pulp; one quart water, one cup (coffee cup) of sugar. When boiling hot add four tablespoons cornstarch. Let boil fifteen minutes, stirring all the time. When cold pour it over four or five oranges that have been sliced into a glass dish, and over the top place the beaten whites of three eggs, sweetened and flavored with vanilla.—Detroit Free Press.

—Light Breakfast Bread: One quart of milk, three-fourths of a quart of flour, half a yeast cake, dissolved; heat one-third of the milk and scald with it half a pint of the flour and a dessertspoonful of butter; when this batter becomes cool add the remainder of the yeast, half a tablespoonful of sugar and flour enough to make it quite stiff; knead it smooth and leave it to rise all night. This quantity will make two small loaves and a pan of small biscuit.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

—Stoves should be kept in a dry place when not in use. Stove-pipe flues and elbows must be well cared for, or they will rust out in a single season. If there is no dry place for them, they should be well rubbed over with tallow or other grease, which will do much to keep them in good condition. When stoves are taken down in the spring each should have all of its pieces put together, and those that are small enough placed inside of the stove; large pieces may be attached by a wire.

LONG COATS AND JACKETS.

Dressy Effects of the Latest French and English Garments.

Long closely-fitted coats that cover the wearer from neck to foot are popular for useful wear in the morning for shopping and traveling. They are double-breasted, with revers collar, and have usually the cross seams on the hips. Very light tan kersey is used for these coats, with stitched edges as their finish and large white pearl buttons. Other long coats of gray or tan checked cheviot have a deep English cape to complete them. Dressy French cloaks are full round garments of light cloth, with the yoke covered with lengthwise stripes of gold baid. The flaring collar is similiarly trimmed, and narrowly edged with feathers. A belt at the back is of the gold braid.

Bedford cords in gray, tan, and light green shades are used for spring jackets. They are of fashionable length, the back fitted, the fronts straight, with revers trimmed with gold braid in zigzag lines. Light tan coats of smooth cloth are in especial favor, and are made with silk sleeves studded with steel or silver. An applique trimming of light gold braid in bow-knot designs is on the low rolled collar of youthful and pretty jackets of dark-blue cloth; their only fastening is a gold cord with tasselled ends passed under the collar.

The ribbon wrap is a smart little cape for summer wear made entirely of lengthwise rows of black grosgrain ribbon alternating with open jet galloon. For middle-aged ladies are hand-embroidered black faille mantles, short in the back, with full high-shouldered sides and long mantilla fronts. Jet passementerie and Chantilly lace form the high collar and edge these mantles. For evening are mantles of white bengaline with jeweled trimming, and a flaring collar of white ostrich feathers. Short mantles of open black passementerie or of net-like crocheted work are studded with large jet cabochons.

Henri Deux capes of black or tan cloth studded with jet cabochons or bordered with graduated rows of cabochons are shown for tall and stately women. They are made very full, with high wired collar and revers, and have a high puff on each shoulder strapped with jet galloon. Plainer cloth capes without the cabochons have the strapped shoulder puffs, and lengthwise rows of jet on a yoke and flaring collar; the latter is edged narrowly with ostrich feather trimming. Similar capes suitable for those dressing in mourning are of lustreless black cloth, with dull black braid in stripes on the yoke and shoulder puffs, while the collar and fronts are edged with a braid that is finished to imitate the popular trimming of ostrich feathers.—Harper's Bazar.

—It is suggested by a traveler that a law should be passed requiring a safe to be placed in every Pullman palace car for the use of the occupants. A Pullman coach is nothing less than a traveling hotel, it is urged, and its guests should have the same opportunities for comfort and security that are afforded in any hotel. A traveler with valuables on his person can, under the present regime, resort to one of two alternatives. He can go to sleep and take his chances, or he can pay for his bed and lie awake all night guarding his treasure. The opportunities for theft on a Pullman are numerous, and thieves have very often taken advantage of them.

CONCEITED DECLAIMERS.

They Generally Capture the Crowd in Spite of Their Ignorance.

Volubility bears about the same relation to eloquence that soft-solder jewelry bears to ornaments of virgin gold. Still, what is vulgarly called "the gift of the gab" is not to be despised. A fluent ignoramus will often talk down a well-read man, whose tongue is but a stammering interpreter of his thoughts. It is said that a vulgar and ignorant member of a debating society somewhere in the backwoods of Kentucky once obtained a complete victory over a "gentleman and a scholar," who broke down in an attempt to define the meaning of the word "happiness." "Happiness," said the educated dummy, between whose mind and tongue there seemed to be no connection, "is—is—is—," but what it was his diffidence would not permit him to express, and he sat down, blushing and confused.

Thereupon a voluble backwoodsman, whose education had been neglected, but whose self-confidence was unlimited, "took the floor" and volunteered a definition. "Happiness, Mr. President," said he, "is like a sportive crow situated on some far distant mountain which the eager huntsman endeavors in vain, and to no purpose, to reproach. The happy man, Mr. President, reclines beneath the shadow of some far-spreading and umbrageous tree, and calling his wife and all her infant prodigy around him, bids their thoughts inspire to scenes beyond the skies—scenes, Mr. President, thick sot with those glorious orbs of the tournament which it was the lot of the immortal Newton fust to depreciate and arterwards to deplore."

The audience, if not instructed, was electrified, and—so the story goes—the "Thanks of the meeting" were voted to the speaker for his splendid effort.

There is a magic in rounded periods when sonorously delivered. It may be that they have neither force or pertinence; that in a hundred of them there is not as much argument as a man who weighs his words before he utters them could put into one short sentence; but the public ear is tickled, nevertheless, with their harmonious cadences, and it is only when subjected to the review of sober second thought that they lose their charm and sink to the level of mere declamatory clap-trap. Three-fourths of us, however, do not take the trouble to analyze the florid stuff that is talked at us by the spread-eagle speech-makers of the day, and hence men with a superfluity of words and few ideas sometimes live and die with the reputation of orators.—N. Y. Ledger.

MISPLACED CONFIDENCE.

A Smart Peddler, But He Started in Wrong.

"Pipes?"

The peddler deftly opened his pack, took out a lot of wooden pipes with long, flexible stems, and laid them down on the table.

"I've got a full line," he said, "and you can't buy them cheaper anywhere. This one I'll sell you for thirty-five cents, and it's a beauty. If you don't like so long a stem here's one for a quarter that I'll warrant you can't duplicate in this town. Any flies on that one for twenty cents?

"It looks well enough, but——"

"If the twenty-cent pipe doesn't strike you just right how's this one for fifteen cents? I'll make you a present of it if you can get one like it for less than a quarter of a dollar anywhere in this country."

"I don't think——"

"Got a ten-cent line just as good, only they haven't got quite as many scollops on 'em. Genuine brier-root and good stem. Any thing wrong with that one for ten cents? Get just as good a smoke out of it as if it were a twenty-five-dollar meerschaum."

"I suppose so, but——"

"I've got a few here for five cents. Just the plain wood. No frills on 'em. Put a pipefull of good tobacco in one of these five-centers and it'll give you just as much solid comfort as you can get out of any pipe, and I'll bet money on it. Take one of these fivers?"

"I don't think I——"

"Beg your pardon. I ought to have known better than to think you would want a cheap pipe. In the other compartment of this valise I've got some that will make your mouth water. Take a squint at these."

As he spoke he took out a lot of elaborately-finished pipes and spread them out on the table.

"Made out of selected brier-wood," he went on, without a moment's pause, "carved in the highest style of the art, with solid silver trimmings, and you can't duplicate any one of 'em for a three-dollar bill. Sell you the choice of the lot for a dollar and a half.

"See here——"

"Take your pick for a dollar and a quarter."

"I don't believe——"

"Say, what kind of pipe do you want, anyhow?"

"I don't want any," said the weary man in the chair. "I don't smoke."

The peddler swept his pipes into his valise and walked away without a word, but he slammed the door in a most awfully profane way as he went out.—Chicago Tribune.

—Father.—"James, why did you eat all the candy in the box I gave you? I said that you could only have three pieces." James.—"Well, I know, father; but I couldn't help it. I've been making believe there was another little boy spending the day with me."—Smith, Gray & Co.'s Monthly.

In Wide Awake for June

Perhaps the most enjoyable thing is that story with the Edward Bellamy touch, "The Pursuit of Happiness," by Tudor Jenks—a quizzical look into the future for boys. A beautiful romance is contributed by Annie Bronson King, under the title, "This Way Went the Lady Mary to Paradise." A good old-time article, "A Vermont Boy's Trip to Boston in 1825," is from the pen of John L. Heaton of the Brooklyn Times. "Amanda Jinkum's Burdens," by Oliver Howard, has its serious lesson for eldest daughters. All the girls might take some tender teaching from sweet, bright, true Polly Pepper in Margaret Sidney's "Five Little Peppers Grown Up" serial, which has never been more interesting than in the present number. Quite a different little girl from Phronsie Pepper, but a charmingly quaint child, makes her curtesy to Wide Awake's readers in the new serial, "Miss Matilda Archambeau Van Dorn;" in the third serial, "Marietta's Good Times," we get delightful glimpses of the free open air life of Italian children. This serial is from the pen of an Italian woman recalling her childhood. Good things are as thick as roses in June; articles, beautiful illustrated poems; pictures, some fine, some funny; four pages of sparkling original anecdotes; "Tangles," and three pages of letters from the children crowd the number full.

Wide Awake is $2.40 a year, $1.20 a vol. (6 mos.); 20 cents a No. D. Lothrop Company, Boston, Publishers.

Pretty strong reasons for trying Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. In the first place, it cures your catarrh—no matter how bad your case, or of how long standing. It doesn't simply palliate — it cures. If you believe it, so much the better. There's nothing more to be said. You get it for 50 cents, from all druggists.

But perhaps you won't believe it. Then there's another reason for trying it. Show that you can't be cured, and you'll get $500. It's a plain business offer. The makers of Dr. Sage's Remedy will pay you that amount if they can't cure you. They know that they can—you think that they can't. If they're wrong, you get the cash. If you're wrong, you're rid of catarrh.

DELANO DIARY.

—To-morrow will be Delano Fair Day.

—I. Gutzwillers paper emporium received another carload of wrapping paper this week.

—Planting potatoes is in order, and quite an acreage has been planted in this vicinity, this week.

—Brandes Brothers have been at work putting in a well for Mr. Weber, on the Watertown road this week.

—Paul Janikula, Fred Dow, Frank Sutton and John Cunningham are among the jurors courting at Buffalo this week.

—M. A. O'Hair's two year old filly had the misfortune of getting against a wire fence and cutting several gashes on her chest and fore leg.

—Quite a number of our citizens have visited the county seat this week on business connected with the District court and on other business.

—T. S. Kerr and family visited their old home here this week to remove the balance of their goods, to Minneapolis. The house has been rented to Jos. Haumont.

—R. M. Bohn, is moving his barber shop, to-day, to his new house, on River Street. He expects to establish a bath house in connection with his other business, this summer.

—Frank Scherer now runs three men in his cigar factory, Sam. Cutter, Henry Doerr and Pat. Crow with himself making four. Frank is working up quite a trade in his line.

—On the list of pensions granted recently appears among the orginal pensions John Cunningham. Original widow Mary Ellen Cahin. The latter presumed to mean Mrs. Cashion.

—The SATURDAY GLOBE, A Democratic Review of Current Opinion, published in New York, for May 30, is in our hands. In it we find much democratic truth. It has the right ring to it.

—Village Marshal Martin Nelson was around with the bills for alley cleaning this week giving an opportunity to those desiring to pay now to do so. Those failing to pay will have the amount added to their taxes.

—Mr. Farnham formerly editor of the late Cokato Observer was in town on Tuesday on his way to Buffalo, on business. He informs us that he has accepted an offer in Charlestown, W. Va., and expects to leave for there next week.

—Children's day will be observed in the Presbyterian church, on Sunday evening, June 14, and at the M. E. Church, on the evening of June 21. Appropriate exercises for the Annual celebration will be gone through with by the children. Come out and encourage the little folks.

—Thanks to the newly wedded at Waverly for some first class wedding cake. May their future lives be blessed with peace and plenty, as for comforts those have been provided for, five fine rocking chairs being among the numerous presents bestowed upon the happy couple.

—Our Nation's birthday is at hand. July is not far off. Most of our neighboring towns have appointed committees to arrange for celebrating. Let some one make a move for the observance of the day at Delano if there is to be a celebration here. For the past three years Delano has excelled in this matter most of her neighbors.

—Commencement number of the Companion, printed by the students of the school for deaf and dumb, at Faribault and of which "Our Jim" is a graduate is at hand, containing evidence of the care with which the scholars are instructed, in several essays on different subjects by members of the graduating class. One is by David E. Johnson, of Watertown.

—Mr. Hitz's speech for Memorial day did not take place. And the committee on speakers did not put in an appearance at the City Hall, the latter is said to have been engaged in an exhibition of equistrianship a mile or so from town, and it is claimed by the audience that as a bare-back rider his equal would be hard to find. For particulars enquire of the Kaeppe and Kelsey folks.

—The city council are doing considerable in the way of opening up streets. Fourth street South has been opened up except opposite A. Anderson's residence where he owns half the with of the street the length of his property, a strip 30 by 200 feet or so. This the council desire to negotiate for. Oak street has also been opened up furnishing another nice bed of gravel which, if judiciously used, will materially aid in making our streets of the finest. The city fathers have in contemplation the employing of a Civil Engineer to establish grades on our streets. This is as it should be. An engineer will make a plat showing just where and how much to cut; and where and how much to fill, and will provide slopes enough to carry the water off, and drain the town in proper shape. Then the gravel can be used to advantage as a surface dressing to the roads and no place in the county will have finer streets than ours. Hurrah for the spirit of modern enterprise that infests our councilmen.

—The case of State of Minnesota vs. I. Gutzwiller for criminal libel, has been set for Tuesday next.

—W. D. Rust has been heard from The Prof. is now one of the instructors in the Oklahoma normal School. Good for W. D.

—The Andrews Opera Company are playing in St. Peter, the home of the leaders, at one time. They now have one of the best troupes on the road.

—Squire Billings informs us that he acknowledged 36 Pension Vouchers last Thursday, June 4, and that the amount of money recieved through Delano P. O. is about $1500.00, per quarter, or about $6000.00, per year, for Pensions!

—In driving home from Buffalo, on Monday, we took occasion to come over Ed Ziebarth's new road, we hear so much about, and do think that a man or set of men having the fortitude to do what there has been done in the way of making a road over those hills and hollows is, at the least, deserving of considerable credit for their zeal and enterprise. But a great deal remains to be done before the road will be at all comforable to drive over.

PERSONALS.

Delano was visited, on Tuesday, by the biggest justice in the county, W. H. Mapes of Montrose. He was in a rush as usual.

Sam. Cutter returned on Sunday evening from a visit to his parents in St. Peter. Sam says St. Peter is thriving quite well.

Charles S. Hawker, returned yesterday evening from the Hamline commencement. Charles expects to be a graduate there.

Geo. Dyer, Eddie Eppel, Willie Galley and Henry Grafft visited Twincite, to witness some ball playing, last Saturday and Sunday.

John Sturman took the last evenings train for Minneapolis on his way to summer in Yellow Stone Park, if he can make arangements.

Dr. Brigham, of Montrose passed through Delano on Wednesday evening on his way home from the medical society meeting at Buffalo.

Mrs. Frank Halgren with her daughter passed through our village, on Saturday, on her way to Watertown, to attend the Memorial celebration.

Neighbor Mowatt who has been taking a vacation while acting delegate to the I. O. O. F. convention at Winona returned home on Thursday.

Mrs. O. L. Billings accompanied the Squires sister, as far as Minneapolis, this morning on her return home from a pleasant visit with her brother and family.

Charles Seibert, fresh from Seattle, Wash., was calling on friends in this neighborhood, this week. Charley looks well. He says they have no need of doctors out there.

Sam Murphy, wife and daughter returned, this morning, from Fair Haven, Washington. Mrs. M's mother, Mrs. Luther Cunningham, is reported as being considerably improved in health.

Delano Decoration Day.

Saturday, May 30, Decoration Day, was duly observed as a holiday in our village. At the early hour announced 8:30 A. M. people began to assemble in town, and about the city hall, and by 9, o'clock the procession headeded by the Delano Cornet Band, and under the guidance of Marshal Cunningham on one of his prancing steeds, marched to the cemetery where Rev. Campbell offered prayer, the Sunday school children sang Red, white and blue, about a dozen old soldiers strewed flowers on the graves of their dead comrades, marked by small flags. M. A. O'Hair made a few very appropriate remarks, giving the origin of Decoration Day, and wishing for its continuance as a legal holiday as long as an old soldier lives, the procession numbering about 40 teams, with many on foot, among them veterans of the late war, the St. Anthony Benovolent society and others proceeded to the Catholic Cemetery where Rev. Zawadzki conducted the services, assisted by the members of his church. The parochial school furnished music, after this the crowd returned to the city hall where a good audience paid strict attention to one of the finest memorial orations ever delivered in our village, by Rev. Jabez Blackhurst. The programme was well carried out, there being but few exceptions to following it to the letter. Delano is becoming noted for the zeal and enthusiasm, and general good feeling with which the people enter into and carry out any thing they undertake for the public enjoyment or public good.

Wedded at Waverly.

Married at Waverly in St. Mary's Church by Rev. Father Guillet. Miss. Annie O'Hair and Charles O'Hara all of Waverly after the cerermony those invited assembled at the residence of the brides mother where dinner was served at 1 P. M. MARTIN, In Delano, on Sunday, June 1, to Mr. and Mrs. Philip Martin, a girl.

DISTRICT COURT.

June Term, at Buffalo,

Judge Canty Presides.

Monday morning June 1st, at about 11:30 A. M. Judge Canty, of Minneapolis walked into the Court room accompanied by M. A. O'Hair, of Delano. The Judge found quite a crowd of attorneys, witness, es, litigants and others in waiting No time was lost but the Judge at once climbed up to his seat and asked the sheriff to convene the court. When the stentorion voice of Wright county's Sheriff, whose voice has performed the same duty on more occasions than any other in the county resounded throughout the court room Hear ye! Hear ye! Hear ye! The ecourt of the 4th Judicial District is now open. Clerk Steward called over the list of namesof jurors several times when all were found present except A. W. L. Almquist. The Judge then delivered to them his charge, explaining their duties in a very plain manner, and informed them that the county attorney would advise them and the court would assist them, when necessary. Mr. Almquist came in and was posted up by reporter Wing, and took his place with the others. The Judge appointed Edwin Brewster, Foreman. The grand Jury is in charge of Deputy John N. Grafft, and are as follows:

GRAND JURORS:

Geo. Luhman,	Roman Talbot,
Daniel Talbot,	Daniel Mast,
Henry Holt,	Peter Larson,
John Rodin,	Edwin Brewster,

LAWYERS PRESENT.

O, Hair and Lindsley Delano; Latham Howard Lake; Cutting, Culkin, Eaton Alley, Wendell and Pidgeon, Buffalo; Collin's, Maple Lake; Tarbox, Monticello, and Fish, of Minneapolis.

An effort was made by several of the Attorneys to have cases postponed until a later date. The Judge was all willing until it appeared there would be nothing to do, until the latter part of the week, then he promptly called for a jury case to be tried at once. Judge Alley responded with the case of Jonathan Smith and Albert Smith vs. Schuman, a suit for payment of notes given for the purchase price of a reaper. Latham for the defense claimed that the defendant had sold the binder to John Morrow, plaintiff agreeingto for pay, and give him take him back his notes, and that he had neglected to do so. The case went to the Jury at about 4 P. M. and they were having a very lively time about it among themselves, in the jury room under the care of deputy sheriff Tracey, who endeavored by closing the transom, to prevent the arguments from interfering with the proceedings in the court room.

The next case, was a court case, I Gutzwiller, Jr., and Charles G. Roosen, vs. Samuel S. Breed, et. al., and was argued by Messrs Lindsley, for Plaintiffs, Wendell and Pidgeon for defendants.

County Cullings.

Hon. H. C. Bull, of Cokato has been quite sick, this week.

Buffalo had the misfortune to loose by fire her mill, elevator and depot, essentials to a first class town now-a-days. Lightning is said to be the cause of the fire.

John F. Rowan, well known throughout Wright County at one time on the Editorial staff of EAGLE, was arrested at Annandale, on Tuesday, charged with forgery, preferred in Meeker County. John protests his innocence.

The medical society meeting held at Buffalo was slimly attended, either the M. D's. must be terribly busy, or have little interest in the society. Wright County has about 20 graduates in medicine and, with a few from adjoining counties that could conveniently attend, a society ought to flourish that would be not only a credit to the profesion and the county but of inestimable value to the members. The next meeting will be held at Waverly on the second Monday in July.

THE RAIN CLOUD FOLLOWS THE PLOW.

I heard an old farmer talk one day.
Telling his listeners how.
In the wide new country far away.
The rain cloud follows the plow.

"As fast as they break it up, you see,
And turn the heart to the sun.
As they open the furrows deep and free.
And the tillage is begun.

"The earth grows mellow, and more and more,
It holds and sends to the sky.
A moisture it never had before
When its face was hard and dry.

And so, wherever the plow shares run,"
The clouds run overhead,
And the soil that works and lets in the sun."
With water always fed."

I wonder if that old farmer knew,
The half of his simple word,
Or guessed the message that heavenly true,
Within it was hidden and heard?

It fell on my ear by chance that day.
But the gladness lingers now,
To think it is always God's dear way
That the rain cloud follows the plow.
—The Northwestern Agriculturist.

GENERAL ALGERS is looming up in the distance as a Presidential possibility.

TELEGRAPH reports from Rome say that Italy was visited on June 7, by repeated earth quake shocks. Three persons are reported killed, at Marcenigo, and at Bodia Colovena, seventeen wounded.

THE directors of Union Theological Seminary decided by a vote of 19 to 2 to ingnore the action of the General Assembly in the Dr. Briggs affair, and to continue him in his new chair of Biblical Theology.

DR. HOYT, health officer of St. Paul has discovered three cases of small pox in that city. Precautions have been taken to quarantine and vaccinate those exposed, and it is hoped to prevent a spread of the dreaded disease.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD, Canada's leading statesman died after ten days' sickness at Earnscliff. His death will have a tendeney to weaken the party to which he belonged, and Canada may now vote to come into closer commercial, and perhaps, political relations with the United States. It is thought it will take some time to settle the political questions now pending in that country.

TARIFF PICTURES.

The McKinley bill raised the duties on woolen hosiery made in and around Chemnitz, Germany. During the first quarter of 1890 we imported.
$18,911.48. of that hosiery. During the quarter of 1891 we imported only $13,277.53.
—N. Y. Press.

Was not the propect of raising the traiff a sufficient incentive to importers to bring into the country an over stock of these goods in order to have them on hand at the lower rate of tariff consequently making the purchases for the first year of McKinley prices less? Or are people going without woolen stockings, using cotton and other materials? Perhaps they are following the Jerry Simpson fashion. If so, what a saving to the nation financially.

THE New York Sunday PRESS contains a very suggestive, as well as timely picture illustrative of the bright hopes of June graduates from colleges, and of how they look at things terristial, a little later. One picture is of a gentleman and lady dressed in their graduating suits, a parchment in one hand and the other supporting a small globe, their faces wreathed in smiles, while the sun shines out in all his splendor. The other side is shown by the gentleman prostrated with a very large world on his back, unable to rise, while his former joyful companion now dries her eyes with a handkerchief, and the sky is hidden by dense clouds.

Every year adds to the long list of graduates, many of them doomed to share the fate illustrated by the PRESS'ES picture, while others made of sterner stuff take hold of the realities of life, do what their hands find to do, and do not sit idly by waiting for the world to seek them out and elevate them to the top of the pedestal of fame, but in due time, carve out for themselves a nich in the world's history. A college education is a fine thing to have, but how necessary to be able to make good use of it. It is an advantage to any one to be able to understand the ways of the world, but the practical parts must not be forsaken for theoretical, if success is to crown our efforts.

Hospital for Insane.

Considerable discussion is going the rounds concerning the management of the Hospitals for Insane, especially at St. Peter. Three suicides have occurred recently and a fourth patient of suicidal tendency has escaped from his attendants, and it is alledged that Mrs. Sophrona Northrop has been detained at the Hospital as a patient when not insane and when she should have been at large. These charges superintendent Dr. C. K. Bartlett claims should not be laid at the door of the Hospital management, but rather to the State authorities who do not make provision for enough attendants.

It is hardly fair to expect hundreds of insane people to be taken care of for years with too few attendants without some mishaps, but it does appear that the population has decreased from suicide at rather an alarminlgy rapid rate lately. Dr. B. is of course as good a man for the place as he has been for the last twenty years, should be better, but the crowded condition of the house and the too few attendants allowed are things he cannot help. As for the case of Mrs. Northrop the Dr. claims she is suffering from senile dementia and is a fit subject for the asylum. The matters have created considerable excitement and investigations are in order. It can but result in good to all parties to have all charges looked into, either sustained or shown to be groundless. Many things doubtless take place within the walls of such institutions that never come to the notice of the Superintendent's, things that should not occur and that would not, could the Superintendent help it? If one attendant has too many to look after he can no more prevent mishaps occasionally than can a small boy with a large flock of sheep prevent some occasionally straying or getting hurt. Give them all the attendants they need and then demand that things be done correctly and in order.

U. S. CENSUS OF 1891.

Many of our citizens have lately received blanks accompanied by the following presented slip:

An act of Congress approved February 22, 1890, provides:

"That it shall be the duty of the Superintendentof Census, in addition to the duties now required of him by law, to ascertain the number of persons who live on and cultivate their own farms, and who live in their own homes, and the number who hire their farms and homes, and the number of farms and homes which are under mortgage, the amount of mortgage debt, and the value of the property mortgaged. He shall also ascertain whether such farms and homes have been mortgaged for the whole or part of the purchase money for the same, or for other purposes, and the rates of interest paid upon mortgage loans."

The law also provides that, of those required to supply the particulars of information required, "whoever shall willfully fail or refuse shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $100.

Hot Milk as a Stimulant.

A medical paper of high standing recommends hot milk, instead of beer, whisky, or other alcoholic stimulants, in cases of great fatigue and over-exertion of body or mind. Its reviving influence, when taken as hot as it can be sipped, is remarkable. Its effect is promptly felt, and lasting, and even those who have been accustomed to the use of alcoholic beverages will find this substitute remarkably satisfying. This is especially true of over worked women, for whom physicians sometimes prescribe beer and other mild stimulants. The momentary exhilleration felt, is only the whip applied to an exhausted body, while the hot milk is digested and gives nourishment and real strength. The fact is, that the real value of milk and butter and cheese as foods is only half appreciated in America. In the old countries, where meats are rarely on the table of the middle and poorer classes, milk and cheese are leading articles of food. —Northwestern Agriculturist.

DAVID B. HILL.

No man in public life has been subjected to more unjust criticism than David B. Hill, the governor of New York. He is really a statesman of commanding ability, of spotless character and of amazing personal force. His whole career proves that these things are true. No weak man, no mere political trickster, no corrupt or venal politician could have done what he has done. He is only at middle life and he had no fortune or favorable circumstances to aid him. And yet he has been twice elected governor of the Empire state, and has now been chosen to sit in the seat of Marcy and Seward. He is a brillant orator, a sound lawyer, and his state papers show a wealth of learning and a clearness of thought and expression worthy of the great men whose mantle he wears. If he were not possessed of exceptional character and ability he could not have the following he enjoys in his party, composed, as it is, of men of strength, acuteness and ambition.

David B. Hill's great offense has been his unswerving devotion to the interests of the Democracy. When he first ran for governor the opposing candidate was one Ira Davenport, who has since retired to the peaceful pursuit of farming and been lost to public gaze. A public reception of great magnificence was given Davenport in Brooklyn during the campaign, and he was wined and dined with elaborate ostentation by the blue-bloods and the plutocrats of the City of Churches. After a while Mr. Hill came to Brooklyn, too, but the rich men on the hill and the heights did not open their houses to him. He spoke, however, at the Academy of Music to a big crowd of honest, simple people. Standing before them, he announced his claim to popular support in these words: "I am a Democrat." No pen could describe the enthusiasm which greeted this declaration of principles. Through the fight "I am a Democrat" became the rallying cry, and in every contest in which he has since been engaged this legend has been emblazoned on his banner and brought him victory. His Democracy and his victories have not made him friends with Mugmumps or Republicans; but he is a great—one of the greatest of his time. -Globe.

THE EMPTY TREASURY.

Czar Reed is in Europe, wandering from the Coliseum to the Arc de Triomphe, from St. Paul's to Schoenbrunn; McKinley is scheming to make himself Governor of Ohio; Cannon is lost somewhere in Illinois; Rowell has disappeared from memory; Lodge is hidden away in Massachusetts, but the Billion Dollar Congress which they helped so much to create is still a tangible reality, and its full effects are just beginning to be felt.

The Secretary of the Treasury is at his wits' ends for means to pay the bills of the Government as they fall due. Some months ago when the Democrats asserted that the annual expenditures of the Government, under the provisions of the Billion Dollar Congress, would exceed its revenue the statement was stigmatized as that of partisans, but the event has justified the Democratic charge. With $53,000,000 of 4 1-2 per cent, bonds, and the quarterly pension payments speedily falling due the Government finds itself destitute of the needed funds to pay them, and there is no possibility of obtaining such a sum. The Secretary of the Treasury is forced to declare that the nation is bankrupt and is reduced to the expedient of extending the bonds. The United States is taken out of the list of solvent nations and placed on the footing of Russia or Italy or Spain. Not before in many years has the United States been unable to make its payments, when the proper time arrived.

Too little attention has been paid to the financial condition of the Government. It is natural that the expenses of a nation should grow as its population and wealth increases, for in those cases the requirements become larger, but it is contrary to reason and common sense that the annual expenditures should be augmented forty or fifty or sixty per cent. by a single Congress. Such action can not be excused upon the plea of enterprise and efforts to advance the commercial interests of the nation, for these matters are best attended to by private individuals. But in this case the pension list more than any other one thing is responsible for the increase, and in order to dish out conributions to the huge army of sufferers and alleged sufferers in the war, largely the latter, the Treasury has become bare and bankrupt.

The chief question with the Secretary of the Treasury will speedily become how to get money, not how to take care of it. Under Republican administration the surplus has disappeared with a celerity that confounds those who but a while ago were talking of the best manner of its disposition.—Louisville Courier Journal.

CORRESPONDENCE

ANNANDALE ANNALS.

We had only an evening service in the M. E. Church last Sabbath. Mr. Higgins holding a childrens service at Grace Church, South side in the forenoon. Mr. Higgius left last Monday morning for his home in Canada, contemplating a vacation of three or four weeks. Revs. Smith of Albion and Ringer of Fair Haven were announced to supply the pulpit in his absence.

The sociable and ice cream and strawberry festiyal at Mr. Scheyer's last week was not as well attended as would have been only for the impropitiousness of the weather, still a very enjoyable time is reported.

Robert Rousseau of French Lake has returned from Washington whither he has been for the past two years.

He reports too many men there for the work.

One of our most enterprising merchants, Chas. A. Matheu Esq, is puting an addition of some forty feet onto his store.

Mr. J. F. Kelley of Atwater has hired the Linder store and is refitting it up preparatory to putting in a stock of dry goods and groceries.

Louie Webber and Alvie Field came into our village last Saturday with a bunch of some forty to fifty Broncoes from Idaho, and are still here. We understand they have made several sales.

Dr. Ridgway was called last Sunday yesterday. He got them hived, all o. k.

Andrew Thompson understands how to fix a road. He done some good work on the hill near Florida's. It would be well if he only came up a little farther towards the station and leveled up the gravel that was thrown there last year, and filled up the holes.

D. R. Thompson, and Mr. Vollbrecht, of Hanover, went to the city, Monday. Mr. Thompson will furnish the lumber for the mill, to be built at Hanover, by the Vollbrecht Bros. For rock bottom prices call on D. R.

Mr. Avery, of Minneapolis, has been visiting the Burch family.

Dellie and Forest Gent went to Buffalo, on a fishing expedition.

Some of the boys called upon the fishing firm now located at lake Rebecca. They claim they saw a shark that came up to the edge of the water and that was about 40 feet long and had jaws on it as large as the doors on Ewing's barn. It only showed itself for about three minutes.

One person in particular seems to be the best on his feet; he ran nearly up to Jacobs's for he said he had a little of the spirits in his pocket and did not want to be found in the next world with it there.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

Washington, June 5 1891.

Another scandal has cast the shadow of its black wings over this immaculately clean and honest administration. Russell Harrison, not satisfied with travelling more than nine thousand miles free, with meals and refreshments included, on the "President's Special", has been writing letters to railroad managers in all sections of the country begging for free passes for himself over their road. Bah! It is almost as nauseating a spectacle as that daily presented by the Prince of Wales in a London court room, where he appears as a witness against one of his friends charged with cheating at cards. Since when has being the President's son given a man the right to ride free on railroads while ordinary folks have to buy tickets? In furnishing the President with a royally equiped special train free, the railroads of course had a right to expect in return official favors, but what can Russell Harrison give them in return for tickets furnished him?

It was positively stated last week by the Attorney General that the judge of the new land court would be appointed this week, but as the week has nearly gone without the announcement, it looks as though there has been a hitch somewhere in the programme.

Secretary Gardner of the National Association of Democratic Clubs, whose word always "goes" here, where everybody knows him, says there was not a particle of truth in the statement published that the executive committee of which he is a member, had met in New York last week for the purpose of booming Senator Gorman for the Presidential nomination. He says: "I have no recollection of that gentleman's name being called, and I know that there was nothing said or done that could be construed as intended to create a sentiment in favor of Gorman or any other man for the Presidency. It it the object of the association of clubs to work for the men nominated by the party, not to take any part in their nomination. It cooperates with the regular organization of the democratic party in support of democratic men and democratic measures. It does not prescribe platforms, but ratifies them; it does not nominate candidates, but supports them. Its national conventions are in virtue of its constitution, held after, not before, nominating conventions, and the attempt to make it appear that this little business meeting was in the nature of a Gorman boom is unjust and without good reason."

Representative Wise, of Virginia, is the latest Southern democrat to declare in favor of the wisdom of selecting a Western man for Speaker of the House. He says, however, that he isn't committed to anybody and that he will not be until he has had an opportunity to consult his colleagues. He favors Cleveland for President, although strongly opposed to his silver views.

Representative McCreary of Kentucky, spent several days here this week. He is a close political student, and seldom makes a mistake in his predictions. He thinks it will not be very long before United States Senators and the President and Vice-President will be elected by direct vote of the people, and he is in favor of both changes. Gov. McCreary says he feels certain that if Mr. Cleveland has the slighest doubt of his ability to carry New York he will not be a candidate next year.

Commissioner Raum has been absent from hir office all this week, and it appears to be generally understood that he is away arranging his private business for the purpose of having something to do when he retires from the Pension Office, as it is thought he will certainly do at or before the close of the present fiscal year.

Representative Bynum is here gathering facts for an article he proposes writing for one of the reviews, showing that the much-talked about reciprocity agreement with Brazil is exactly the reverse of beneficial to the United States.

The committee of artists appointed to examine the designs and models submitted to the Director of the Mint, for our metal currency, threw them all out—about 300—because none of them were any improvement on the present designs of the coins.

MAPLE LAKE MUSINGS.

Too late for last week.

James Gorman, of Little Falls, came down to attend the funeral of his cousin Miss Geary.

Miss. Desmond of West Superior, is visiting friends and relatives here.

James Gorman Jr. has purchased for $400.00 a beautiful span of sorrels from the German Bros. of Buffalo.

There is lots of farm machinery sold now-a-days.

The farmers are rejoicing over the prospects of abundant crops.

DIED, May the 26th, 1891, Annie Geary at the age of 22, years, at the home of her parents, in the town of Corrinna, Minn., after a protracted illness which extended over several months. During her long illness all that kind and loving parents could do was done to restore one so near and so dear to them to health and strength. The deceased was of a kindly disposition and her numerous friends and relations mourn her early death. The remains were followed to their final resting place by a large concourse of the friends and relatives. The bereaved family has the heartfelt sympathy of the entire community.

WATERTOWN WAYS.

Watertown fair was very largely attended last Monday as usual and a large number of stock changed hands.

County Atty, Warner of Carver was doing business in Watertown last Thursday.

Walter St. Johns made a business trip to Minneapolis from Tuesday until Thursday of this week.

Mr. J. M. Finnegan of Norwood was doing business in Watertown on Monday and Wednesday of this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Stanley with their mother were visiting with Rev. Mr. Davies and wife on Friday last.

Miss. Molly Schutz, of Waconia, was the guest of Miss. Peters, over Sunday.

Prof. F. I. Mason, of Arlington, spent Sunday and Monday at home with his family.

Rev. L. J. Lundquist and family, who have been visiting out west for the past few weeks returned home the latter part of last week.

Mrs. Shannon and children went home to visit with her parents, Rev. and Mrs. Levi Gleason, of Castle Rock. She will be absent four or five weeks.

Mr. George Cunningham was married to Miss. Dinnie, of St. Paul, on Thursday evening last week, at eight o'clock, he and bride came to Watertown on Saturday evening where they will be at home to their friends for the present. We heartily Congratulate Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham and wish them a long and blissful wedded life.

Mrs. Mowet and Children, and Mrs. J. C. Buckley, of Delano were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Kohler, on Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. C. G. Halgren and two children. Lottie and Artie were calling on friends in Delano, last Sunday.

WHAT ONE "AD." DID.

An advertisement is very much like a Gattling gun. If well aimed it can be depended upon to hit the target, but at the same time, is very apt to strike a number of objects that "were not included in the original plans." The best illustration of this comes from New York. It appears that in the Spring of 1888 a traveling salesman made his regular, annual visit to a thriving, little Western city where he was well known and well liked. The local paper gave him a fine personal notice, speaking of his popularity with the merchants, etc. Of course, he mailed a copy of this paper to his house, marking the item with red ink. The manager read it and then threw the paper into the waste basket. It was picked up during the noon hour by the young lady employed as a type writer. Her eye caught the advertisement of a real estate dealer, in which he offered three building lots for $400, and advised his friends to buy, as the investment would prove a profitable one. This accute young lady, having heard how fortunes had been made in the West in lucky real estate investments, persuaded two of her young friends to join her in the purchase of the lots. It took every cent of their savings, but the letter from the real estate agent in response to their inquiry was so encouraging that they surrendered their money as cheerfully as could be expected under the circumstances. Three months later the agent notified them that he had an offer of $750 for their purchase, but advised them to hold it. In August they sold for $1,250, advising the agent to send them only $250, and invest the balance in reality for them. To-day they own $32,500 worth of property, which the agent says will be worth $50,000 in a short time.

This is not a fanciful sketch. It is a plain statement of plain facts, and none of the witnesses are dead, either. The instance is perhaps extraordinary, but the world is made up of things just as extraordinary as this. And, indeed, so far reaching is the effects of one little advertisement that there is no telling when or where it will end.—Farm Machinery.

THE sensational sun-spot man of the Rochester (N. Y.) Democrat declares that: "If the present spottedness continues we may experience a year without a summer, in which frosts may be expected every month." That is what happened in "the cold year," 1816, when the country was new, but if we haven't outgrown that sort of thing by this time what is our boasted progress good for?

THE fact has just come out that Tennyson adds a pretty penny to his income by selling milk from the cows on his Isle of Wight estate. More than this, he actually has the name of Alfred Lord Tennyson painted on the side of his milk carts. This will give finical aristocratic admirers of England's laureate a shock. Sensible folks will be unable to see any harm in it. Milk is a good deal more necessary to human existence than poetry.

A CURIOUS fact noted in connection with the epidemic of grip still prevalent in London is that it has almost wholly spared members of the dramatic and musical profession. Inasmuch as such persons do not enjoy any advantage over the rest of the community in the matter of hygienic surroundings, the most likely explanation of their exemption is that the constant use of the vocal organs tends to fortify them against the lodgment of the grip germs.

NUMEROUS remedies, such as ammonia, oil of cloves, chloroform, etc., have been recommended for mosquito bites, but a writer says that ordinary soap is as good as any of them. He always carries a small piece with him on his country excursions, and in case of a bite makes a lather over the affected part and allows it to dry on. The burning is at once relieved and all pain soon disappears. Should it return, as sometimes happens, it is only necessary to repeat the application.

A BULLETIN issued by the census bureau regarding the production of bluestone shows that in the census year 5,126,340 cubic feet were produced in New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, which were the only states producing this particular variety of stone in the United States, the value of which was $1,689,607. The expenditures by the systematically operated quarries in the production of bluestone aggregated $608,582, of which $527,634 was the wages of the 1,793 persons to whom the industry gave employment.

DR. OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES has one peculiarity in speaking of which at his Cambridge home he says: "I have always made it a rule of my life never to walk against the wind when I could by any means avoid it. Out of my windows here I study the direction of the air currents by the smoke or by the ripples of the water of the bay. My usual walk is between here and Chester park, but whether I ride there and walk back, or vice versa, depends upon the direction of the wind. I never walk both ways. There is a weather-cock atop the stable of a neighbor near by that generally gives me the cue."

THE fire losses for the present year are of extraordinary magnitude, and the president of one of the largest insurance companies in Massachusetts says he never knew anything like it. The losses for the present year to date foot up $67,869,203, as compared with $41,422,297 for the same time last year. The losses this year are: January, $12,043,940; February, $10,264,010; March, $12,869,103; April, $11,642,675; May, $21,049,475. The great increase of losses in May was partly occasioned by forest fires in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Michigan and Wisconsin, but outside of these they were over $16,000,000.

A BARRISTER BOLD.

Such Sir Edward Clarke Proves Himself to Be—He Severely Censures the Prince of Wales in His Argument in the Baccarat Scandal Case.

LONDON, June 9.—The greatest sensation in the baccarat trial was reached Monday when Sir Edward Clarke, leading counsel for the plaintiff, Sir William Gordon-Cumming, severely censured the Prince of Wales for the part he took in the affair at Tranby Croft. The spectators were fairly amazed at the bold statements of the lawyer. The eloquent attorney made a brilliant plea for his client, and when he had concluded Sir William's chances were much brighter. On his conclusion the court adjourned for the day.

The prince occupied his accustomed place beside the lord chief justice when court convened. Sir Charles Russell continued his speech and was followed by Solicitor General Sir Edward Clarke.

Sir Edward Clarke commenced by saying that it had been the "common talk" that the prince of Wales' continual presence in court during the trial of this suit had been for the purpose of restraining the tongues of the lawyers engaged in the case from commenting upon the prince of Wales' connection with it. This remark caused a sensation, but it was nothing to what followed the further utterances of counsel for the plaintiff.

Continuing, Sir Edward Clark intimated that the presence of the prince of Wales in court would not prevent him from making any comment necessary, saying that he (counsel) had a painful duty to perform, and that be intended to perform it honestly and fairly. His opponents had always been careful to allude to him, counsel for the plaintiff, as the "solicitor-general." "While I am proud of that title," he added, "I must remind the jury that I appear in this case simply as an English barrister, and am obliged to disregard friendships and even my own interests and comment on the conduct and evidence of one of the highest in the land."

Sir Edward Clarke, as he uttered these last words, turned squarely around until he faced the prince of Wales, upon whom every eye in court was then fixed, and who nervously crossed his legs, while the audience was utterly aghast at what was considered to be the audacity of the solicitor general. In several directions the whispered comment: "Why, he is going to attack the prince of Wales," was distinctly heard and caused all attention to be riveted upon plaintiff's counsel. After some further remarks Sir Edward created a decided sensation by saying:

"Sir Charles has suggested to you that this case means more to Sir William Gordon-Cumming than mere acquittal of the offense of cheating. It means his honor and his life. As Sir Charles has said, an unfavorable verdict would compel him to leave the army of his country to which he had dedicated the best part of his life. I take this opportunity to say that it is improbable that anyone can remove the name of William Gordon-Cumming from the army rolls as lieutenant colonel and allow that of the prince of Wales as field marshal and Owen Williams as general to remain."

This bold statement seemed to completely take away the breath of the audience, and caused by far the greatest sensation of the entire trial. A hushed murmur of astonishment, not unmixed with dismay and some irritation, and taking several seconds, swept here and there about the courtroom like breakers on a rocky coast. One must thoroughly understand the almost religious worship of royalty which prevails throughout Great Britain to clearly understand the full meaning, the crushing significance of the solicitor general's words, aimed directly at the heir apparent. It was as if a thunder clap had suddenly shaken the building and as if a flash of lightning had unexpectedly revealed the prince of Wales in colors totally unexpected—those of a common mortal, subject to the laws of England and, according to the solicitor general's intimation, a possible violator of the military regulations to the extent that his name was liable to be struck from the army list.

Amidst this storm the prince of Wales sat on the bench to the left of the lord chief justice, immovable, not a muscle of his face apparently twitching, leaning his head on his hand and endeavoring to appear totally unconcerned. He merely gazed coolly at Sir Edward Clarke as if nothing had happened, while the great lawyer went on to dissect the Wilsons and plead his client's cause.

FATAL FLOODS.

They Are Reported from Several Localities in Texas—By a Rise in the Red River Several Persons Have Been Drowned—Many Cattle Lost.

ST. LOUIS, June 9.—Dispatches from several points along the Red river in Texas indicate that that stream is on the rampage. Messengers from Burling state that the river is running wild in that section, with destruction to property and some lives lost north of Doss, on the Missouri, Kansas & Texas railway. D. T. Barris, a stockman, lost 400 head of cattle and fifty-five horses. Friday afternoon a volume of water 10 feet high came rushing down the valley, bearing trees, brush, housetops, dead animals and debris of all kinds, and in thirty minutes the whole valley was one vast sheet of water. Crops of all kinds near the river are all under water and mud, and great damage will result. During a heavy rain at Chillicothe, Tex., two employes of W. P. Lindsay and two strangers who were camped near the bridge at that place were drowned.

REBELS PUT TO DEATH.

Details of the Recent Bloody Insurrection in Hayti—Hippolyte's Vigorous Action—Port Au Prince Under Martial Law and All Business Completely Paralyzed.

NEW YORK, June 9.—The West Indian steamer Orange Nassau, which has just arrived in port, brought the first definite news of the bloody insurrection which occurred at Port au Prince in Hayti on May 28. The outbreak was much more serious than was at first reported and the entire western department of the island is now under martial law. President Hippolyte, whose government was threatened by the insurrectionists, has taken the most vigorous means to put down the rebellion and many of the rioters have been executed. The exact number of those who have been put to death is unknown, but according to the story told by the messengers on the Oranje Nassau, between fifty and one hundred had already been executed when the vessel left Port au Prince on June 2. The executions were still going on at that time, and every day new victims were taken from the prison and shot down by Hippolyte's soldiers. The town of Port au Prince is said to be in an utterly demoralized condition and business of every kind is suspended pending the settlement of the trouble. The law courts are also suspended by order of Hippolyte, and private citizens, on whatever charge they may be arrested, are tried by court martial.

The revolt occurred on the morning of Thursday, May 18. A party of half a hundred citizens, armed with guns and other weapons, made an attack upon the prison at Port au Prince, where more than 200 political prisoners were confined. The mob was led by an ex-minister of the Legitime government. The prison authorities were not prepared for the attack and the doors were soon broken in and the prisoners released. In a short time the whole town was in an uproar. President Hippolyte himself was at church when the outbreak occurred, and his followers, fearful that the mob might attack him, locked the doors of the building and he remained there for some time in fear of his life.

Meanwhile news of the violence at the prison had reached the barracks where Hippolyte's soldiers were quartered, and several regiments at once turned out and hastened to the scene of the trouble. The rioters were still on the ground when the troops charged them. The first volley scattered the mob and many persons were killed. A hundred or more others were arrested on the spot by the soldiers and arrests have been going on ever since.

The outbreak seemed to have been precipitated by the killing of Ernest Rigaud, the largest merchant at Port au Prince, by order of President Hippolyte. Rigaud, who alleged that he was a French subject, had been in Paris some time and had only recently returned to Hayti. Rigaud was suspected of being in sympathy with the Legitime party and of aiding them. It was believed that he had brought from Paris a cargo of arms for the rebels. On Thursday morning, May 28, President Hippolyte went to the house of Rigaud, followed by a detachment of soldiers. The soldiers remained outside, while the president entered alone. He asked the merchant if he did not have guns concealed in the house. Rigaud answered that he had no guns in the house. Putting his hand on Rigaud's shoulder the president said: "Come with me." They left the house together and stepped out in front of the waiting soldiers. Without another word to Rigaud, Hippolyte stepped aside and gave the order to fire. Rigaud fell dead in front of his house. Hippolyte, no doubt, thought this would frighten the friends of Legitime, who contemplated an outbreak. But it seems to have roused them to fury, and the mob to attack the prison and release the political prisoners formed in a few hours.

On Saturday morning, May 30, a nephew of Ernst Rigaud, who was associated with him in business, called at President Hippolyte's house to ask about the killing of his uncle. The young man did not know that his uncle was shot by order of the president. He believed it was done by the soldiers without orders, and he intended to demand an investigation. As soon as he addressed the president and stated the object of his visit Hippolyte ordered him shot. He was at once dragged into the street and shot dead.

About the same time Alexis Rossignol, an inoffensive and much esteemed man, was executed in the streets; another man was put up against the cathedral wall and shot; seventeen were executed in a batch. It is impossible to enumerate in detail all the murders that have been perpetrated under the color of law. It is estimated from May 28 to June 1 300 persons have been put to death.

There is no fighting in the streets to excuse this massacre. Every execution is carried out in the most cold-blooded way, the executioners being soldiers belonging to the most degraded type of men, who seem to enjoy the bloody task. Day and night the troops of Hippolyte patrol the streets, searching for persons suspected of being in sympathy with the insurgent party. Business is practically suspended. The bodies of the rebels shot are left lying in the streets for several hours as a warning to their friends.

Fought for His Life.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., June 9.—At Wickliffe, Ky., at midnight Sunday night, Evan E. Shelby, charged with the murder of Mrs. Sallie Moore, was taken by a mob of 100 unknown men from the jail and hanged. The sheriff resisted and was roughly handled. Shelby fought desperately and severely hurt several of the mob. He was almost dead before they got him out. The murder was committed in 1887, near Woodville, a village near Wickliffe, just across from Cairo, Ill. Shelby had been sentenced for life, but had been granted a new trial from the court of appeals.

Deaf and Dumb Graduates.

The state school at Faribault for the deaf and dumb closed with the following graduates: James S. S. Bowen, Minneapolis; Herbert C. Merrill, Waseca: John P. Flynn, Brownsdale; Squire A. Stedman, Lake Crystal; David E. Johnson, Watertown; Louis A. Roth, Faribault; Katie Gloeser, St. Paul; Adolph Bollinger, St. Paul; Mary E. Lajard, Goodhue county, and Mina O. Yorgensberg, Yellow Medicine county. Those who are honorably discharged are John F. Hennessey, Minneapolis, and Mary Rodney, Duluth.

Bitten by a Mastiff.

A little daughter of Ed Revier, of Northfield, was terribly torn about the face by a large mastiff dog belonging to Mr. Revier. The girl is only 2 years old, and as the dog was eating his dinner out in the yard the little one crawled out near him and put its face right under that of the dog. The dog growled and made a snap at the child, but it did not get frightened, and repeated its playful move. Thereupon the dog made a lunge at the face of the child and tore off a piece of the cheek.

Two Geological Surveys.

H. V. Winchell, of Minneapolis, has gone to the Thunder bay silver district, where he has been reporting on properties for the past year. He says two geological survey parties will be placed in northern Minnesota this summer, one to examine trap rock formations and copper bearing formations between Grand Marias and Pigeon river, and the other to examine the glacial geology of the Itasca lake region.

An Argument Closed with an Ax.

John Quist and Lars Berglund, two substantial farmers living just outside Glenwood, had a fatal quarrel. Both were elderly men and considered authorities on farming. Quist was appealed to to settle a dispute over an irrigation problem and Berglund gave a different opinion. High words ensued, and finally Quist seized a hatchet and hurled it at Berglund's head, killing him.

His Whiskers Grew.

The body of E. M. Haskell, who has been dead for over twenty years, was removed from his grave at Northfield, it being purposed to put the body in another lot. When his body was exposed it was found that he had a beard over 23 inches long. His wife said that before he died he had been shaven, and all his hair must have grown after his burial.

Building a Seminary.

Archbishop Ireland, of St. Paul, is building, out of the $500,000 given him by a non-Catholic layman, a theological seminary for Roman Catholic students at Merriam Park, much on the same plan as Archbishop Corrigan's new seminary at Valentine Hill, Yonkers, N. Y., the foundation stone of which was laid the other day.

Murder in Self Defense.

At Aurora John and Knut Hanson attacked Peter Zeiner. Zeiner defended himself with a hatchet, cutting off John's ear, breaking his skull and cutting a long gash in his side so that he could not live. Knut was somewhat injured. Zeiner gave himself up to the authorities, and he and Knut were both in jail awaiting a hearing.

Lived Together Sixty-Four Years.

Mrs. H. K. Terrell died at Lake City the other morning aged 81 years. Mrs. Terrell was an old pioneer. She came there with her husband about thirty years ago and had been a resident ever since. Mrs. Terrell and her husband, who survives her, had lived together sixty-four years.

A SHREWD CORONER.

He Fined a Corpse for Carrying a Revolver.

An amusing story is told of an old Arkansan known as "One Gallus" Phillips, who for many years was coroner of Monroe county. One afternoon, while old "One Gallus" and several of his friends were sitting near the bank of the river, telling stories, eating watermelons and taking an occasional pull at a jug kept in a shady place, one of the company suddenly exclaimed:

"Gallus, dinged if yander ain't a human man a floatin' down the river!"

"Whar?" "Gallus" asked, getting up and gazing intently, for the sight of a "floater" always sent a thrill through the old coroner, for it gave him a delightful glimpse of a poker game with the boys.

"Right out yander, jest this side of the island."

"Hanged if I don't believe you're right!" exclaimed old "Gallus," striking a trot toward a canoe a short distance away.

The object designated did prove to be the body of a man. The corpse was drawn to the shore and an inquest was held. In a coat pocket were found seventy-five dollars and a letter, giving the name and address of a brother of the drowned man. Old "Gallus" was a man of strict honesty; and as he stood holding the seventy-five dollars in his hand he remarked:

"Boys, it will take twenty-five dollars to bury this fellow decently. I will appropriate that amount and will send the remaining fifty to his brother."

Just then some one remarked: "He's got a pistol in his hip pocket."

"Who has?" "Gallus" asked.

"The dead man. Don't you see?"

"That's a fact," said "Gallus." "And, by the way," he added, "this diskivery puts a different phase on the matter. I'll fine him fifty dollars for carrying the pistol. This makes it come out even. We won't have to send his brother anything." — Arkansaw Traveler.

Honor Among Real-Estate Men.

Some real-estate men can't trust one another as they should. Although it is sad that it should be so, the statement is no less true. An incident that occurred this week illustrates this point. Two brokers were interested in a sale of a piece of property that had just been consummated. The deal was closed in the office of an attorney, who represented the grantor. When it came to make out the check for the commission a wrangle was the result. The brokers had agreed to divide the commission, as one had furnished the buyer. "Make out two checks for the commission, please," requested the buyer's broker. "I don't know you," said the lawyer. "The only person we recognize in this transaction is Mr. A., who sold the property." "I furnished the buyer." "We don't know anything about that. If you have an agreement with Mr. A. you will have to look to him; we can't help you. I'll make out the check to him." When the check was made out both brokers made a grab for it, and each succeeded in catching hold of it. They kept their hold and walked down the street to the bank, each with his hand on a corner of the check.—Chicago Post.

"That Boy."

His name is not Solomon. There are many things he does not know. Remember that he is only a boy. You were one once. Call to mind what you thought, and how you felt. Give that boy a chance. Keep near to him in sympathy. Be his chum. Do not make too many cast-iron laws. Rule with a velvet hand. Help him have "a good time." Answer his foolish questions. Be patient with his pranks. Laugh at his jokes. Sweat over his conundrums. Limber up your dignity with a game of ball or a half-day's fishing. You can win his heart utterly. And hold him steady in the path that leads higher up. That boy has a soul, and a destiny reaching high above the mountain peaks. He is worth a million times his weight in gold.—The Standard.

I. DUNNO AND I. KNOWIT.

I. Dunno started out on a memorable trip,
With a valiant companion, I. Knowit;
"Let us feel our way slowly," says slow I. Dunno.
I. Knowit says: "Let us just go it!"
And one would go fast and one would go slow,
In this trip of I. Knowit and slow I. Dunno.

I. Dunno picked his way, felt about with his cane
And carefully tested the bridges;
I. Knowit rushed on, like a late express train,
Over mountains and rivers and ridges;
He looked back and cried: "Get a move on, old slow!"
"Oh, I'll go my own jog," said old slow I. Dunno.

I. Knowit got tangled and lost in the swamp
And well-nigh submerged in the mire;
I. Dunno he found out, in his leisurely romp,
That the ground was too soft, and went higher:
"I'll poke with my cane wherever I go
And stub along easy," said slow I. Dunno.

I. Knowit crawled out all covered with mud,
And banged and battered with bruises;
Says he: "A fellow with fire in his blood
Can duff in just wherever he chooses."
"'Tis better to go kinder mod'rate and slow,
And not get banged and battered," said slow I. Dunno.

I. Dunno traveled slow, but he got far ahead
Of the rapid onrusher, I. Knowit.
I. Dunno still said: "Let us carefully tread;"
I. Knowit still said: "Let us go it."
I. Knowit brought up in the swamp of Dont-care;
I. Dunno reached the beautiful land of Get-there.

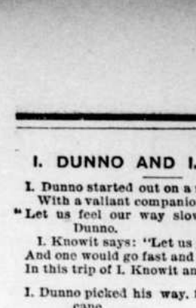
A KENTUCKY DUEL.

An Office Boy's Mistake That Caused Serious Trouble.



COL. BEDFORD ASHLEY, like every true Kentucky gentleman, loved fast horses and pretty women. At the age of forty Col. Ashley was prosecuting attorney in his native town, stood at the head of his profession in popular estimation, enjoyed a comfortable income and only needed a wife to complete his happiness.

Miss Nellie Hawthorne, only daughter of Judge Hawthorne, was the belle of the village, and among her score of admirers it was plain she preferred Col. Ashley, who had been devoted to her since her return from school.

Judge Hawthorne and Col. Ashley were warm personal friends. They agreed on politics, attended the races together and backed the same horses, the judge always placing implicit confidence in the colonel's judgment. The judge loved his pretty daughter very dearly and he was well pleased when his dearest friend, Col. Ashley, asked and obtained his consent to seek the hand and heart of Nellie. "But I can not give her up for a long time yet," said the judge, "and if you win her love, Ashley, you must be content to wait awhile before you ask for her hand."

Col. Ashley pressed his suit at the court of Cupid and won it. Pretty Nellie Hawthorne blushingly acknowledged that she loved him very dearly and would become his wife whenever her father gave his consent.

The colonel had promised to wait awhile for the wedding, but in a few weeks the waiting seemed very long and he determined to see the judge and if possible induce him to name the day.

A portion of Col. Ashley's savings he had invested in race horses, and he owned a small string of very fine flyers. He had purchased most of his horses from Col. Newton Harris, a veteran breeder of thoroughbreds, who kept a sale stable in town, his farm being several miles in the country. One day Col. Harris brought in from his farm a very promising young filly, and he determined to offer her first to his friend Ashley, who wanted to purchase two or three more fast ones. Meeting Ashley on the street Col. Harris told him about the filly. "Go down to the stable any time and tell the boys you want to see the bay filly, Nellie. You will buy her as soon as you have seen her good points."

Col. Ashley promised to call at the stable at the first opportunity.

The same evening the colonel called to see Miss Hawthorne, and the happy lovers agreed that next day the judge should be asked to name an early day for the wedding.

"HERE'S THE LETTER, SIR."

On his way down town the following morning Col. Ashley stopped at the stable to look at the bay filly. When he arrived at his office he found he must prepare a brief in an important case at once, but before he went to work he wrote two notes and gave them to his office boy to deliver. As these two notes proved the beginning of the correspondence which resulted in a duel, they are here copied verbatim. The first was to Judge Hawthorne, and read as follows:

MY DEAR SIR—I can wait no longer. Nellie has consented to be my wife. I know how dear she is to you and how hard it will be for you to give her up, but I shall call on you this afternoon, present my case and plead with you to sustain the decision of the lower court and name an early day for our marriage. Remember our future happiness depends on your answer. As ever, your friend,
BEDFORD ASHLEY.

The other note was to Col. Newton Harris, and read as follows:

MY DEAR SIR—I called this morning to look at your favorite filly, Nelly, and must say she was a disappointment. Her legs are a trifle heavy, she is narrow chested and her neck is too short. With all these defects and the doubtful pedigree of her sire it would be folly to expect much of the filly. I do not care to add her to my string. Thanking you for your offer I am your friend, BEDFORD ASHLEY.

Two hours after sending these notes Col. Ashley was in his office busy preparing a brief. The door opened suddenly and Judge Hawthorne's secretary entered with a letter in his hand. A smile of pleasant anticipation was on Col. Ashley's face as he opened the letter, but as he glanced at its contents his countenance underwent a great change. The letter was from Judge Hawthorne and read:

"SIR—I shall not ask or accept any explanation of the outrageous insults contained in your letter of this date. I demand that you at once make a full apology, both to my daughter and myself."

For a moment Col. Ashley was speechless with astonishment and then he quickly arrived at the conclusion that his audacity in asking for the hand of Miss Hawthorne was regarded by her father as an insult. Col. Ashley was a gentleman, a Kentucky gentleman, the social equal of Judge Hawthorne, and no man must so much as intimate that he would insult a lady.

Judge Hawthorne's secretary soon returned with the following letter from Col. Ashley:

SIR—In reply to your communication of this date, in which you state that I have insulted your daughter and yourself, I have the honor to inform you that a friend of mine, empowered to act for me, will call on you within an hour.
Respectfully, BEDFORD ASHLEY.

Within the hour Col. Ashley's friend waited on Judge Hawthorne with a challenge to mortal combat. The judge in his note to Ashley had stated that he would not accept any attempt at an explanation, so there was nothing left for him to do but to choose his weapons and name the time and place of meeting. He soon found a friend willing to act for him, and the two seconds, without further consultation with their principals, proceeded to arrange all preliminaries for the meeting. Sunrise the following morning was the time agreed upon and the place was an opening in a beautiful grove only five miles from town. All parties could take carriages in town at daylight and reach the ground in time.

Every effort was made to keep the affair quiet, so there would be no interruption, but in some way it leaked out, and before midnight half the men in town knew that Judge Hawthorne and Col. Ashley would fight a duel at sunrise, and no one knew the exact cause of it. Among others who heard of the affair was Col. Ashley's office boy, and when he learned that the duel had been brought about by a letter he was very much alarmed. He had delivered Col. Ashley's note to Judge Hawthorne, but had been unable to find Col. Harris. The conviction that he was in some way responsible for the coming duel grew on the boy until he was unable to sleep that night. He tried to find Col.

"STOP THIS! STOP IT AT ONCE! I SAY."

Ashley, but the colonel was in the hands of his friends and could not be seen.

At daybreak of the morning of the duel Col. Harris was aroused from slumber by a loud knocking at the door. He went to the door and found Col. Ashley's office boy. The lad was pale with fear and trembling in every limb.

"Please, sir, the kunnel's gone to fight a duel!"

"A duel? Col. Ashley gone to fight a duel!"

"Yes, sir, he's goin' to shoot the judge. It's all about a letter, and one of them's to you, so I thought maybe you might get there in time to fix it. Here's the letter, sir. I couldn't find you yesterday."

Col. Harris tore the letter open, glanced at its contents, and at once knew a terrible mistake had been made: the letters had gotten mixed. Without waiting for coat or hat Col. Harris ran to his stable, mounted his favorite bay filly, Nellie, and in five minutes he was riding towards the duelling ground at a derby winning pace.

Clear and sharp two pistol shots rang out, but the anger of Col. Ashley and Judge Hawthorne had made their nerves a little unsteady, and the bullets went wide of the mark.

"Gentlemen, are you satisfied?"

Both principals shook their heads and again they were placed in position. Before the second could give the word to fire flying hoofbeats were heard, and a moment later Col. Harris rode up between the principals.

"Stop this! Stop it at once, I say. It is all a mistake. Here is your letter, judge; give me mine; the boy got our letters mixed!"

Judge Hawthorne was forced to read the letter placed in his hands by Col. Harris. As he finished reading he threw down his pistol and going over to his opponent he said, as he extended his hand: "Col. Ashley, it was all a mistake; I have just received the letter intended for me. I apologize and Nellie shall name the day for the wedding."

"And you shall have Nellie, the bay filly, for a wedding present," said Col. Harris, when he understood the matter. —Walter L. Hawley, in St. Louis Republic.

Strange Headgear.

Italian and negro women are peculiarly fond of what is commonly known as the "head handkerchief," and the use of this article is a characteristic attempt upon the part of both races to cling to customs learned in a climate very different from that of New York. The determined way in which both races cling to outdoor life is another manifestation of the same instinct. The popular name for the Italian and negro headgear, by the way, admirably illustrates the fate of words in the mouths of the ignorant or thoughtless. "Kerchief" means primarily a head covering. When this article of dress came to be carried in the hand it took the name of handkerchief, or "handhead cover," and in still later times the original "kerchief" popularly acquired the name of "head-handker chief," which is "head-hand head cover."—N. Y. Sun.

—"I see, fraulein," said the professor, "that my remarks on the ancient Romans do not interest you." "Ah, yes," replied the hostess, wearily, "pray go on." "No," said the professor, kindly, "I shall change the subject. We will now consider the ancient Greeks."—Fliegende Blatter.

POISONS IN OYSTERS.

Objections to the Bivalve as an Article of Diet.

A number of instances have been recorded recently by Chicago papers and others of severe and even fatal cases of poisoning through the use of oysters. They are not always dangerous as food, but they are very liable to contain a deadly poison, and morever, the eating of themis certainly an unnatural thing. We think it is horrible in a Frenchman to eat snails, and yet these creatures are much more cleanly than the oyster. A snail lives on the leaves of the vine which is very wholesome food, whereas the oyster lives upon the crumbs which fall from the table of all the scavengers of the deep, and man the greatest scavenger of them all, eats the oyster! Not long ago, I saw a picture of the sea shore, with a large pear tree growing upon the bank, and an oyster bed beneath. A monkey had climbed the tree and was reaching out for a nice luscious pear overhead, while the man was standing upon the beach, reaching down into the mud for an oyster. How is it possible for man to turn away from the luscious fruits of the earth to seek in the slime and ooze of an oyster bed for a morsel of food. And worst of all, he often takes the oysters alive, which is certainly a species of cannibalism. A young man went down town from the sanitarium for a dish of oysters and in a few hours was violently ill. I sent down for some oysters from the same place for examination, and found quantities of poisonous ptomaines. A very little of the poison extracted killed a cat. Oysters in bulk in kegs are very liable to become tainted. The keg is opened and the first which are sold are all right, and then decomposition sets in, and dangerous poisons are generated. I have made microscopic studies of oysters, and found the soup swarming with bacteria and the beard of an oyster covered with wriggling animalculae; yet people take oysters from the shell and swallow them alive. Thackeray said once after swallowing an unusually large oyster "I feel as if I had swallowed a baby," and a man ought to feel as if he had done a cannibalistic thing at least.—Dr. J. H. Kellogg.

MEN WHO GO A-FISHING.

What They Try to Catch and When They May Expect Good Luck.

One-half of the world goes fishing, and the other half loves the men that go; for there is something cheerful and hearty about a man who has looked the sun in the face, who withdraws from mankind at times to see the free heavens, and who has heard the winds sweep over midnight seas untrammeled and unconfined. Many enthusiasts, whom gale and snow could not frighten, have already been out tempting the flounders, the only salt-water fish to be caught so early. They have lain dormant in the black deep mud of the bays all winter, and now are fat and lively. While they furnish no very exciting sport, they give good exhilarating fun, especially when you are in a small boat, and two or three generous waves embrace you and douse your shrinking back.

The flounder-fishing will last till May, and before they have gone altogether blackfish will arrive. The fun about blackfishing is that you are always likely to catch some heavy veteran, fish weighing from six to eight pounds not being very unusual. Then come the sea-bass, but they do not generally run heavy in the spring; in the second run, however, which comes in the fall, they are larger, though sea-bass in the bays around New York city rarely average more than a pound or two in weight. About the middle of June the sportsman begins to fish for the kings of the saltwater, the weakfish, though often the bluefish arrive ahead of them. This is generally considered unfortunate, the theory being that the bluefish, when they come before the weakfish, prevent the latter from coming into the bays in any quantity. During summer also the kingfish and sheepshead are fished for, but both fish are now comparatively rare, and "weaks" and "blues" will be the chief feature of the season, which should be a good one, as the winter has not been unusually severe, thus giving the bays plenty of minnows, crabs and shrimp, to attract feeding schools of fish.—N. Y. Tribune.

A Postal Curiosity.

A curiously-addressed letter passed lately through the post office of Madrid, which was deciphered and correctly delivered, notwithstanding all difficulties. The address was a perfect rebus. At the left-hand side was the figure of a lady; it was clear therefore to which sex the recipient should belong. Over the lady's head the sun was rising; hence her name was inferred to be Aurora. For her surname stood a hill, with a castle at its foot, which gives us "Montes y Castillo." Next comes the town, for which the plan of a city was drawn, on which the name Alahambra was legible. This indicated Granada, but in order to leave no doubt possible a pomegranate was drawn beside the plan. To complete the address, a number was indicated in one of the streets of the city plan. The postal authorities took three days to study this curiosity and then triumphantly delivered the letter to "Senorita Aurora Montes y Castillo, Azacayas No. 20, Granada," and, so far from censuring the sender, they had the envelope photographed, and a copy printed in the Madrid papers as a proof of the intelligence of the department.—Manchester (Eng.) Times.

It Was no Pickle Dish.

Mrs. Brown—And what are you going to give Maud Gray for a bridal present, Mr. White?

Mr. White—Oh, I've settled upon something that I thought lovely, and I know it is just the thing she wants badly.

Mrs. Brown—What is it? Do tell me?

In the Gymnasium.

Jack—"Why don't you pitch in and do something, Algy? I've never seen you taking any exercise in all the time you've been here."

No Loss.

Overheard in the parlor of a Broadstreet hotel: "What are you crying for, my little lad?"

"Boo-hoo! I just dropped a ten-cent piece and I can't find it."

"Never mind; you'll find it, for ten cents would not go far in this hotel."—Philadelphia Record.

DOMESTIC CONCERNS.

—Nothing made with sugar, eggs and milk should reach the boiling point.

—In mixing cake dough use cups of exactly the same size for measuring the different ingredients.

—For grease spots on carpets spread powdered magnesium on them and let it remain for two or three hours; remove with a knife, and if the grease is not thoroughly extracted repeat the magnesia.—Drake's Magazine.

—Salted Almonds: Blanch the almonds, and put in the pan with the almonds some butter and salt and place it in the oven, stirring to prevent burning, but let it brown, and serve when cold in fancy little plates. — Housekeeper.

—Beef Loaf: Two pounds raw lean beef, one cup rolled crackers, half teaspoonful of salt, two eggs. Chop all together, forming into a long loaf. Cover the top with small pieces of butter and bake for one hour.—Detroit Free Press.

—Crab-Apple Jelly: Wash the fruit clean, put in a kettle, cover with water, and boil until thoroughly cooked. Pour it into a sieve, and let it drain. Do not press it through. For each pint of this liquor allow one pound of sugar. Boil from twenty minutes to half an hour.

—Oilcloths, linoleums and other floor cloths look well and are said to last better if waxed and polished after the fashion of stained floors, but with a thinner preparation. If, however, they are scrubbed, a soft brush should be used, and it is a great improvement to polish occasionally after drying with a soft flannel sprinkled with oil.—N. Y. World.

—Chicken Salad: Two chickens boiled until very tender, remove all the white and brown meat from the bones, chop it, but not very fine; add to the meat two-thirds the quantity of celery chopped fine, six tablespoonfuls melted butter, yolks of three hard-boiled eggs, yolk of one raw egg, one tumblerful of vinegar, one teaspoonful of mustard, one teaspoonful of salt and a very little red pepper.—Boston Herald.

—To clear soup-stock remove the fat and allow the white and shell of one egg for every quart of stock. If you wish to flavor the stock more highly, add half a saltspoon of celery-seed and the thinnest possible shavings from the rind of half a lemon. Add also the lemon-juice, and more salt and pepper if needed. Mix celery-seed, lemon, egg, etc., with the cold stock, and beat it well. If the stock be hot when the egg is added, the egg will harden before it has done its work.

—Asparagus which is left from dinner may appear a second time in an omelet on the breakfast-table. Cut the cold asparagus in inch pieces and set it in a covered earthen dish in hot water, to be heated thoroughly through, but not to cook. Season it slightly again. Make a nice omelet with four eggs, put a cup of the heated asparagus in it, fold it and serve it at once. Make as many omelets as the asparagus requires, but do not attempt to make any larger ones than four eggs will make.

—Vanilla Ice Cream: One quart of milk, one cup of sugar, two tablespoons flour, one saltspoon salt, three eggs (whites), one pint cream, two tablespoons vanilla. Boil the milk. Mix the sugar, flour and salt, add the boiling milk, and cook twenty minutes in a double boiler. Stir as it thickens, and until it is smooth. Beat the whites to a foam, but not stiff, and stir the hot mixture into them. When cool, add the cream, using more if you have it, and sugar to taste, Strain, and add the flavoring.—Boston Budget.

—Game Puree Soup: Take the bones and meat of any cooked game, also the heads, necks and giblets of the same; stew in plenty of water, with a thin slice of fat bacon, an onion, half a small carrot, one bay leaf and a few black pepperseeds. When quite soft remove the meat to a chopping bowl and allow the rest to stew awhile longer. Chop the meat, then pound it to a pulp in a mortar. Brown a scant tablespoonful of flour in butter the size of a walnut; add it to the liquor which you strain off the bones, then add the pounded meat, and as much more broth (or water) necessary to give to your soup the proper consistency. Rub the whole through a hair sieve and serve over browned slices of bread.—N. Y. Tribune.

STYLISH SKIRTS.

Suggestions for Handsome House and Street Costumes.

Princesse gowns have a separate drapery to form a square apron and Grecian plastron, which is draped on the left shoulder, right hip and trimmed all round. The edge of skirt fronts and sides are slashed in slender tabs, trimmed with a gathered ruffle, a box-plaited ruche, a flat border, or embroidered in a scroll design. Flat fronts, and fronts slightly draped over the hips in cross folds, from the belt, running down toward the front, are the styles oftenest seen, with gathered and plaited backs. In Paris they are working steadfastly to bring genuine draperies in vogue again, and the modistes there are making some fanciful effects in light evening materials, but the idea has not taken root here yet. House gowns lay on the floor in the back for four inches, but street dresses continue to escape the ground, except when some one imagines it will be stylish to drag her gown through the dirty streets. Cloth sleeves and skirts are worn with velvet basques. Fur garnitures appear on cloth and velvet costumes. Cloth gowns will be worn until late in the spring, and, when making one, remember to have a tailor sponge it first, unless you wish it to spot; cut the pieces to run the same way of the cloth, and try to save a piece eighteen by twenty-four inches for a toque. A pale tan, light gray, or old-rose cloth trimmed with black velvet, makes a lovely suit for a young woman, with a toque and cape to match.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Washing Blankets.

In washing blankets, to avoid shrinkage, do not have the different waters of widely different degrees of heat, and do not apply soap directly to them. The best way is to dissolve two tablespoonfuls of borax in hot water, and add the solution to a tub full of very hot water. Put in the blankets and let them remain one hour, stirring about often and rubbing with the hands, but never on a washboard. Squeeze them out of this suds, prepare another water of the same temperature, containing but one tablespoonful of borax, and enough fine soap to make a nice suds; immerse the blankets and repeat the same process as at first. Afterwards rinse through two clean waters the same temperament as the others, and dry.—Detroit Free Press.

HE GOT EVEN WITH HER.

He Saw She Didn't Like Him and so He Turned the Tables.

He had finished his introductory remarks and was about to propose, when he discovered that his proposal would be treated with contempt.

"Go on, Mr. Sprigger," she said, impatiently tapping her foot on the carpet as he paused in his remarks.

"I was about to say, Miss Hilder," he continued, "that I am aware that the human heart, especially a woman's, is a delicate thing, and I come to-night to correct a wrong impression which you have been under for some time, I think. To be plain, Miss Hilder, because I do not wish to cause you future suffering, let me state that I have never cared enough for you to ask you to link your lot with mine, therefore do not think that I can return the love you bear for me. My attentions to you have been prompted purely by a friendly feeling, nothing more. But I trust this will not mar our friendly relations," he said, taking his hat to go, "for remember, you will ever have in me a true friend. Be assured I will be always a nephew to you."

And she was so dumb with surprise and anger that she didn't say good-bye to him when he bowed himself out.—Boston Herald.

"The Quality of Mercy

Is not strained," neither is the relief afforded by that incomparable medicine, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Its prime attribute is thoroughness. Very conspicuous is this quality when it is used for malaria. The poison of that malady in the system it entirely expels. Equally effective is it in dyspepsia, constipation, bilious and kidney trouble and rheumatism.

Children Enjoy

The pleasant flavor, gentle action and soothing effects of Syrup of Figs, when in need of a laxative and if the father or mother be costive or bilious the most gratifying results follow its use, so that it is the best family remedy known and every family should have a bottle.

"DEAR me," said old Mr. Boggs, hesitatingly, "I know I've forgotten something, but, for the life of me, I can't remember what it is."

PAIN from indigestion, dyspepsia and too hearty eating is relieved at once by taking one of Carter's Little Liver Pills immediately after dinner. Don't forget this.

In the train of diseases that follow a torpid liver and impure blood, nothing can take the place of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Nothing will, after you have seen what it does. It prevents and cures by removing the cause. It invigorates the liver, purifies and enriches the blood, sharpens the appetite, improves digestion, and builds up both strength and flesh, when reduced below the standard of health. For Dyspepsia, "Liver Complaint," Scrofula, or any blood-taint it's a positive remedy. It acts as no other medicine does. For that reason, it's sold as no other medicine is. It's guaranteed to benefit or cure, or the money is refunded.

"August Flower"

"I inherit some tendency to Dyspepsia from my mother. I suffered two years in this way; consulted a number of doctors. They did me no good. I then used your August Flower and it was just two days when I felt great relief. I soon got so that I could sleep and eat, and I felt that I was well. That was three years ago, and I am still first-class. I am never without a bottle, and if I feel constipated the least particle a dose or two of August Flower does the work. The beauty of the medicine is, that you can stop the use of it without any bad effects on the system. While I was sick I felt everything it seemed to me a man could feel. I was of all men most miserable. I can say, in conclusion, that I believe August Flower will cure anyone of indigestion, if taken with judgment. A. M. Weed, 229 Bellefontaine St., Indianapolis, Ind."

DELANO DIARY.

—Four applications for Saloon license have been made in Delano.

--Albachten and Tompers have dissolved partnership, see their notice in another column.

--The Wright County Agricultural Society advertises in another column for bids for printing.

--A Special meeting has been called by the Board of Town Supervisors of the Town of Franklin to arrange.

—Fourth street is being opened in good shape. When the crossing is in it will make quite a good street to drive on.

--Assessor Horsch is around with his big books interviewing the citizens of Delano as to their bank accounts and other wealth.

—E. J. Swedeback has built an addition to his third street house recently purchased and now has quite as cosy a residence as any of his neighbors.

—See the notice "Sale of State Lands" to be held at Buffalo, on June 27, by A. Biermann, commissioner of the State Land office in another column.

—Our enterprising merchant John Klick, has worked up quite a trade in Montana, for butter. He has recenty shipped several lots to parties in that golden land.

—The Otsego Campmeeting commenced on Wednesday, June 10. Rev. John Stafford Presiding Elder of Minneapolis district is to preach on Sunday, the 14th inst.

—Rev. Jabez Blackhurst and family expect to be absent on Sunday at the Otsego Campmeeting. Services at the Presbyterian church at 8:00 P. M, Rev. William Campbell officiating.

—People coming over the Sherry hill on the Rockford road say that a good job of work has been done on the road, and that no dirt has been hauled up the hill to fill holes. That is proper.

—One of the finest rains of the season visited this section of country, on Wednesday morning, freshening up vegetation and making glad the heart of the farmer and people in general.

—As yet nothing has been done at this place toward having a 4th of July Celebration. If there is none at home this year our citizens and neighbors can visit neighboring towns most of whom are arranging for a big time.

—Some of the small boys have been out and dug ginseng enough to enable them to have a little spending money for the fourth of July, and, in case one should come, to attend the circus. Seng brings about 50 cts per pound.

--Rev. Mr. McLeod, of New York, preached at the Presbyterian church on Sunday, last. He was in attendance as a delegate to the General Assembly in Detroit, Mich., and came on here to visit his brother, David. His sermon was well liked.

--Mrs. A. W. Wittman has received a letter from her aunt and cousin, Mrs. Kerrick and Mable who have gone to Boulder Mont. They arrived all right. The envelope sent has a picture of Hotel May at that place whice appears to be a fine house.

—On Saturday, Mr. Tiff Hitsman received a telegram from Washington, that his son, Abe, had been shot, and dangerously wounded, while hunting elk. Mr. and Mrs. H. left on the first train for his home to aid in caring for him or to be with him in his last hours, as the case might be. The family have the sympathy of this community where Abe was a boy and grew to man's estate marrying and moving to the far west to rear up for himself and family, a home.

—The Franklin township road overseers have been doing some good work this summer. The roads are getting in such condition now that work shows to better advantage than it used to, the stumps are out of the way, and instead of a crew of men spending the day digging out stumps they devote their time to filling up and leveling off the ground and making a good read, rounded up in the middle with a chance for the water to run off on either side.

—The criminal libel suit of State of Minnesota vs. I. Gutzwiller, Jr. was tried on Tuesday and Wednesday, at Buffalo and a verdict of not guilty rendered by the Jury whether the defendant established his case as justifiable on the grounds that the charges were true, or excusable on the ground that grounds had been furnished for a belief that the prosecuting witness was dishonest in office, sufficent to excuse the editorials we do not know, but we heard a juryman telling Mr. G. not to do so again.

—Some of the River Street people had considerable fun, on Saturday, with one of our neighboring politicians from the country, who is apt to imbibe too freely, and on fair day was more than usually talkative, giving the Democrats a terrible raking over, when all at once he closed his remarks and humbly kneeling on the sidewalk, proceeded to perform some peculiar movements wildly gesticulating in the mean while, the democrats having apparently left his mind entirely, some of the boys had quietly slipped a piece of ice inside of his collar and, as it slid down his back, his wrath was appeased, so far as the democrats were concerned.

The M. E. church at Clearwater was struck by lightning recenty and considerably damaged.

Hon. H. C. Bull of Cokato is rapidly convalescing from his late illness. He called for his favorite fowling piece the other day and gave it a severe inspection preparatory to using it as soon as he is able.

Judge Thomas Canty is not Sustaining the reputation given him last fall by some of his political opponents, but is commanding and receiving the admiration of all parties and men in his official capacity at Buffalo, where he is holding his first term.

After listening to the eloquent pleas of Merrick and Lane of Minneapolis, at Buffalo the other day on the Monticello case, a young lady from Delano, concluded that both parties were rascals and should have been punished. If we had women on the Jury perhaps there would be fewer lawsuits, if both parties were obliged to suffer punishment, it would have a tendency to keep people out of law.

The case of State of Minnesota vs. I. Gutzwiller Jr. for criminal libel which was tried before Justice Billings a short time since and a fine of $15.00 and costs imposed, and appealed to the district court by Mr. G. was tried on Tuesday and Wednesday of this week in Judge Canty's court by a Jury of twelve men of the regular pannel. We did not hear the trial except a portion of the last speech of the proscecution, the Judges charge, and the verdict rendered. The Judge charged that the burden of proof was with the defense and that they could either prove that the matter charged as libelous was justifiably published or that it was excusable. That the defense had endeavored to prove both, and if either had been done a verdict of not guilty should be given. If not and it was found that Mr. Gutzwiller was guilty beyond a reasonable doubt he should be found guilty. The jury found a verdict of not guilty.

Evangelization of the world in this generation.

L. W. Munhall, W. E. Blackstone, Geo. S. Fisher, A. Nash, R. N. McKaig, John G. Wooley and other Christian workers will be present and take part.

Full particulars will be furnished on application to the Secretary, R. D. Manson, St. Paul.

Rain Conditions—A note by Prof Carl Myers.

To the Editor of the Scientific American:

I note that the article in the SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN, December 20, 1890, entitled "The Artificial Production of Rain," near the close quotes the opinion of H. C. Russell as follows: "Our only chance would be to take advantage of a time when the atmosphere is in a condition of unstable equilibrium, or when a cold current overlies a warm one. If under these conditions we could set the warm current moving upwardly and once flowing into the cold one, a considerable quantity of rain might fall, but this favorable condition seldom exists in nature."

The experience of the well known lady aeronaut Carlotta, as well as my own, is directly contrary to the idea of infrequency conveyed. The condition of a cold current overlying a warm one is common enough, and when ascensions were made immediately preceding rain, or several hours before it, a warm current was already established upward, and the air was warm and moist all the way up, and rain was invariably predicted by us after such observations, which were frequently made during the afternoons of July 4, which day seems to be especially favorable to balloon ascensions, atmospheric disturbances through concussions, and consequent rainfalls. CARL E. MYERS, Frankfort, Herkimer County, N. Y., April 6, 1891.

TIMOTHY STRAWS.

BY FARMER JOHN.

Pin-pricks will kill as dead as dynamite if you only have enough of 'em, an' little meannesses sowed thick in a man's life sink him as low as robbin' a savings bank or murdering a president.

The head of a nail gets all the poundin', but the point does all the goin' in. A man musn't always look where he's hit to see the results. It may only get hot enough to burn his fingers there, while it's plowin' into the grain somewhere else.

It ain't the smoke of a man's own chimney that smuts his house. He knows things about himself ten times worse than anyone ever said. It's the stray flake of soot from over the way that he's afraid'll smirch him.

There ain't no use tryin' to spell the communion of saints in the 'postles' creed with the initials of one's religious denomination, no matter how big it is.

The man who laffs at young people's meetin's reminds me of the Dutchman who pulled up his corn because it sprouted green when he wanted to raise the yaller kind.

Nobody ain't goin' to pay taxes on a dog that licks every feller's hand an' trots under his waggin; an' he's jest like the Christian who 'lows that one church is as good as another, an' hain't no choice in pertickler.

The young Christian who's always askin' if it's so very wrong to dance, is a gunnin' up the other tree from where the game is. He'd better try to find somethin' that everyone agrees is right, an' stick to that.

A colt ain't ready for the market before it's bridle-wise; an' the young Christian that's never prayed in public nor got used to any other strap of Christian harness, can'y pay for his keepin' in the church.

The church ain't a county fair where the sleekcoat takes the premium: it's a plowin' match where shoulders that don't gall under the collar count.

Judge a tree by it's fruit, but don't taste a green apple an' call it a persimmon. Give young Christians a chance to ripen before you look for red streaks an' black seed.—The Ram's Horn.

NO SECTS IN HEAVEN.

FROM AN ENGLISH POEM.

Talking of sects till late one eve,
Of the various doctrines the saints believe,
That night I stood in a troubled dream
By the side of a darkly flowing stream.

And a "Churchman" down to the river came,
When I heard a strange voice call his name,
"Good father, stop! when you cross this tide
You must leave your robes on the other side."

But the aged father did not mind,
And his long gown floated out behind,
As down the stream his way he took,
His pale hand clasping a gilt edged book.

"I'm bound for heaven, and when I'm there,
I shall want my book of Common Praper;
And though I put on a starry crown,
I should feel quite lost without my gown,"

Then he fixed his eyes on the shining track,
But his gown was heavy, and held him back,
And the poor old father tried in vain
A single step in the flood to gain,

I saw him again on the other side.
But his silk gown floated on the tide;
And no one asked him, in that blissful spot,
Whether he belonged to "the Church" or not.

Then down to the river a Quaker strayed,
His dress of a sober hue was made,
"My coat and hat must all be gray,
I cannot go any other way."

Then he buttoned his coat straight up to his chin,
And staidly, solemnly waded in;
And his broad brimmed hat he pulled down tight,
Over forehead so cold and white.

But a strong wind carried away his hat;
A moment he silently sighed over that,
And then, as he gazed on the farther shore,
The coat slipped off, and was seen no more.

As he entered heaven, his suit of gray
Went quietly sailing—away—away,
And none of the angels questioned him
About the breadth of his beaver's brim.

Next came Dr. Watts with a bundle of Psalms,
Tied nicely up in his aged arms,
And hymns as many, a very wise thing,
That the people in heaven "all 'round" might sing.

But I thought he heaved an anxious sigh,
As he saw that the river ran broad and high,
And looked rather surprised as, one by one,
The Psalms and Hymns in the wave went down.

And after him, with his MSS.,
Came Wesley, the pattern of godliness.
But he cried, "Dear me, what shall I do?
The water has soaked them through and through!"

And there on the river far and wide,
Away they went down the swollen tide,
And the saint, astonished, passed through alone,
Without his manuscripts, up to the throne.

Then gravely walking, two saints by name,
Down to the stream together came,
But as they stopped at the river's brink,
I saw one saint from the other shrink,

"Sprinkled or plunged, may I ask you, friend,
How you attained to life's great end?"
"Thus, with a few drops off thy brow,"
"But I have been dipped, as you'll see me now.

And I really think it will hardly do,
As I'm close communion, to cross with you;
You're bound, I know, to the realms of bliss,
But you must go that way, and I'll go this."

Then straightway plunging with all his might
Away to the left, his friend to the right,
Apart they went from this world of sin,
But at last together they entered in.

And now, when the river was rolling on,
A Presbyterian church went down;
Of women there seemed an innumerable throng,
But the men I could count as they passed along.

And concerning the road, they could never agree,
The Old or the New way, which could it be,
Nor ever for a moment paused to think
That both would lead to the river's brink.

And a sound of murmuring long and loud
Came ever up from the moving crowd,
"You're in the old way, and I'm in the new,
That is the false, and this is the true"—
Or, "I'm in the old and you're in the new
That is the false, and this is the true.

But the brethren only seem to speak,
Modest, the sisters walked, and meek,
And if any of them chanced to say
What troubles she met with on the way,
How she longed to pass to the other side,
Nor feared to cross over the swelling tide,
A voice arose from the brethren then;
"Let no one speak but the 'holy men;'
For have ye heard the words of Paul,
'Oh, let the women keep silence all?'"

I watched them long in my curious dream,
Till they stood by the borders of the stream,
Then, just as I thought, the two ways met,
But all the brethren were talking yet,
And would talk on, till the heaving tide
Carried them over side by side;
Side by side, for the way was one,
The toilsome journey of life was done,
And all who in Christ the Savior died,
Came out alike on the other side,
No forms, or crosses, or books had they,
No gowns of silk, or suits of gray,
No creeds to guide them, or MSS,
For all had put on Christ's rightousness.

—Toledo Blade.

MCKINLEY, Bill, of Ohio has been nominated for Governor of that great State. It will hardly do to have him elected, or it will squelch the reciprocity of Blaine, entirely, and, also, grand-fathers-hat would be considerably crumpled. If he is elected it will simply show that the state of Ohio is favorable to Bill, or the bill, in preference to Blaine or Harrison, and have little to do with Democracy.

A DEMOCRATIC meeting is to be held in Minneapolis about July 1st.

EX-PRESIDENT GROVER CLEVELAND is already down for a fourth of July oration at Concord, New Hampshire

THE United States and English Governments have agreed to assist in preserving the seals from distruction. See the second page of this paper for a synopsis of the agreement.

THE merchants Hotel, St. Paul gave a grand Banquet last night as an opening after the small pox scare, the house having been under quarantine for some time. A letter from Health Officer Hoyt saying all that could had been done to insure and protect guests against contagion.

HOW IS THIS?
Where Do We Farmers Reap any Benefit?

From one of the N. Y. Presses customary Tariff Pictures we learn that in April, 1890 while eggs were on the free list there was brought into the United States 450623 dozen, in April 1891, with the 5 cts a dozen tariff of McKinley, only 24892 dozen were brought, and that those brought in 1891, were worth 10.5 cents per dozen while those brought this year with the 5 cents tariff were valued at, only 8.216 cents. Aint this a stunner for the western egg Producers?

THE Republican National Convention seems to be too big a concern for Minneapolis to try to entertain from the tone of the remarks and speeches on the subject, by some of her leading men. It is thought it would not boom real estate not help sell one corner lot. That the hotel accommodations would benefficient even if the $50,000.00 were rasied to pay for free entertainment of the delegates. If the hotel accommodations is the only sticker we think a few of the delegates could be entertained at Delano, at regular rates. It is only 30 miles west on the Great Northern, or, if that want do we think the convention would be allowed to meet under the shade of one of our maple groves, and what delegates could not find accommodations in our village could form an acquaintance with some of Wright County's farmers and learn the feelings of the Agriculturalists on the McKinley bill, Reciprocity, etc., etc. For drinks milk is plenty, or water.

New York Press Inconsistencies.

"Consistency, thou art a jewel!" Inconsistency, thou art the arguments of the N. Y. Press; one of the leading republican organs of the great metropolis, of the Empire state, and even of the United States. In one column we are told that the difference of imports between the first quarter of last year and the first quarter of this of woolen underwear from Chemnitz in Germany amounted to 21,313.92 and in the next column that Postmaster General Wanamaker has arranged to expend the sum of $12,000,000.00 per year for ocean mail service. What can the people of the United States want with an ocean mail service of snch magnitude if its trade with other nations is decreasing so rapidly? The Press almost daily parades an array of figures in a smilar strain trying to convince her readers or the great benefits to be derived from the McKinley bill in the way of decreasing imports into this country. If our imports are to keep decreasing at the rates claimed by that paper soon they will be a thing of the past, entirely so. What then will be the use of our $12,000,000.00 ocean mail service? What will all the mail be about, anyway? If we have no imports who will buy our exports? And of what advantage to this country will the trade be any way, if we are to pay $12,000,000.00 a year to carry the mails concerning it? Would it not be unecessary to pay out this amount for this purpose if there was business enough done to warrant having a mail line as there might be if we were trading with all nations as we should?

The Best is the Cheapest.

If 'the best is the cheapest" when buying goods—and it is, within certain limits—then we may say that the best certainly is the cheapest when we are making and selling butter, for it is only the best butter that will sell for enough to pay for cost and leave a fair margin for profit. And in making butter we have an immense advantage over some other manufactured goods, because it costs no more to make good butter than it does to make poor; we have to feed the cows, milk them, raise the cream and churn it, and this we do whether the result is gilt-edged butter or grease. We said it costs no more to make good butter than it does to make poor; it does in one thing—thought; we have got to have our wits about us all the time and use them. We must put thought into our work, and it is the one thing most necessary to our success. "I didn't think" won't do; we must think, and think all the time. —National Stockman, in American Farm News.

INDEPENDENCE, June 17th, 1891.

MR. EDITOR,—While waiting for the coffee pot to boil and biscuit to bake thought I would write you up a short letter on matters and things as they appear to me from a bird's eye view. My text will be found in the Declaration of Independence where it says "All men are created free and equal." and in the Amendment to the Constitution Art. 1, Section where it says Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercises thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or the press, or the right of the people peacably to assemble and to petition the government for a redress of grievances." Now the party in power says the common people of this country have no grievances, this we deny. It can be proved that for 30 years past the farmer and wage worker of this country have been powerless in the hands of the money monger. The love of family, home and country should be more to the poor man than party ties. Ever since the beginning of the war, the poor of this country has had burdens heaped upon them too numerous to bear in way of Taxation, Interest, Tariff etc., etc. and yet the party in power says, no country or people was ever so prosperous and had so much money since the days of King Nebuchadnezzar. In part this may be true. Even to admit this would be no argument in their favor for it is the hardy sons of toil that makes any country prosperous. It is the poor man that emigrates west and settles up the new territories. It is the poor man who cultivates the soil, subdues its wild nature and brings it under subjection. It is the poor man that fights the battles of our country; protects our homes from the invading foe; plants the standard of liberty on land and sea and stands ready to fight, live or die for the free institutions guaranteed unto us by our forefathers. Then, I ask, in the name of common sense, and humanity, who is it, and what is it, that builds up any country and keeps it prosperous? It is the working and industrious class. Then it is to the interest of any country to legislate in favor of subjects that do most to preserve and protect her free institutions. Allow them to own homes, almost free from taxation. Allow them to buy their goods and merchandise without paying high protective duties. Make the rate of interest so as they can be able to pay when it becomes due. And if thus favored the poor will have plenty, and the country will prosper. But how is it in this country to-day? Let us go back a few years in order to get a starting point. At the beginning of the war of the Rebellion there was a scarcity of money brought about by the bankers and money sharks withdrawing gold and silver from circulation in order to speculate on the finance of the country. In this they were successful. After a while, in order to create a larger volume of money, Congress had issued 60,000,000 Dollars of National currency (or Green backs) to be legal tender for all debts public and private. That is it should pay dollar for dollar on import duties and on the public debt. This seemed like a godsend to the people at that time. It brought relief to the soldiers and their families but this was to remain so, only for a short time. For in a few days, or weeks at most, the bankers of New York and Philadelphia, had a little convention of their own, at Washington, and got Congress to insert an exception clause saying this money (Green backs) should be legal tender for all debts except duties on imports and the public debt. This congress did. And that brought a large premium on gold, for which, the bankers were fishing. For at one time it took $2.85 of this paper currency to buy a dollar in gold. And this was done only to impoverish the poor, and put it into the bankers and money sharks pockets. Some will tell you they had to do this in order to get money to carry on the Rebellion but this is a mistaken idea, for the green backs would have answered all purposes if they would have let them alone, as first issued. The soldier who went down south and set himself up as a target for the southern confederacy to shoot at was paid off in these green backs. And why was they not good enough for the banker and bondholder? Again they tell us that our monetary and banking system is the best the world ever had. How does it come about? They, I might say the Republican party, made the Government bonds the basis of the banking system. That is if you want to start a National Bank you buy $100,000 worth of Government bonds they will pay you your interest in advance in gold, give you $90,000 to do business on. This you loan out to individuals at interst from 8 to 12 percent so you are drawing interest on the $100,000 in gold and having $90,000 dollars of the same money to do business on. Now I would ask you who it is that keeps up this banking system? It is the poor man for the bondholder pays neither taxes nor interest, but receives interest on the bonds and has the money too, the poor man goes to the bank, borrows $1000. at 10 percent interest: gives a mortgage on his farm; pays that interest, when it becomes due, and this is how the poor man keeps up the banking system. Class legislation made it this way. It seems to me the poor man must see it is taking money out of his pocket, every day in the year, and putting it in the money monger's pocket, there is no patriotism or love of country in this. A blind man ought to be able to see this.

We come to the tariff question a hard one and a perplexing one too.

The Mill's tariff bill, them other fellows called a free trade bill, when there was only 5 cents difference between it and the existing tariff bill at that time, it being an average of 47 cents and the Mills bill making it an average of 42 cents. The Mills bill taking the duty off of articles the poor consumed, and adding duties, or leaving it on the finer articles that were imported. This Mills bill the Republican party took for campaign poodle and they made the people believe it, that is that it was a free trade bill. But when the McKinley bill comes out they exault it almost as a devine Revelation. What is the average of the McKinley bill? 74 cents. So the average on the tariff is now 74 cent instead of 47 cents. Can that bring comfort to the consumer? My head is so thick I never could understand why it is that the consumer does not pay the duty on imported goods, that he consumes. He does not pay it direct but he most assuredly pays it, indirectly. Now why is it the farmer, and wage worker should want to keep up an existence of things like this, while it is making him poorer every day, and making the money men richer all the time. We read in the book of books "it is not meat to give your childrens bread to the dogs" it does not always do to defend what somebody tells you. Better pay out a little money for papers and other Documents and try and find out if all they tell you is true. Now Mr. Editor no doubt I have already exhausted your patience but before closing would like to quote a few lines from a letter President Lincoln sent a friend in Illinois, near the close of the war, which is as follows. "Yes we may all congratulate ourselves that this cruel war is nearing to a close. It has cost a vast amount of treasure and blood. The best blood of the flower of American youth has been freely offered upon our country's altar that the nation might live. It has been indeed, a trying hour for the Republic; but I see in the near future, a crisis approaching that unnerves me and causes me to tremble for the safety of my country.

As a result of the war, corporations have been enthroned, and an era of corruption in high places will follow, AND THE MONEY power of the country will endeavor to prolong its reign by working upon the prejudices of the people until all wealth is aggregated in a few hands, and the republic is destroyed. I feel at this moment more anxiety for the safty of my country than ever before, even in the midst of the war. God grant that my suspicion may prove groundless." These are the words of a martyred President. Could words be more fitly spoken? And is not his prophesy being fulfilled? Who can dispute it? Remember this about $12,000,000 worth of diamonds and other precious stones are imported into this country in a single year; and the demand is still increasing. And on these there is little or no duty. These are for the rich. CITIZEN.

$3000 A YEAR! I undertake to briefly teach any fairly intelligent person of either sex, who can read and write, and who, after instruction, will work industriously, how to earn Three Thousand Dollars a Year in their own localities, wherever they live. I will also furnish the situation or employment at which you can earn that amount. No money for me unless successful as above. Easily and quickly learned. I desire but one worker from each district or county. I have already taught and provided with employment a large number, who are making over $3000 a year each. It is NEW and SOLID. Full particulars FREE. Address at once, E. C. ALLEN, Box 420, Augusta, Maine.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

Washington, June 12, 1891.

Why did Secretary Foster stop making public the daily statement of the cash balance in the United States Treasury? Was he afraid that the statement would show a deficit instead of a balance? These are pertinent questions at this time. The last statement made, several days ago, showed that the balance had dropped down to a little over three million dollars. Then Secretary Foster directed that the making public of these statements should be abolished. If he didn't do that because he feared the effect of these statements on the public, what did he do it for? The inference is very plain. Mr. Foster knows that it is only a question of time, and a very short time at that, before he will have to pay out money which is not strictly speaking available, and that these daily balances would make it plain the day it was done. So he arbitrarily decides to have no more statements, notwithstanding the right of the people to know at all times the status of their finances; but what do the rights of the people count for in the eyes of Mr. Foster?

Senator Carlisle passed through Washington this week, but he said he wasn't bothering his head about politics just now.

It is a positive pleasure to chronicle the fact that one of the great Government bureaus—the Patent Office—is being run on sound, common-sense business principles; but as Commissioner Mitchell is understood to have tendered Mr. Harrison his resignation it is inferable that he has found it lonesome and prefers to retire. Mr. Mitchell has made one change that will make his administration of the Patent Office stand out like a mountain on a plain for years to come. He has ruled that ex-employes of the Patent Office, acting as agents or attorneys, shall not be permitted to appear in cases upon which they had acted while employes of the Office. This is a most righteous decision, and it ends the career of the over-smart fellows, who while Examiners of the Patent Office have deliberately rejected thousands of applications entitled to be granted, so that they, a little later on, as attorneys might get these inventors as clients and secure a fee for obtaining the patent, thus adding to the inventor's expense and to their own profit.

J. M. Langston, the negro ex-Congressman, says the force bill is to be made the principal issue of the Presidential campaign. The democrats will not ask any easier issue to win on.

Senator Peffer says the People's party will fight Cleveland because of his financial record.

There are good reasons for believing that Mr. Harrison and Senator Quay have settled upon the details of an alliance, offensive and defensive, and it is said that Quay is getting ready to even up with those members of his party that snubbed him when it was thought he was to be an ex-boss.

Not for weeks has there been such a stream of prominent callers at the White House as during the present week. That something of interest has been going on in upper republican circles is certain, and many people believe that it relates to a general reorganization of the cabinet, but a most persistent hunt has failed to discover any one who was willing to father such a story.

The State department sent the diplomatic corps to Chicago on a special train yesterday, in order that its members might have an opportunity to observe the preparations for the World's Fair. Director General Davis, who has been here fixing up things of various kinds, left early enough to be on hand to receive the foreigners when they arrive at Chicago.

Surely the millenium is coming, since Mr. Harrison has actually put two democrats on the bench of the court of private land claims. The following are the justices of the new court: J. R. Reed, of Iowa; W. F. Stone, of Colorado; H. C. Sluss, of Kansas; T. C. Fuller, of North Carolina; and W. W. Murray, of Tennessee, the first named being Chief Justice. M. G. Reynolds of Missouri and L. W. Colby of Nebraska are the U. S. attorneys.

A WORSE ENEMY THAN THE GRIP.

The grip comes when the weather's cold
And breezes chill sweep o'er the land,
And of its victims seizes hold,
With ruthless hand;
But when the genial south wind blows
And warmth is in the solar ray
Its grip it loses, weakly grows,
And shrinks away.

'Tis different with the cigarette,
That so delights the growing boy;
His father's pride and auntie's pet
And mother's joy,
It has no season to begin,
Is by no laws of weather bound;
The cigarette its work gets in
The whole year round.—N. Y. Press.

SIXTY-FOUR earthquakes were felt in Japan during March. On March 21 nine shocks occurred.

A STREET-CAR conductor in Chicago was fined ten dollars for using profane language in the presence of passengers. The precedent is as good as the habit is bad.

AGGREGATING the national, state and county indebtedness, the per capita in this country shows a decrease from $46.59 in 1880 to $20.46 in 1890, or more than one-half.

THE United States now has a larger trade with Costa Rica than any other nation. The total value of last year's imports was $4,250,000, of which the United States furnished $1,500,000.

THE experiment of assorting mail matter on steamships as it is assorted on railroads has proved to be a perfect success, and the plan will be adopted for the entire ocean postal service.

MISS GARNER, of New York, who has just married Sir William Gordon-Cumming, is one of the heirs of the great Garner estate, which is conservatively estimated at the pleasing figure of $70,000,000.

A LOUISIANA farmer is reported to be the possessor of a cow, perfect in every other particular, which is only the size of a good-sized Newfoundland dog. Whether or not it gives condensed milk is not stated.

ANTWERP diamond frauds are said to have fooled the world with 25,000,000 francs worth of bleached diamonds since they commenced the business. But as long as the owners are not aware of the fraud they are happy.

THERE are more women in British India (124,000,000) than there are men, women and children in Great Britain, France and Germany put together, with the population of several other minor European states cast in as well.

THOMAS B. ALLEN recently celebrated his 100th birthday at Clarksburg, W. Va. He was a soldier under Wellington and was present at the burial of Sir John Moore. Allen's grandfather died at 135, and his father was living twenty years ago at the age of 110. Since then he has not been heard from.

A DUEL with rocking chairs is reported in New York. Many a man has had the unpleasant experience of a duel with one rocking chair in the dark, but when it comes to more than one he would have little chance to escape with his life. One rocking chair is more than a match for a man trying to find his way through a dark parlor.

THE 14th of June was the anniversary of the adoption of the American flag. On that day in 1777 the continental congress passed the resolution establishing the stars and stripes as the national standard. The Sons of the Revolution have issued a request that the day hereafter be annually observed by flinging the glorious star-spangled banner to the breeze.

A BOY in New Jersey has created a great deal of trouble for the school authorities of that state because he refused to apologize for kissing a girl and would not take a whipping from the teacher. The boy refused to acknowledge that he had committed a crime even though the kiss was stolen. He was dismissed from school, but the county and state superintendents were both boys once, and they have reinstated him.

IN New York city there is a millionaire who smokes Pennsylvania cigars that cost him $1 per 100. He consumes three of these per day. In one year, therefore, his cigars cost him $10.95, in ten years $109.50, and in forty years the expense of the indulgence reaches the frightful total of $438! This reckless extravagance on the part of a New York millionaire is incredible, but the story is vouched for by persons of unimpeachable veracity.

A NOVEL and interesting feature of the immigration to this country is the Danish immigration to Maryland. The first arrival some time since was a colony of 462 under the leadership of Peter Cedar, of Copenhagen, and now 100 more have arrived. They will buy 1,700 acres of land in Prince George's county, near the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, between Baltimore and Washington, and will devote themselves to dairy and truck farming, in which the Danes are adepts.

EDWARD WHELAHAN, who died recently in New Haven, Conn., was nearer to the head of the army for a longer time than any other man. He was a trooper in Company B, of the Fifth Connecticut cavalry, but was detailed as the personal orderly of Gen. Grant. When Grant rode out the armed cavalryman rode fifteen paces behind to personally guard his commander. Wherever Grant walked there Whelahan followed. The trooper was a tall, powerfully-built man of splendid military bearing, a bold and skillful rider, a soldier of recognized bravery and a faithful man.

THE census bureau has made public a bulletin on the subject of bituminous coal production in Pennsylvania. It shows the output of that state to have been 36,174,089 short tons in 1889, nearly double that reported at the tenth census. The total value of the output is given at $27,953,215, or an average of 77.2 cents per short ton at the mines, against $18,567,129 in 1880, or an average of 100.8 cents per ton at the mines. The average number of persons employed in 1889 was 53,780, against 33,248 for 1880, the amount paid for wages in 1889 being $21,142,051, against $10,863,583 for 1880.

THE four-masted ship Shenandoah, the finest and largest sailing vessel that ever flew the stars and stripes, reached San Francisco May 25 after a voyage of 126 days from New York. Her fastest run was thirteen knots an hour for twenty-four hours. There is only one larger sailing ship afloat, the French five-masted steel ship France. Faster time than the Shenandoah has been made often between New York and San Francisco, but by much smaller ships. Her length is 299.7 feet, her breadth 49.1 feet and her depth 28.8 feet, and she spreads 11,000 yards of canvas. Her net tonnage is 3,258.47 tons.

LATER.

Killed by Lightning.

ST. LOUIS, June 16.—During a storm to-day an outhouse in which twenty-five picknickers sought protection was struck by lightning. Nearly all of the occupants of the outhouse were more or less injured, one being killed and three very seriously hurt. Following is a list of casualties:

Miss Sadie McArthur, aged twelve years, dead; Mrs. Lizzie Golden, badly injured. Miss Kate Bender, burned and otherwise seriously hurt; Miss Laura Beauclerc, seriously injured.

All the injured were taken home and medical assistance summoned. None of them are fatally injured.

Summer Resort Burned.

NEW YORK, June 16.—The well known summer resort of Seabright, N. J., was visited by a disastrous fire to-night which reduced to ashes the larger portion of the town.

As far as can be estimated about forty buildings were burned, but whether there was any loss of life cannot be stated as yet. Several hundred families have been rendered homeless. The total loss will be at least $500,000.

SEVERE electrical storms were reported throughout the east on the 16th. At Alliance, Ohio, Al Barnhart, while ploughing, was struck by lightning and killed. In Butler county, Pa., a boy named Robert received an electric bolt and was killed. Near Emlenton, Pa., young Clarence Ashbaugh was struck and killed and several wells throughout the oil country were struck and burned.

OSSEO, Wis., had a $50,000 fire on the 16th.

TO PROTECT THE SEALS.

The United States and England Sign an Agreement to Close the Behring Sea Pending a Settlement of the Differences Between Them—Both Governments to Unite in the Punishment of Poachers.

WASHINGTON, June 16.—Behring sea is now a closed sea to seal poachers. President Harrison's proclamation issued Monday is official notification to all the world that the United States and English governments will act together. As some of the seal poachers sail under German colors the importance of warning off everybody is plain. The modus vivendi leads up to arbitration. Coincident with the president's proclamation instructions go from the navy and the treasury departments. The president sent letters to Secretary Tracy and Secretary Foster calling their attention to the adoption of the modus vivendi and directing them to cooperate with the British government in policing the sea. The navy will be represented by the warships Mohican and Alert, which are now at San Francisco, and the treasury department by the revenue cutters Bear, Corwin and Rush. This fleet will rendezvous at San Point, where the British vessels will also rendezvous.

By the agreement both governments, with a view to promote the friendly settlement of the questions pending relative to the respective rights of each in the Behring sea, and for the preservation of the seal species, will prohibit until May next killing of seals in that part of the sea lying eastward of the line of demarkation described in article No. 1 of the treaty of 1867 between the United States and Russia, and the United States further agrees to prohibit the killing of seals on the shores and islands of Behring sea, the property of this government, in excess of 7,500 to be taken on the islands for the subsistence of the natives. Both governments are to use their best and most prompt efforts to insure the observance of this prohibition by their subjects. Every vessel or person offending against this prohibition in the said waters of Behring sea outside of the ordinary territorial limits of the United States may be seized and detained by the naval or other duly commissioned officers of either of the high contracting parties, but they shall be handed over as soon as practicable to the authorities of the nation to which they respectively belong, who shall alone have jurisdiction to try the offense and impose the penalties for the same.

The agreement was signed Monday morning by Sir Julian Pauncefote and Mr. Wharton, and the presidential proclamation followed as quickly as it could be prepared.

It will be noticed that the agreement authorizes the United States vessels to seize offending British vessels, which, however, are to be turned over to the British authorities for trial, and this feature of the agreement is expected to prove of great value in the pressing emergency that has held to exist of clearing out the law-breaking vessels before irreparable damage will be done to the seal fisheries.

The correspondence between the United States government and that of Great Britain, covering the Behring sea negotiations since that already published, is made public. It is very voluminous. A synopsis is as follows:

It begins with a proposal by the British minister for a modus vivendi, in which Great Britain and the United States shall jointly agree to suspend the taking of seals in Behring sea until May next, except the 7,500 seals which the United States had insisted should be taken by the company having the lease. It also provides that the British government may send consuls to visit the sealing islands, and closes by a requirement that unless Russia shall agree to the convention it shall not go into operation. This was sent June 3, being thirty days after Mr. Blaine's definite proposition of May 4, already published.

To this the acting secretary of state replies that the president suggests that the agreement should only apply to the portion of Behring sea lying west of the line agreed upon by the agreement between the United States and Great Britain. He declines, however, to consent to the appointment of consols by Great Britain at the sealing islands, but says in the event of an agreement with reference to arbitration the United States government will extend reasonable facilities to the government of Great Britain for an investigation of the islands into any ports involved in the controversy. He also objects to the clause by which Russia is to be made a party to the agreement. He closes with the request for a prompt response.

To this Lord Salisbury replies insisting that the agreement should cover all the Behring sea and that the agreement as to arbitration should be made simultaneous with the modus vivendi.

The acting secretary of state replies that this government can not consent to the delay which would be necessary to agree upon the details of arbitration, as the modus vivendi should go into operation at once, but that it in expectation that an agreement for arbitration will be reached, the United States government will permit the British government to send suitable persons to the sealing islands this season.

To this Lord Salisbury replies on June 8, with a new form of modus vivendi, which closes with a plan for the appointment of a commission to examine and report on what international arrangements are necessary between the United States, Great Britain and Russia for the preservation of the fur seals, and that the United States and Great Britain shall request Russia to forbid her subjects taking seals east of the line indicated in the plan outlined above. The state department replies regretting that new propositions are now brought in and insisting upon a speedy termination of the negotiations.

The British minister replies on June 13 that while there is great reluctance on the part of Great Britain to yield the points it has named, it will consent to do so if the United States will consent to the appointment of a commission to consider the protection of the seal species.

The secretary of state represents that the United States government will agree to the appointment of such a committee simultaneously with the appointment of a committee of arbitration.

WILL SUE UNCLE SAM.

Depositors of a Wrecked Philadelphia Bank Will Hold the Government Responsible.

PHILADELPHIA, June 16.—At a meeting of the association of depositors of the wrecked Spring Garden national bank Monday night the following was adopted:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this meeting that some arrangement be made whereby suit may be brought against the United States government to recover our lost money, as the government is mainly responsible for our loss through the incapacity of its sworn officials."

Action will probably be taken by the executive committee of the association.

Iowa Coal Mines Failing.

FORT DODGE, Ia., June 16.—Northern Iowa coal mines are playing out. The mines at Carbon Junction, Holiday Creek, Colville and Kalo have already been practically abandoned, and the prosperous villages that surrounded them are deserted. Prices during the coming season will be higher than for years.

Siberian Convicts Drowned.

ST. PETERSBURG, June 16.—A barge conveying 500 convicts to Siberia sunk in the Volga at Nijaul-Novgorod Sunday and many of the convicts were drowned.

SEES HIS ERROR.

The Prince of Wales Informs the House of Commons That He Is Sorry for Not Reporting Cumming.

LONDON, June 16.—Hon. Edward Stanhope, secretary of state for war, replying in the house of commons to a question put by Mr. William Summers (Gladstone liberal) in regard to the baccarat scandal, said that Sir William Gordon-Cumming was the chief person who had broken faith, because he did not report the case to his commanding officer. If an offense was committed by any other person it could only have consisted in advising and pressing him to take a different course than laid down by the army regulations. Of the three officers concerned, Gen. Owen Williams was a retired officer of the army, and was, therefore, not subject to the regulations, but the other two—Field Marshal, the prince of Wales and Lieut. Berkeley Levett—undoubtedly were.

With this preliminary statement the secretary of state for war, amid profound silence and followed by the close and anxious attention of the house and the people in the gallery, speaking with the utmost deliberation, said:

"The army regulations in question had undoubtedly never been specially brought to the notice of the prince of Wales, but when they had been, and looking back at all the circumstances of the case, the prince of Wales saw his error of judgment in not requiring Sir William Gordon Cumming to make an immediate report to his commanding officer. In his view I concur, but I should like to express my personal opinion that had anyone else suddenly heard that a friend who had greatly distinguished himself in the service had been accused of such an offense he would certainly hesitate before at once adopting a course that would bring an immediate and irretrievable blight on his whole future."

Lieut. Berkeley Levett, on the other hand, continued Mr. Stanhope, had written a letter to his commanding officer expressing deep regret that he had not acted in accordance with the army regulations. Consequently, said the secretary of war, in conclusion, it was not proposed to take any further action in the matter.

When Mr. Stanhope had finished his authorized statement on behalf of the prince there was a generous outburst of applause, but when in his concluding remarks he declared the matter dropped by the government cheers came only from tory benches.

SIX SCORE PERISHED.

More News of the Awful Railway Wreck in Switzerland—The Number of Dead Placed at 120.

BASLE, June 16.—The state of terrible excitement into which the inhabitants of this city were plunged Sunday by the Moenchenstein railroad disaster continues. People are still flocking to the scene, the majority on foot, others in all kinds of vehicles, until it may be almost said that every man and woman of Basle and its neighborhood have visited the broken bridge. The total number of people who lost their lives is placed at 120, with hundreds more or less injured. The victims are mostly leading citizens of Basle and its neighborhood.

Two engines and three carriages loaded with excursionists fell into the stream which flowed beneath the iron bridge which gave way and caused the disaster.

Shortly after the first horror of the crashing of the engines and cars through the bridge and into the swiftly running stream had died away the survivors of the accident saw scenes which must have rivaled in horror the most heartrending features of the Johnstown disaster in the United States. Beneath the bridge, or what remained of it, was a hideous mass of broken car wood, car wheels, engines, railroad car upholstery, seats, mats, axles, broken glass and twisted tin work, intermixed with still quivering heads bespattered with blood and brains, protruding arms and legs, bloody garments of all descriptions, hats and bonnets, umbrellas and parasols, hands and feet, while floating down the stream were numbers of dead bodies and struggling men, women and children, a few now and then uttering cries of terror or emitting gurgling, moaning gasps peculiar to the drowning.

"FRITZ" IS DEAD.

Joseph K. Emmett, the Famous Comedian, Succumbs to a Sudden Attack of Pneumonia.

CORNWALL-ON-THE-HUDSON, June 16.—"Fritz" Emmett, the well-known comedian, died here at 11:15 o'clock a. m. Monday of pneumonia.

[Joseph K. Emmett, commonly called "Our Fritz," had been for about twenty years the most popular comedian of his kind in the country. He was born at St. Louis on March 13, 1841. When he was a child he showed ability as a scene painter, and at the age of eighteen was covering the fences of St. Louis with show pictures. At twenty he sang and played the bones in Morris and Wilson's minstrel troupe in St. Louis. He made his debut in New York at Bryant's opera house, in the Tammany hall building, shortly after that building was completed. He sang German songs with a black face, which proved a successful novelty. An engagement followed at the Theater Comique. Here he sang for the first time "The Deutcher Girl that Winked at Me." He returned to St. Louis and accepted an offer from Manager DeBar to fill an engagement as a Dutch comedian. Through DeBar he met Charles Gaylor, who afterward wrote "Fritz." They entered into an agreement to last five years that Gaylor should manage Emmett and write three suitable plays and that the profits should be divided equally. Gaylor wrote "Fritz," which proved a tremendous success and with which Emmett has been identified ever since. He made his first appearance in it at Buffalo in 1862. Gaylor wrote a second play called "Carl the Fiddler," with which Emmett had fairly good fortune, but he soon returned to "Fritz." His drinking habits which have been a matter of common knowledge for some years past, are said to have been partly excused by unhappy domestic relations.]

FOUR WERE DROWNED.

A Party of Pleasure Seekers Thrown Into the River at Rockford, Ia.

MASON CITY, Ia., June 16.—A terrible accident occurred at Rockford Sunday night. A party of four—Miss Jessie Rollin, Miss Anna Kochler, C. H. Anderson and A. D. Cooley, the two latter residents of Cedar Rapids—were out boat riding on the Shell Rock river. In some manner the rowboat capsized and all were thrown into the river. Their cries for help were heard, but before they could be reached they were all drowned. The river was dragged and all the bodies were secured.

Dropped Dead in the Pulpit.

LANCASTER, Pa., June 16.—Rev. Ephriam Roher, a minister of the old Mennonite church, near Mountville, dropped dead while preaching Sunday afternoon. There was the greatest excitement for some time. Apoplexy is supposed to have been the cause of death. Deceased was over 70 years of age.

Brained by a Rival.

At Aurora there had been considerable quarrelling between John Hanson and a rival Swede over a woman. They had several fights recently, and when they met the other day they became desperate. Hanson's rival snatched up a hatchet that was lying near a new house and delivered him a powerful blow with the blade, cutting a deep gash through the skull and severing the left ear. The unfortunate man sank to the earth and soon died.

Died in a Saloon.

William Rogers, laborer, who arrived in Duluth four or five weeks ago from Pennsylvania, where he left a wife and three children, died suddenly in J. Butchart's saloon the other day. Rogers was found lying on the floor in the card room. Five or six persons sat down to play cards, but presuming the man on the floor was sleeping no notice was paid to him. It was not until an attempt was made to wake him up that Rogers was found to be dead.

An International Issue.

Land speculators and explorers have selected valuable mineral and iron claims on Hunter's island with a view of homesteading them and raising an issue between Great Britain and the United States as to the boundry line between Canada and Minnesota. The island has been claimed heretofore by Canada. It is one of the richest blocks of land in North America in the matter of timber and mineral resources.

Cowardly Murder by an Officer.

During the progress of a dance in Winona Police Officer Vincent Kukowski was found by two men from the dance with a woman near the hall. On discovering the officer and his female companion the two men beat a hasty retreat, whereupon the officer drew his revolver and shot one of them, Julius Demmer, inflicting a fatal wound. The officer and his companion were locked up.

The Green-Eyed Monster.

In St. Paul Mrs. Kate Cresson, wife of George L. Cresson, assistant engineer of the Omaha road, charged Miss Margaret R. Gibson with trying to steal her husband and fired several shots at her in a public building. Miss Gibson dodged behind a pillar without being hit, and Mrs. Cresson swooned and was taken to her home.

A Minneapolis Man Killed.

George H. Pumphrey was accidentally killed in Seattle, Wyo., by a street car. He was agent for the Pacific coast for the Minneapolis Office & School Furniture Company, and prior to February lived in Minneapolis with his family. Pumphrey was 50 years old and a stockholder in the company.

Scourged to their Graves.

So subtle and tenacious is the poison of malaria, that many persons afflicted with it never, through life, get rid of the venom in their systems. Such people are not to be found among those who use Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which completely eradicates it. Most benign of anti-malarial specifics, it is also a sovereign remedy for biliousness, kidney troubles, costiveness and dyspepsia.

The hand of time deals lightly with a woman in perfect health. But all functional derangements and disorders peculiar to women leave their mark. You needn't have them. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription comes to your rescue as no other medicine can. It cures them. For periodical pains, prolapsus and other displacements, bearing-down sensations, and all "female complaints" and weaknesses, it is a positive remedy. It is a powerful, restorative tonic and nervine, imparting strength to the whole system in general, and to the uterine organs and appendages in particular. It keeps years from your face and figure—but adds years to your life. It's guaranteed to give satisfaction in every case. If it doesn't, your money is returned.

"German Syrup"

A Farmer at Edom, Texas, Says: "We are six in family. We live in a place where we are subject to violent Colds and Lung Troubles. I have used German Syrup for six years successfully for Sore Throat, Cough, Cold, Hoarseness, Pains in the Chest and Lungs, and spitting-up of Blood. I have tried many different kinds of cough Syrups in my time, but let me say to anyone wanting such a medicine—German Syrup is the best. That has been my experience. If you use it once, you will go back to it whenever you need it. It gives total relief and is a quick cure. My advice to everyone suffering with Lung Troubles is—Try it. You will soon be convinced. In all the families where your German Syrup is used we have no trouble with the Lungs at all. It is the medicine for this country. John Franklin Jones.

TWO JOURNEYS.

D'er this same road, this self-same trip
They made three years or so ago.
How time does fly and hurry by!
That was their wedding trip, you know.
And then it was the worst of fears
That made their joy not quite secure,
That some might guess from mien or dress
That they were on their wedding tour.

She treated him with cold disdain;
He bullied her in brutal way:
She read three novels on the trip,
He also read and smoked all day.
They quarreled mildly, snubbed and sneered,
And by these methods they made sure
That none would for a moment think
That they were on their wedding tour.

But now they take the trip again,
Like turtle doves they're side by side,
And try for fun to make folk think
That they're a new-made groom and bride.
They cuddle close, they bill and coo,
He holds her hand in steadfast grip;
They think a royal jest is this
Imaginary wedding trip.

MR. BOWSER.

The Family Medicine Chest One of His Many Hobbies.

Another Eccentricity Which Gets Him Into Trouble—He Again Proposes to See a Lawyer and Be Guided by His Advice.

ONE of Mr. Bowser's hobbies is the family medicine chest, and the quack who wants to get his money has only to go to him with a spring tonic, a winter porous plaster, a fall liver pad or an every-day cure for rheumatism. There are at this moment in a closet set apart in the Bowser mansion for that purpose more sure cures for coughs, colds, influenza, hay fever, catarrh, toothache, rheumatism, consumption, torpid liver, neuralgia, flatulency, general decline, yellow fever, smallpox, cholera morbus and pneumonia than any New York hospital could use in a month.

Mrs. Bowser hasn't seen all this stuff come into the house without a protest, but protests have not been of the least avail. At the first word of reproach Mr. Bowser would turn on her with:

"Mrs. Bowser, how many doctors and drug stores are there in this country?"

"I don't know."

"Of course you don't. It isn't your business to know. I do know, however, and I'll tell you that there are over 2,000,000 doctors—one to about every thirty of our population. Just think of that! There are also nearly two million drug stores, each one supported by about forty such people as you are."

"Well?" she asked.

"Well, it must follow that there is mighty little sense among average people to run to a doctor every time anything gets out of kilter. Think of the money thrown away!"

"But nothing ever ails any of us but a headache," she protested.

"No; of course not. But why not? Simply because I'm a prudent and far-seeing man. I lock the stable before the horse is stolen. In other words, during the five years we have been married I have saved us from at least fifty fits of sickness, each one of which would have cost at least fifty dollars in cash."

"Well, have you been getting anything to-day?" she asked. "If so, you might as well throw it out of the window, for we don't need it."

"Don't need it, Mrs. Bowser—don't need it!" he echoed, as he stood up and waved a paper package aloft. "But we do need it, all of us need it, need it bad. Do you know what season of the year this is?"

"Of course, it's spring."

"Well, what takes place in the spring?"

"Various things."

"Yes, and one of them is a sort of collapse of the physical system. We lose flesh. We are spleeny. We are bilious and subject to chills. We are in just that state to invite a fever to seize upon us, and in nine cases out of ten it would be fatal. Is it prudence to tone up the system, or to have a funeral in the house?"

MR. BOWSER MAKES THE TONIC.

"What have you got there?" she asked, avoiding a direct answer to his question.

"Roots, Mrs. Bowser, roots! Nature furnished man all the medicines needed when it caused roots to grow in the same soil he treads. Here is burdock, sassafras, sarsaparilla, sweetbud, blackberry and two or three other kinds, each a specific in itself, all combined, a sure panacea for nearly all the ills human flesh is heir to."

"And you are going to eat them—all of us must eat them?" she anxiously asked.

"Wait and see," he replied, with a pomposity that quite settled her, and in due time she saw.

After supper Mr. Bowser took possession of the kitchen to make his root tonic. He put all the roots in the teakettle, started up a good fire, and at intervals of every five minutes he walked out to cool his face and to say to Mrs. Bowser:

"Doctors! Drug stores! Faugh! In a week from now you won't know yourself!"

After a couple of hours Mr. Bowser poured off two quarts of dark liquid which gave out an odor similar to that of a ripe cucumber flung against the smokehouse door in August. Being alone in the kitchen at the time, he of course took down the roller towel to strain it through. He then added to the liquid half a pint of whisky, an ounce of cloves, one nutmeg and half a pound of sugar, and put the whole in an old fruit jar.

"There—that's off my mind!" he said, as he returned to the sitting-room. "The dose, Mrs. Bowser, will be one tablespoonful three times a day for you and half that for the baby."

"If we need it."

"If you need it! Do you suppose I'd go to all this trouble if we didn't need it? I saw the signs of collapse in your eyes ten days ago, and I may not be in time to save our child. The ignorance and obstinacy of some women is amazing!"

She was interested in a book and did not care to pursue the argument further, and nothing more was said about the tonic until bedtime. Then he went to the pantry and took a pretty hearty pull at it, and as he came out wiping off his chin he said:

"You can begin to-morrow morning, Lands! but that is a tonic! I really feel a year younger for that one dose."

"Then you won't need to buy any other kind."

"Probably not, but I am the best judge of that. If you want to collapse like an old washtub after six weeks of dry weather that's your lookout, but I propose to live as long as possible and to have the company of our child."

She had her revenge sooner than could be looked for. Mr. Bowser had snored about ten times when his toes began to crack. And a minute later he was clawing around with his legs, and when Mrs. Bowser gave him a nudge to arouse him from a supposed nightmare he sat up in bed and exclaimed:

"Lands! but how queer I feel! I'm numb all over! Mrs. Bowser, are you awake?"

"Yes."

"Well, I'm afraid I'm going to be awfully sick."

"Nonsense! That root tonic fixed you all right."

"I know it, but I'm getting an awful pain! Say! I've eaten or drank something to poison me!"

"It's that decoction, Mr. Bowser."

"You don't think so!"

"I'm sure of it."

"Then I'd better send for a doctor at once!"

"Do nothing of the kind. It will only make expense for nothing. You have four hundred and thirty-two different bottles and boxes of remedies in the closet. Go down and take a specific for spring tonic poison."

"NONSENSE! THAT ROOT TONIC FIXED YOU ALL RIGHT."

He half fell out of bed, lighted the nightlamp, and he was almost bent double as he made his way downstairs. Mrs. Bowser followed him half way, knowing what was coming. She heard him clattering the bottles around for two or three minutes, and then, seeming to hold one in either hand, he muttered:

"Is this which, or is that which, or which in thunder is which? It's the first time I ever needed any medicine in the night, and now I can't tell a cure for hydrophobia from a remedy for fits! Mrs. Bowser!"

"Well?"

"Come down here. I'm dying! Look this infernal old drug shop over and find me something to cure these colicky pains!"

"All I want is the mustard from the pantry," she said, and in half an hour she had him in bed and asleep again. Next morning he was as blithe as if nothing had occurred, but just before breakfast, when she asked him if he'd forgotten his spring tonic, he turned on her with:

"Mrs. Bowser, conscience should have prevented you from ever mentioning those words again!"

"How?"

"How! Am I blind? Can't I put three and two together and make five?"

"Explain yourself. Your language is ambiguous!"

"I understand all about the ambiguous business! You were determined not to take that tonic! You also made up your mind that if I took it it would be the worse for me. Any jury in this land would convict you on the evidence!"

"What evidence?"

"Never you mind! Let your conscience answer for you. I may feel it my duty later on in the day to see a lawyer—see a lawyer, Mrs. Bowser—and if so I shall, of course, be guided by what he says!"—M. Quad, in N. Y. World.

THE TRAGEDIES OF LIFE.

They Are Being Constantly Enacted All Around Us.

The real tragedies of life are often to be found where we should perhaps least expect them. They are going on before us in the lives of many a wife and mother in our American cities to-day, who, between her duties to her husband, her children, her church, and the calls of society, which she often must not slight because of her husband's position, present or aspired to, is being killed before our eyes, tortured at the same time by the incompetent domestic service which makes housekeeping and the creation of a comfortable home almost an impossibility. One such woman I saw die in New York only a few years ago at thirty-nine, literally killed by the brave effort to do all her duty; and they are "dying thus around us every day," with brave smiles on their faces. You may see them by hundreds in the streets and at afternoon receptions in any American city if you have been initiated into the band, and know the passwords and the grip. If you do not, you will think that they are brilliant and beautiful women, and involuntarily bow the head before them for their goodness and their womanliness, but you will not know that you are rendering homage to martyrs as truly as if you saw them led into the Coliseum as plaything for a Numidian lion, and just as truly on account of their religion.—Anna C. Brackett, in Harper's Magazine.

PITH AND POINT.

—"Is he a good sculptor?" "Yes, he's a bust-er."—Boston Gazette.

—"One thing I like about our new man," said a member of the firm to his partner, "is that he's reliable. You can always tell what he is going to do next." And what is that?" "Nothing."—Washington Post.

—Wool—"Old Scroggs seems to want to get all he can for his money." Van Pelt—"Doesn't he? Why, that man wouldn't take an ounce of prevention if he could get a pound of cure at the same price.—N. Y. Herald.

—Embracing a Privilege.—"You certainly told me to embrace my privilege." "Well, but I didn't tell you to embrace my daughter." "No, but to embrace your daughter is a privilege."—Harvard Lampoon.

—Of Two Evils.—Nobbsie the office boy.—"There's a man downstairs says he's goin' to kill yer, and a beautiful young lady as wants to go on der stage." Manager—"Well, show the man up."—Brooklyn Life.

—Mamma—"Dolly, remember, you have promised not to flirt with a single married man this summer." Dolly (under her breath)—"Thank fortune! That lets me flirt with the married married men."—Chicago Globe.

—Her Gentle Voice.—Brown—"No doubt you often think of your late wife, Mr. Graymare?" Graymare (a widower)—"Oh, yes, I woke up suddenly last night and felt sure I heard her voice, but it turned out to be thunder! —Saturday Evening Herald.

—Putting in His Time.—First Reporter—"Had any assignment to-day?" Second Reporter—"Yes, I had a funeral two hours long." First Reporter—"Two hours! I should think it would have worn you out." Second Reporter—"Oh, I didn't mind it; I wrote up my joke column."—Boston Courier.

—An Eloquent Silence. — Dressmaker—Did your husband, madam, receive my little bill for your dresses?" Mrs. Bingo—"Yes, I believe so." Dressmake (anxiously)—"And what does he say?" Mrs. Bingo—"I don't know. He hasn't spoken to me since he received it."—Dry Good's Bulletin.

—Jack Hardup—"Oh, Miss Ploutot, may I hope at all?" Miss Ploutot—"No, Mr. Hardup, this must go no further, but I will be a sister to you." Jack Hardup—"Well, then, Miss Ploutot, just remind the old gentleman that I'm his son; I'm afraid he might forget me in his will."—Yale Record.

—No Grief in His.—"I am truly, sorry, Johnny," said the friend of the family, meeting his little boy on the street, "to learn that your father's house was burned down yesterday. Was nothing saved?" "Don't you waste no grief on me," replied Johnny. "All of paw's old clothes were burned up in that fire, and maw can't make any of 'em over for me this time. I'm all right."

—Mrs. Desporte (looking up from her newspaper).—"I really think they will finally do away with prize-fighting altogether." Mr. D.—"What makes you think so, my dear?" Mrs. D.—"Well, I think the movement is in the direction of reform. I just read of a fight where they discarded those cruel, ugly, clumsy big gloves, and fought with kid gloves."—Harvard Lampoon.

HE GOT THE JOB.

A Student of Human Nature Who Welted Carpets for a Living.

"Do you wish me to beat any carpets, lady?" he asked of the woman who came to the door. "I'll guarantee to do it thoroughly and at a moderate price. A better day—"

"No, I don't," snapped the woman, already out of patience by the visit of two peddlers and a tramp, and she stepped back to shut the door.

"I half expected you didn't," said the unruffled carpet-beater. "I might have believed what the woman across the street told me."

"What did that lying Mrs. Higgins tell you?" queried the woman sharply, opening the door which she had half shut.

"She said it was no use for me to call here; that you didn't have anything but an old rag of a carpet that would fall to pieces if any one tried to beat it."

"She did, did she? The impudent hussey!" said the woman, almost too angry to speak. "Come right in, my man, and take up my heavy brussels. Take it out in the front yard and beat it as hard as you know how, until I tell you to stop. I'll pay you double price and give you your dinner besides." And, to herself, she said: "I'll let the hatefull thing see whether it's an old rag or not."

And the diplomatic carpet beater called to his assistant out on the sidewalk, and remarked to him when they had taken the carpet out where Mrs. Higgins could see it that it was a cold day when he couldn't get a carpet to beat.—Boston Herald.

CLEANED OUT THE THIEVES.

A Farmer Gets On His Muscle at the Union Depot.

"I'm a purty old bird; but begosh I've got a heap o' sand in me yet."

The speaker was a huge, red-faced farmer, who came down the union depot stairs the other morning with his coat-sleeves rolled up and his breath coming in gasps.

"What is the matter?" inquired one of the bystanders.

"Oh! nuthin' much, I guess. Only I opine that there are sum fellers not a mile away who won't be so peart agin."

"What happened?" asked another, as the Goliah-like farmer ceased speaking.

"Well, I ain't ust ter these late breakfasts, so I 'us hungry when I kem inter this ere village, en' I went acroost ther road ter get sumpthin' ter eat. I hung me coat up while I washed me face, en' one o' them no-account fellers borried me purse. I didn't know 'twas gone 'til I'd finished eaten' and was goin' ter pay me bill, and than I ast for it. They told me they didn't know nuthin about it, an' I got mad.

"'Gimme that purse, ye danged thief!' sez I.

"'Shet up!' sez he; 'I ain't got yer measly purse.'

"En' then they tried ter put me out, but I'm a pretty fly bird, en' when I got thru' with them fellers the floor was pretty clean. An' I got my purse. —Chicago News.

Very Long.

"I tell you, Dauber, art is long."

"You've found that out, eh?"

"Yes; I went to see a panorama this morning."—Puck.

Honor Enough.

Relative—And so you have graduated? Did you take any of the prizes?

Fair Student—N-o, but I got the biggest bouquet.—Good News.

DOMESTIC CONCERNS.

—German Pudding.—Two cups milk, four tablespoonfuls butter, five eggs, three-quarters cup flour, three-quarters cup sugar. Beat all together, bake in custard cups, and serve with rice sauce. —Detroit Free Press.

—To rid your plants of tiny green insects, sprinkle profusely with tobacco water, or burn tobacco under them. The small pests will fall off by the dozens, and should be immediately swept up and burned.—Drake's Magazine.

—For oatmeal biscuits take half a pound of medium oatmeal, quarter of a pound of flour; mix with two ounces of butter and half a gill of milk made hot in a saucepan. Roll out quickly and bake in very thin cakes.—N. Y. World.

—Rye Batter Cakes.—One pint of rye meal; to this add enough luke-warm milk to make a thin batter, a little salt just to taste. Beat it well; add a gill home-made yeast. When they are light, bake them on a griddle as buckwheat cakes.—Boston Budget.

—Soda Cream.—Two ounces of tartaric acid, two pounds of sugar, one quart of water, whites of four eggs, one-half ounce of flavoring; mix all thoroughly. Take three or four tablespoons of this sirup, put in goblet, fill nearly full with water and add a little soda.

—A good tea cake that a dyspeptic can eat without injury if cold.—One cup of sugar, one egg, a half cupful of sour cream, the same of sweet milk, a small teaspoonful of soda, a little salt and nutmeg. Bake an hour before tea time, so that the cake may have time to cool.

—Broiled Smoke Herrings: Many prefer the large herrings called bloaters, though the small English red herring are more commonly sold. Broil them a few minutes over a quick fire. Remove them from the fire, and take off the skins and serve immediately.—Ladies' Home Journal.

—Raw Meat Soup: Take a good beef broth, boil in it some pearl sago; when done, add the yellow of an egg mixed with a tablespoonful of tepid broth and a little grated cheese. At the very last, when already in the tureen, add, whilst stirring carefully, some raw beef free of all fat and sinew which previously has been chopped very fine.—N. Y.

—A floor pillow that is not too good to be used on the piazza or hall floor and is easily and inexpensively made, is of blue denim, ample in size, and simply but effectively embroidered with the finest quality of manilla rope, couched down with fine stitches, which are taken through, not over the rope. The effect may be heightened by touching the rope with bits of gilding here and there.—N. Y. Ledger.

—Floating island is easily prepared. Beat the white of four eggs till stiff and scald without mixing in one quart of milk. Remove with a skimmer from the milk to the platter, then stir into the milk the yelks of four eggs, beaten with four tablespoonfuls of white sugar, thicken with a little flour stirred first in a teacupful of cold milk. Flavor the custard to taste, pour it into a glass or china dish, and place the whites on top. If desired, bits of currant jelly may be laid on at intervals.—N. Y. World.

—Veal sausages, as a substitute for those made of pork, may be made as follows: Take a pint of minced veal left from a roast, or raw meat chopped fine; add a large tablespoonful of butter, a half teaspoonful of salt, a very scant teaspoonful of sage, and half a teaspoonful of summer savory. Bind the sausage meat into little round balls with the white of an egg. Add a tablespoonful of water to the yolk of an egg and dip each ball into it and fry them till very thoroughly browned in butter in an iron spider.

FASHIONS IN JEWELRY.

The Latest Notions in Rings, Chatelaine and Bracelets.

The fleur-de-lis is a graceful and favorite design in brooches and chatelaines.

Ball-shaped watches suspended from a chatelaine chain are liked by many.

Among the costly ornaments, rank diamond chatelaines and pendant watches.

The tendency at present is to display as much jewelry as possible on all occasions.

Pierced work is fashionable now in silver tableware, especially in bowls and odd dishes.

Umbrellas and parasols designed to carry with mourning costumes, have ebonized or onyx handles.

A unique bacelet is the one of woven chain showing strands of silver, different golds and platinum.

Coalport china cups and saucers find many admirers, especially when these rest in a framework of silver.

No two watches are alike, and an odd one seen had a chocolate-colored dial with the hands and numerals in blue.

A bride's jewel-case is not complete when it does not include a diamond bracelet, ear-rings, finger-ring and brooch.

The newest flower vases, both in silver and glass, take the form of a champagne glass, a thistle or a water lily.

It is the correct thing now to add a souvenir spoon to the conventional christening present of pap-bowl and mug.

An entirely new style in ice cream dishes is one of a long, narrow, flat shape, with gilt center and richly-chased border.

Stocking suspenders of gay-colored silk elastic ribbon, with silver trimmings, rival in popularity the silver-clasped garters.

The new chatelaine watch chains are made in two styles, with pins and hooks. Some women prefer one and some the other.

To meet the demand for many gems in the way of finger rings, is a ring bearing two diamond clusters. These are placed on the over-lapping ends of the shank, and present the effect of two cluster rings when on the finger.—Jeweler's Circular.

—If you do learn your speech by heart, do not embellish it with unnecessary apostrophes, like a member of the French Chamber who, in the midst of the most profound silence, said: "In vain does your clamor try to stifle my voice; your rude howls do not intimidate me;" or, like Quintilian's orator pleading against Cassius Severus, who suddenly, stopping short, cried out to his opponent: "Why do you fix on me that angry scowl?" "I," said Cassius, surprised, "I was not even thinking of you, but since you have it written so, I am ready to oblige," at the same time making a hideous grimace which threw the audience into fits of laughter.—Lord Dufferin's Rectorial address.

IN THE GRIP OF A PLASTER.

"Old Si's" Rheumatic Remedy Had Double Back Action Results.

"Old Si," whom all the habitues of Park row have known for years, hobbled down to work the other night in a state of physical pain. Rheumatism, his old foe, had settled in his feet, made walking a misery and life a bore. While he was putting on the largest and most comfortable pair of shoes in the place a customer's attention was attracted by his groans.

"What's the matter, Si?" he inquired, sympathetically.

"Rheumatism," growled Si, as he crowded a badly swelled foot into a roomy brogan.

"Try borax and garlic, old man; it's the best remedy in the world. I've tried it many a time and never failed to get relief sooner or later—generally sooner."

Si said he would try it, but the next man who came into the store told him that there was nothing so efficacious for inflammatory rheumatism as porous plasters when applied to the affected part. Borax and garlic he ridiculed as a barbaric remedy.

"Borax," he declared, will shrivel your feet up so much that you will not be able to recognize them, and as for garlic, why the least said about that the better."

Si was suffering and was anxious to try anything and everything that promised to lessen his agony. He decided on the spur of the moment to buy porous plasters, and he did so.

That night after reaching home he cut one up, shaped the pieces to his feet and placed them inside his shoes. The next morning he drew on his footwear and wore them down to his business in the evening. Trade was brisk, and Si was kept moving pretty lively in response to many calls at the counter and raps on the tables.

All night long he wore the shoes, as he was determined to give the plasters a good chance to get in their work. They got it. That night Si was compelled to go to bed with his shoes on, simply because he could not get them off. Shoes, stockings and feet had become as one, and they stuck closer than a brother.

When he arose in the morning the situation was unchanged and Si became desperate. The porous plasters was still there and so was his rheumatism. Neither had budged an inch. In despair he held a family consultation. The outcome was that Si was recommended to soak his feet in hot water until the plasters relaxed their grip. Into a tub of water Si plunged his feet and seated himself on a chair. For hours he waited for them to thaw, but the plasters held on with death-like tenacity. But at the close of the fourth hour they showed signs of yielding, and Si, ably aided by his family, began to tug at his shoes. Little by little they gained on the plasters until finally the shoes were torn off, but with them came large sections of cuticle from the soles of poor Si's feet. For many days afterward Si walked around much after the manner of a hen on a hot plate.

The man who suggested porous plasters has not yet lost his scalp, but Si intends to have it dangling at his belt before long.—N. Y. Herald

Important Trade Name Decision.

Judge Thayer, of the United States Circuit Court at St. Louis, has recently handed down an opinion, and granted a perpetual injunction against the defendants in the case of The Hostetter Company against the Bruggeman, Reinert Distilling Co., ALIAS "Gold Spring Distilling Co.," prohibiting the advertising, manufacturing or selling of any article of stomach bitters, either in bulk, by the gallon or otherwise, or in any way making use of the name "Hostetter" except in connection with the sale of the genuine bitters, which are always sold in bottles securely sealed; and also prohibiting the sale of any bitters in bulk, though the name "Hostetter" be not used, but the suggestion made to the purchaser that he can put them in the empty Hostetter bottles, and purchasers would not discover the difference. His decision supports The Hostetter Company in the exclusive use of the name "Hostetter" in connection with either the manufacture or sale of stomach bitters in any manner or form whatsoever, and firmly establishes its ownership in the name "Hostetter" as a "TRADE NAME."

GEO. W. BOLTON, Local Agent.

DELANO DIARY.

—A Phonograph, last week, and a circus to-day were among the late attractions in Delano.

—Peter Munson imbibed too freely broke a window in the Village jail, paid a fine and is wiser.

—The Buffalo GAZETTE has been made the official paper of the village, by vote of the village council.

—Quady vs. Liederbauch, for using words tending to provoke an assault, was dismissed by Justice Grafft, this week.

—Childrens Day will be observed at the M. E. Church next Sabbath evening by appropriate exercises. All are invited.

—One overcoat is said to be sufficient for two people now-a-days. For further information consult Jos. Van Eman Esq.

—Quite a number of strangers arrived th is morning to attend the camp-meeting at Sibels grove, during the coming week.

—R. M. Bohn has been having his shop fixed up outside and in, and now claims to have as fine a shop as any, out side of the cities.

—Jesse Brandon started Thursday evening for Twincite. He appears to do quite well competing with Jim Hill, for Delano trade. Perhaps he will put on more rolling stock soon. A passenger coach during the fine weather might do well.

—The school board don't appear to have the new furnace for the school house on hand yet. A good time for doing the work is during vacation. It should be in place and tested to be sure it is what it ought to be, before school commences in the fall.

—John Coolens new house is not intended for a hotel but simply as a family residence. It looks pretty big; but, then John's family is quite large, his friends numerous and himself no small man by any means, therefore the chances are that it will be none too commodius.

—On Saturday morning some of our early risers were surprised to find the Wright County Bank open and things inside in rather a demoralized condition; on closer inspection it was found that E. J. Swedeback was smoothing up the counters, and putting things in shape for a large expected fall trade by the bank.

—A State Sunday School Convention is to be held at Duluth, from 23d to 25th. Tickets for round trip, on sale at union depots, in St. Paul and Minneapolis on June 23d and 24th, only, for $5.00. This is the thirty-third annual convention of the Minnesota State Sabbath School Association.

—Loretto's genial young depot agent received quite a surprise on Tuesday when two big team loads of friends of his, from Delano arrived and proceeded to make things lively, and bestowed on him a bountiful repast of good things, themselves, being hungry from the long drive, of course, eating up a good share of the tempting viands, Henry is a good boy, one of Delanoes best, and deserves all this.

—On Wednesday, while in Minneapolis, ye editor met Mr. Campbell, attorney for G. N. R'y. Mr. Campbell said he expected to visit Delano, soon, to see about the crossings the village council have asked to have fixed. It it hoped he will look favorably on the matter. The Watertown street crossing under the bridge is not by any means a safe crossing for lively teams and the bridge should be made so as to allow more room between piers.

—Children's Day, June 14, was duly observed at the Presbyterian church, on Sabbath last, by an entertainment in the evening, given by the Sabbath school. The church was beautifully arranged for the occasion. Flowers profusely covered the organ, altar and stands for their reception, in the front of the church. Immediately behind the pulpit hung, in evergreen, the word "welcome," while to the left hung the words, also in evergreen "All for Christ." The choir consisting of Messrs. Hawker, father and son, Mr. and Mrs. Borrill, Sam Pape, Lillie Campbell with Mamie Van Eman as organist rendered good music. The responsive readings, led by Mrs. Shaw, showed careful training. The address by the pastor Rev. William Campbell, was appropriate and well received. A song by a class of young ladies was criticised, considerably, on account of its shortness, some said it was "short and sweet." A collection was taken for home missions. After a letter by by Rev. Waldron had been read stating that last year's contribution amounted to $35,000.00. The audience was large and appreciated the efforts of the school in getting up so good an entertainment.

DELANO, Minn, June 18, 1891.

EDITOR GAZETTE:—A party of twelve consisting of Mrs. Parslow and Shaw the Misses VanEman, Campbell, White, Parslow, Moody, Master Fay, Messrs. Hawker, Ed. and Geo. Sutton decided to take a days outing and surprise our former fellow townsman, H. C. Parslow who is agent and operator at Loretto, on the Soo Line. we arrived there before noon, in the best of humor and hungry, so the baskets of good things were brought forth, table placed in the neat waiting room of the depot, the party with the assistance of agent Parslow done ample justice to the meal. We were glad to note the orderly habits of the agent, floors swept, stoves blacked, papers &c. in place, even the broom hung up.

Though the day was warm each one seemed determined to get the most enjoyment and contentment possible, and we congratulated ourselves we made a success of it when we were taken for a Bridal party when the P. M. passenger train arrived, so passing cake was in order, a drizling rain set in but did not dampen our spirits, after it quit and was cool we bid farewell to our friend and started home ward where we arrived in due time.

How Wool Varies.

There is a great deal of difference in the climate for producing wool, whatever is said to the contrary. This is demonstrated beyond the shadow of a doubt. Some of the New England mills pay a slightly higher price for wools that come from the region that embraces southern Ohio, western Pennsylvania and a portion of Western Virginia, than any other part of the United States. There is a texture to it, a slightly different feel which the manufacturers alone seem to understand. There is a change in the wool if sheep are transported from those regions to other portions of the United States which are a little drier, whether it be directly due to the breed. One of the manufacturers of New England said he had been in the habit of buying wool of a certain farmer in southern Ohio. As the farmer's family grew up and swarmed, one of the sons went into Kansas and carried with him a portion or the flock of the old farm. The manufacturer bought wool of both father and son, and gave me a sample not merely from the same flock, but from the same individual sheep, taken two or three years apart, one when the sheep was an inhabitant of Ohio, and one when it was an inhabitant of a pretty dry portion of Kansas. They were colored in the same dye, the same mordant was used, the same vat, yet there was a big difference in the wools.

A gentleman of large experience in Virginia told me almost precisely the same history. He himself had attempted the growing of sheep with the purpose of getting wool just as good in one region as he had got in another, and failed. There is a considerable difference in the quality of wool as produced in different climates that is due to the climate itself, directly or indirectly, and the food that is produced in that climate. It may be brasher, there may be a certain harshness about it, and it may not manufacture quite so well. Now, while sheep are long continued to be bred in the poorer of these climates, they deteriorate, unless the blood is kept good by an infusion from the better regions. And that is what will give some regions perpetually an advantage in certain kinds of stockgrowing over others; it will always be to their profit to produce animals to go somewhere else, just exactly the same as farmers living in one region may grow seed grain to be used in another.—Prof. W. H. Brewer, in American Farm News.

THE first great duty of the journalist is to tell the truth—tell it in his editorials, tell it in his news columns, tell it at all times and under all circumstances, not in malice, or bitterness, or indiscretion, but in fairness and kindness, and as occasion may require. If a public official is recreant or unfit, tell it; if he is a member of your own party, still tell it and in a louder tone. If a candidate is a scoundrel, tell it; if of your own party, still tell it. If a public character is a humbug, tell it. If an entertainment or lecture was a fraud tell it. Always tell the truth; but be sure it is the truth. The editor who recklessly or indiscriminately assails men and things is both a coward and a criminal, He deserves the execration of every honest man. The newspaper which makes itself the sluice gate for libel, and sensationalism, and vice is the worst of all enemies of society. Human character is priceless, and he who tarnishes or stabs is viler than the thief or the assassin.—E. W. Stephens, in The National Journalist.

BOUNTY FOR SUGAR.

Only Two Manufacturers Registered in This State.

Collector of Internal Revenue Marcus Johnson has authority to appoint two inspectors of the sugar manufactured in this state. He stated yesterday that there is no prospect of a need for their appointment, as there have been only two applications made for registration, and they are manufacturers of maple sugar. The sugar they may manufacture will be inspected by one of the present force of deputy collectors, who may be detailed for the purpose when the time comes. Persons who manufacture 500 pounds or more of sugar will be entitled to a bounty of two cents a pound from the government. The application must be made at the collector's office before July 1 of this year by those who contemplate manufacturing next year.—St. Paul Globe.

"DE 'TOXICATED CHICKENS."

From The Ashland Leader.

Now, honey, jes lock at dese chickens.
Dey,s 'toxicated, no fear 'bout dat.
I gabe 'em some fermented grape juice,
And it laid 'em all powerful flat.
I knew dey was drunk by dere actions,
Staggering round like dat old man of mine,
When he sees de juice in de goblet,
And tarries to long at de wine.

Oh, dev'll be all right afore sunset,
And ready to roost on de fence.
But it's queer how de beer and de grape juice
Can take away most folk's sense.
And it 'pears if it 'fects chickens dat way.
I can't put de scum in dere pens,
For I can't have de whole roost demoralized,
By a pile of inebriate hens.

Now, honey, I'se made dis conclusion,
Dat I will be clare of de juice.
It makes my head swim like de ocean,
When all the high tides have swung loose,
So me and de chickens hereafter
Are temperance folks, W. C. T. U.'s,
And dat means we's bound to stand upright,
And have nothin' to do wid de juice.

ANN ARBOR, MICH.

GOV. BOIS of Iowa has been re-nominated for Governor of that State by the Democrats.

THE worst rain and wind storms ever known visited parts of Iowa, Tuesday night. Le Mars, Cherokee, Sioux City and other places were more or less damaged. Several lives were lost, Railroads torn up and washed away.

Murder at Montrose.

Little Annie Brunder found Dead in the Woods.

The little village of Montrose, on the line of the Great Northern Railroad about 40 miles west from Minneapolis, was thrown into a feverish state of excitment, on Saturday, last, by the announcement of the finding of the dead body of little Annie Brunder with her hands tied behind her with her handkerchief; her feet tied together with a part of her apron, while the remainder was tied around her mouth and nose and under her chin. Annie was 11 years of age last New Year's lived with her parents in Montrose and attended the parochial school, in Waverly. She left home, on Thursday morning as usual and, in the evening started home with her dinner pail and umbrella. Sometimes she remained overnight at Waverly so her not arriving at home was little thought of until Friday. On Saturday, a party started out to find her and after a short search were rewarded for their pains by finding first the dinner pail and umbrella then the dead body of the little girl as described above, bearing evidence of the most dastardly and outrageous crime having been committed. Suspicion fell on one of the neighboring boys, John Mazue who claimed to be 15 years old. A pipe was found also a handkerchief which it was claimed, were similar to those used by him and the fact that he was seen in that neighborhood were strong circumstantial evidence against him.

Coroner Cassel came, a jury of six was summoned and the inquest began. After hearing a small portion of the evidence an adjournment was taken till monday, when the trial went on.

John Mazue, Sworn, was in Waverly fishing, Thursday; passenger met me at Bull's woods, about one quarter of a mile from Waverly; about 4:15 due in Montrose; I knew Annie Brunder when she was alive; I saw Annie that day, when I was on Robines' crossing; I saw her by Nolan's house, on the road; I was 4 rails this side the crossing when I saw Annie; I saw her first by Chris Fautches, on the R. R, I was following her as far as McGuires woods, and don't know when she left the R. R; after I saw her at Nolan's I went to Morass' house; from Robines' crossing, went straight home from Robines' crossing stopping at Morass' to get a drink. But didn't get a drink there, made water by the corn crib; then I started home, went straight home; supper or after supper when I got there; didn't look at time, sun on top of woods, I saw her Saturday; I saw the body of the dead girl. The dead girl I saw here Saturday was the same girl I saw on Thursday, at Nolan's house in the road; the Thursday I speak of was last week Thursday; when I was at Robines' crossing I looked back and saw May's girl; she was just coming around the curve there; saw Tom Freeny, where the old crossing is made out of ties, I whistled for him once or twice Martin Freeny told me to stop, I didn't stop, walked slow on, he asked me how many fish I had caught; I told him I caught over twelve. All the people I saw coming from Waverly on that Thursday was the May girl, Tom and Martin Freeny, and Annie.

Austin Freeny, sworn, I live in Marysville, about a mile west of here, Friday night heard the alarm of the little girl being lost, Saturday morning we started out to look for her; I met her father and Frank Morass; we were in the woods a few minutes when Martin May come; Morass and I were walking pretty close together when Morass picked up a dinner pail and umbrella; we looked around there and I found a handkerchief, a few feet from where the dinner pail was; we looked around and Morass picked up a pipe, about two feet from where the handkercief and dinner pail were, the handkerchief was a small one, red and white cotton, I think, the pipe was a wooden one the head somewhat burned, mouthpiece pretty much worn through with the teeth; tracks of two feet; place pretty well crushed there; this was between 8 and 9 A. M. when we found these things, we looked for the girl till about 10:30 when we concluded to get more help; about 22 met at the crossing, after dinner; called the new crossing, they went into the woods abreast about 4 or 5 feet apart, and started to go through the woods from one end to the other, we went through one way, then we formed to go the other, we were about one half way through when her uncle saw her.

She looked bad; both her hands were tied behind her back; part of her apron was tied around her face and mouth under her chin; both her feet tied about the ankles; her apron was torn from the waist, the skirt of it; her hands were tied with her handkerchief, feet tied with part of the apron; witness shown handkerchief, says it looks like the one found there, near the dinner pail; shown pipe, that is same one picked up there; shown apron and handkerchief with which tied and identified them.

Robine boy, sworn, says, I knew Annie, saw her go along with her dinner pail and umbrella.

Thomas Kommers, shown map, located the places.

Martin Freeny, sworn, says I live in Marysville, am a son of Austin Freeny, saw John Mazue last Thursday at Freeny's crossing, talked about half a minute with him. I asked him how many fish he had caught, think he said 10 or 12; he was walking fast, and slowed up, didn't stop. He was walking pretty fast. I was going kink of sideways toward him. I hadn't heard about this matter then: was about 5 o'clock, probably a little later.

Dr. Brigham, at post-mortem examination, found a pocket knife and some cloves in pocket of dress.

Frank Morass, sworn, says (by interpreter, Charler Pogrzeba.) He was in the woods when the pail and umbrella were found, on Saturday; shown a pipe can't say whose it is, saw him smoke a wooden pipe, am his uncle; shown a handkerchief. Don't know that it is his. Saw Johnnie on Thursday, about 7 o'clock in the evening, may be later, set down by his mothers house. Had no talk with him on that day; knife exhibited, never saw it before.

Joseph Brunder, sworn, by interpreter says, I live behind Montrose, in Marysville, am father of Annie Brunder, was not in the woods when they found the pail, she left home the last time about 7:30 in the morning, Thursday, never seen her until he seen her when they found her up there in that road, dead, on Saturday afternoon; she was 11 years old last New Year's. From my house to Waverly, is over two miles. From Johnny Mazue about 40 rods. Children were acquainted as neighbors, about 11 years neighbors, pipe exhibited; when Frank Morass found it he showed it to him, don't know whose it is.

Nellie May, sworn, says, I live in Marysville; go to school at Waverly, was at school last Thursday, school is generally out at 4, I remained after school to sweep the room, would if I hurried take about 15 minutes; came home down the R. R. track, that night, saw Johny Mazue that day at about 5 o'clock in the afternoon, on the R. R. near Austin Freeny's ahead of me he had a sack; a light colored one. I live about 3 miles from Waverly saw no other man on the track while I was coming from school; knew Annie Brunder, did not see her.

Francis Brunder, sworn, says I am cousin to Annie; was at Waverly, last Thursday; left after train time, train was ahead of me; I walked on the R. R. track, slow, toward Montrose; know where Robine lives, and crossing, this side where Muldoon's woods are, came by Robine's crossing, stopped and got some rosies, near the track, could see crossing at Muldoon's woods; track is straight, can see to Montrose from there. I saw Johnny Mazue ahead of me while I was there; this side of crossing, near a white post, don't know what was written on the post. I turned to pick off of bush, and turned back again and he was gone; don't know where to (the prisoner and Deputy Sheriff Anderson here left the court room) I turned and sat on the track and waited for George Holtby, I got on to his wagon, after he had passed the crossing and went home, saw Annie Brunder near Robine crossing, coming; could just see the bucket shining after I got on the wagon, Annie was coming toward the place I last saw Johnny Mazue if Johnny had gone down the R. R. track I could have seen him.

Charles Pogrzeba, sworn, says I live in Woodland, knew Frances Brunder, heard her testimony concerning white post. It is marked miles, from crossing. I know of the post she refers to. I know the place where the pail was found, saw it yesterday; from center of the track to where the pail was found is about 7 rods, more or less; know where the body was found, about 18 rods from pail, 22 men hunted; body was not in brush, but in woods, was straight from place where Frances last saw Johnny Mazue.

John C. Nugent, sworn, says, I heard the testimony of Frances Brunder and Charles Pogrzeba; know where the white post they spoke of is, remember where she testified she last saw Johnny Mazue that day; the track is straight, can see Montrose very plain from the crossing; I know where the men showed the dinner pail was found; judge 6 or 7 rods from track; know where Robine's crossing is; know where Nolan's house is; It is on a high elevation; hill between; from Nolan's house could not see a man near track, unless he was 10 feet high; from track could just see tops of window casings, when in the buggy; if a man was four rails this side of crossing, don't think you could see him; from Robines crossing to Frank Morgan's perhaps ¾ of a mile; it would take a man 15 minutes to go ¾ of a mile, if traveled fast could go in less time; talked with Frank Morass; did not tell the same story to-day as last night; last night said after 7, but not quite 8; said nothing; from John Mazue, he said he turned right she turned left, 15 rods ahead of him; I spoke about time, J. Mazue said he couldn't tell how long; said he went over the fence laid down in the woods, awhile; lit his pipe 4 or 5 times.

Dr. Brigham. live at Montrose, practice medicine, was here, Saturday, conducted post-mortem examination the clothing of the body was in tact except apron which had been torn off at the waist band; the left button hole of the drawers had been torn open and that part of the drawers was down; the eyes were very much inflamed. the left eye upper lid and outer corner had been injured, skin rubbed off; the nose was flattened; the lower half of each ear was white, the upper half blue; a red line one inch wide encircled the neck, two marks one either side of the windpipe about the size of the end of the fingers one bluish green spot in right illiac fossa, (groin) one in left, and a third just above it; calf of right leg a black spot 3 inches in diameter, bruse, made should judge, by heel of boot. Rigor mortis well marked, except in neck, shoulder, elbow and hipjoints; the hymen was absent; the vagina contained blood; on opening the body the thoracic organs, heart and lungs were healthy; the lungs containing air and slightly congested. All other organs are in normal condition excepting womb, which was rudimentary; the vagina about an inch in diameter; it readily admitted the index finger of myself and, also, that of the coroner, and the body fairly well developed; from the condition of the body I think she must have been dead not less than 36 hours, the bladdler was empty, and the vowels had moved; bowels emptied into the drawers; emptying of bowels and bladder immediately before death; in sudden death by strangulation this generally occurs; the same appearance as in this case presented by lungs the discolorations of the throat indicated strangulation. Death was caused by strangulation, beyond a doubt, Private parts were lacerated; hymen ruptured, showed sexual connection had taken place before death, vagina contained arterial or red blood when in case of death would have been bluish black; from the time of intercourse there being no inflammation of the part it could not have been but a short time till death, one half, perhaps an hour, perhaps immediately; the womb being rudimentary would show that she had no desire for sexual intercourse; the body had assumed that bluish or purple color peculiar to death from strangulation.

Joseph Brunder, recalled, knife exhibited, says he saw it before; belonged to Annie; she carried it to school.

David Brooker, am constable. saw Johnny Mazue, Saturday, working for me, on the road, before he was arrested, he said to me that he saw Annie Brunder, Thursday evening; near Freeny's new crossing; afterwards said I saw her by Robine's crossing, in front of Nolan's house.

Dr. Brigham, when boy's clothes were taken off, found in his pocket a handkerchief (exhibit red) has a few blood stains on it.

Joseph Snodgrass, live at Montrose, know where Muldoon's woods are, was there, yesterday, Sunday, know from what others say about tragedy, saw a trail; measured a boot track that went up and down again on R. R. track; about 30 rods this side of crossing; marked the measure on a box, at Young's Hotel, was made when ground was wet.

The County Attorney addressed the jury, case closed for coroner, the instructions concerning the rendering of a verdict were read, and the jury sent to their room under charge of constable Dave Brooker. In a few minutes the jury returned with a verdict.

The Jury consisting of C. E. Rennix, Martin Bland, James Denoon, S. V. Snodgrass, Louis Klatt and Oscor Goodwin, brought in a verdict to the effect that Annie Brunder came to her death by being outraged and strangled by John Mazue on the 18th day of June 1891.

The prisoner was taken to Buffalo and brought before justice Cochran on complaint of County Attorney Cutting, waved examination and was taken to the Hennepin county jail to await the action of the Grand Jury in December next.

CORRESPONDENCE

ANNANDALE.

Elder Ringer of Fair Haven supplied the pulpit, in the M. E. Church last Sunday morning. We had no evening service.

Parties from Monticello were here last Monday and bought Prof Kings building for a Banking house and propose to commence the business of banking in the course of about three weeks. The young gentleman who is to officiate as cashier has rented some rooms of Mr. Chas Gordon.

Dr. Chase, city physician of Minneapolis, is visiting his friend Dr. Ridgway, and the two professionals have devoted a good deal of attention to angling for the denizens of Clearwater and Cedar Lakes with good success.

Our people are all engaged in making preparations for celebrating the Fourth in an appropriate manner. Gen. Hooker of Minneapolis, is announced to deliver the address and it is expected that Prof. King will have a few appropriate words to offer on the occasion. It is only necessary to mention the names of these two gentlemen to ensure a large and attentive audience. The G. A. R. post of Fair Haven are expected to be present and contribute, by their presence, to the veneration of the day.

The Kimball Cornet Band has been engaged to furnish music. The Howard Lake Base ball club will contest with the Annandale club for the prize. Several other sports are to come off, "for particulars see small bills". One of the most amusing entertainments of the occasion will be the fat man's race. Query? Is the prize to be a quarter of Beef or a Ham of Pork? Mr. S. H. McGuire has newly painted his house and people in the village are generally painting up and cleaning up to give the place a presentable appearance on the 4th.

Banker Oakly of Buffalo was in town yesterday.

The Cotton edifice is fast approaching completion. It will supply a want much needed in the village.

Your correspondent has been spending a few days at Kimball Prairie, and attended Church service there on Sunday, Elder Bulivant officiating; The Elder is suffering from a throat dificulty that greatly impairs his articulation, otherwise he is a good sermonizer. His cultivation is above an average of the preachers in the Methodist denomination, in this vicinity. We also attended a lecture, on Monday evening, by the Rev. J. S. Davis of Minneapolis, a Swedenborgian Clergyman. The announcement of the lecture attracted quite a large audience as the doctrins of that Church are not generally much understood, and people had a desire to know more about them. Mr. Davis is a fluent, easy speaker and appears to understand what he talks about. We ourself, had no definite understanding of the particular doctrines of that church and though considerably enlightened by the lecture do not feel competent to undertake an explanation; we would, however, say that some of the sentiments, as expressed by the speaker, met a cordial response in our faith.

The village of Kimball Prairie is getting to be considerable of a business point, it is diverting trade from other and older places situated inland from Railroads, notably Maine Prairie and Fair Haven, Mr. Frank Driver is erecting a large and commodious Hotel there in which he proposes to introduce some of the modern improvements

Sawyer & Arnold, of Minneapolis, have stocked up a large lumber yard there which is competing with the yards at Annandale; thereby affording advantages to those in the vicinity who are erecting building.

INDEPENDENCE INDICTMENTS.

Potato bugs are getting quite plenty.

Corn is growing now after the gentle showers and there seems to be no reason why we should not get a good crop.

Small grain will not come up to last year by 30 per cent.

The Independence people will celebrate at the neighboring towns this year.

The road overseers have about finished up their work for the season.

The bee men, of Independence, say there bees are doing well, will have plenty of honey after a while.

Quite a good many potatoes took the dry rot and did not come.

One day, last week, your correspondent took a trip to Saratoga, Jr., situated on the beautiful shore of Lake Minnetonka, that is, I might say, all around the shore. They have fine cottages and beautiful grounds and seem to live in ease and luxury during the summer months 40 years ago the dusky Sioux little drempt of his hunting ground and fish pond being made a summer resort for his white brother only a little ways in the future. The county is building nice roads and bullavards at many points on the lake. There is quite a number of fruit farmers, berry farmers, if you had rather call them, around the lake.

ROCKFORD RIPPLES.

Plenty of rain, all kinds of small grain looks good.

Mrs. H. Haggerty and son Hughey, of Eyota, Minn., visited W. L. Haggerty and wife, a few days, this week, returning home. Tuesday morning.

J. Benner, wife and son Floyd, went to Winona, Wednesday evening; it is a reunion of the First Minn. regiment.

J. Haggerty, of Hamel, visited his brother and mother, over Sunday.

Mr. J. P. Beach, of Waterville, is visiting his son-in-law, D. R. Thompson.

F. A. Baker, Mrs. Emanuel Walter and daughter, Mazie are attending camp-meeting at Monticello, this week.

Dr. O. R. Fassett and wife returned from Auburn, N. Y. The Dr. will remain here now.

Patsy Harrington, of St. Paul, called upon friends, Tuesday.

Rockford has made all arrangments for celebrating the 4th of July. An invitation is extended to all to come and have a good time.

Mrs. Al. Eppel visited Mrs. Haggerty for a few day, this week.

WATERTOWN WAYS.

Floyd Fairbaks passed through Watertown last Thursday enrout for Howard.

Guy Halgren was home again over Sunday. He came up to Waconia, on Friday, to play with the band at the old soldier's reunion.

Most all the old soldiers in this vicinity took an outing last Friday and Saturday in attendance at their reunion which was held at Waconia.

Mr. Ed and Miss Mary Hainlin returned from Florida last Saturday. They left the rest of their folks well and say they like it well there. Mr. Perry Hainlin has a contract of clearing 40 acres of land.

Mr. Mort Malsed went up to Norwood, last Monday, and met his mother who came down on the train from quite an extended visit with her children near Milbank.

Rev. Father Bolin, of Litchfield, and a Rev. gentleman from Minneapolis, whose name we did not learn have been assisting Father Cawley to hold services in the Catholic church for several days this week.

Hurrah for the 4th of July at Watertown! Every body come and enjoy yourselves.

CAME TOO LATE.

Confession of a Crime for Which a Man Was Lynched.

RICHLAND CENTER, Wis., June 23.—One Irwin Fowler, of Viola, Richland county, has confessed that he had a hand in the murder of old Reuben Drake, his wife and two grandchildren, in May, 1888, for which Andrew Grandstaff was lynched three days afterward. It is reported that Fowler implicates Jeff Bowker and Frank and Elijah Carey, who were under suspicion at the time of the murder. Great excitement exists in the vicinity where the diabolical crime was committed, and in consequence of Fowler's confession further violence may result. —Globe.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

Washington, June 19, 1891.

Secretary Foster received a most unexpected set back this week. He had made all of his arrangements to attend the Ohio republican convention as the chief representative of the administration and managery of the Sherman Senatorial side show. It was on the cards for him to have secured the passage of a resolution endorsing the administration, so worded as to practically commit the convention to Harrison for '92, thus shutting our Ohio's "favorite son"—McKinley who if he can be elected governor fully intends entering the lists against Harrison or any body else that may appear. And in addition to that Senator Sherman expected his assistance in thepassage of a resolution that would have placed Sherman astride the shoulders of McKinley.

But all plans are now off. Secretary Foster did not attend the Ohio convention. Why? Because Senator Sherman sent him word by a trusty personal messenger not to come, as his presence would only imitate the Foraker men who had obtained control of the convention. It was then suddenly discovered that the business of the department was so pressing that Secretary Foster would be compelled to defer his intended visit to Ohio to look after some private business until Thursday, and was so announced to the "dear public" which is always assumed to be gullible enough to believe any thing it is told, if the teller be an offical; but at the Treasury department they know; they know that Mr. Foster's grip sack was all packed and all arrangements made for his trip when he received a telgram telling him not to come and that an explaination had been sent to him by messenger and they know that when that messanger arrived the next day he was for two mortal hours closeted with Mr. Foster in private office, to the exclusion of everybody even his private and confidential stenographer.

There are rumors here of a combination between McKinley and Foraker, the object of which is to make Foraker Sherman's successor in the Senate and McKinley the Presidential nominee of his party next year, provided of course that the republicans can elect McKinley governor and control the legislature this year. It is believed here that it was this combination that forced Ex-Representative Grosvenor to resign his recent appointment as chairman of the Treasury commission which is to make a delightful summer tour of Europe for the alleged purpose of investigating immigration. There has been a more or less bitter feeling between Foraker and Grosvenor ever since the Congressional investigation of the ballot box forgeries last year.

Democratic prospects for next year are certainly very encouraging as seen through the eyes of visitors to Washington, and the man who predicts democratic success in such states as Iowa, Michigan and Wisconsin is no longer regarded as a political "rainbow chaser, as he was so very long ago, and republicans from those states have by the score recently admitted that they considered them doubtful.

Representative Oats, of Alabama, proposes like Mr. Mills to turn author and he is now here for the purpose of verifying dates, etc., etc. in a volume of war reminiscences which has he written, the official reords being all on file in the War department.

I was told to day that Commissioner of Pensions Raum, with the assistance of the pension attorneys, had made himself solid with the administration, and that in consideration of he and the pension attorneys having agreed to swing the G. A. R. into line for Harrison that gentleman had agreed to forget all the damaging charges that had been brought against Raum and allow him to continue in charge of the Pension Office. This leal gives Mr. Harrison the active support of the National Tribune, Lemon's paper, and also of a new soldiers paper which is to be started at Chicago by the pension ring. If true, it may in the end turn out to be dearly bought support.

Ex-Congressman Grosvenor has been appointed a special World's Fair Commissioner in charge of foreign exhibits, as a salve for being forced off the immigration commission. As the salary is the same and both places include a trip to Europe at Uncle Sam's expense Grosvenor isn't shedding many tears.

AS USUAL, most of the graduating class at Yale this year will study law, says the Boston Herald, and it will be the same at Harvard and all the other colleges, doubtless. It is the most crowded of all the professions, but it still holds out the most attractions to the ambitious young men about to choose a calling in life. We suppose it is speaking entirely within bounds to say that not one-half of the young men who go into law ever succeed in making a living out of that alone.

A RECENT visitor to Concord, N. Why, he'd go as near to me as that tree (pointing to one three feet off) and never see me mornings. But after three, when I was working 'round, he'd sit on a saw-horse and talk."

IT would be a good thing to devise some special statute for furnishing adequate punishment for the practical joker. The latest was perpetrated by a pair of bicyclists in central New Jersey. He turned on his air brakes and prepared to jump from his engine when he sped by the lights and saw the two jokers mounting their wheels and heard their mocking laughter.

The first to die was 52 years old at the time of death. She is a native of Virginia, belongs to the Baptist church and was baptized seventy-five years ago at Big Springs, Va. She has over 600 living descendants. The old lady is in good health.

OVER two and a half million dollars have been absorbed by the short term endowment societies which have been going to the wall so rapidly of late in Philadelphia. Very little of this money will ever go back to the artisans and working people who paid it. Most of those who went into these get-rich-quick orders realized that they were only engaging in a speculation. Their experience shows how ready people are to speculate when the cost is small and the returns promised large, and how little attention is paid to which way the odds lie until it is beyond their power to retrace their steps.

THE Philadelphia Inquirer is not pleased with the youth of the period. It finds that the fashionable young man spends more money for his clothes than his father allowed for entire household expenses a generation ago. Notwithstanding almost any size and design can be procured ready-made, the society youth must needs have manufactured for his especial use almost everything from hat to shoes. Of course his suit is made to order—shirts, collars, cuffs and shoes follow suit, and even his silk underwear must be like that of no one else, his handkerchief and neck scarfs measured and made for him.

AN OPEN SWITCH.

It Causes a Collision Near New Orleans Which Results in Six Deaths and the Injuring of a Number of Persons—Similar Disasters at Other Points Prove Fatal to Several.

NEW ORLEANS, June 22.—A collision on the Illinois Central railroad Friday night near Sauve was caused by an open switch, where a freight train was sidetracked and was run into by the southbound fast express. Four men were killed and six severely injured. The killed were: Engineer W. D. Mitche, Fireman John Lawson, Charles Munn, of McComb City, Miss.; Bill Williams (colored), of Hammond, Ind. The wounded: Engineer Charles Corcoran, of New Orleans, about the head; Postal Clerk L. T. Binford, of Jackson, Tenn., about the spine, breast and legs; Postal Clerk T. J. Frazer, of Trenton, Tenn., severely scalded about the lower limbs, hands and face; Yson Lewis (colored), severely injured about the legs, head and hands; Jim Lewis (colored), of Hammond, severely scalded about the head, face and hands; Calvin Neits (colored), badly scalded about the head and upper portion of the body and both legs broken. Frazer and Neits died in the hospital here Saturday night.

CLEVELAND, O., June 22.—An excursion train of fifteen cars which left this city Sunday afternoon on the Nickel-plate railway jumped the track near Dover, O., and seven cars were wrecked. The train was loaded with street railway employes and their families who were going to Oak Point, a pleasure resort on the Lake shore. Henry Rogers was killed and more than thirty persons were injured.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., June 22.—Two freight trains collided on the Chicago & Alton railroad at Williamsville, 15 miles north of this city, at 3:39 Sunday morning. One was a double-header, which was sidetracked at Williamsville to permit the southbound passenger train to pass. The passenger train was followed by engine No. 173 and a caboose, also coming south. When the passenger came by the signals were not given promptly or were misunderstood, and the result was that the double-header started north and crashed into engine 141 just above Williamsville. The three engines were piled up in a heap together and several cars were derailed. Engineer George Brown of engine 143 was thrown beneath engine 98 and crushed beneath the boiler. Both of his arms and legs were broken and his injuries will prove fatal. Brown was taken to his home in Bloomington. Engineers Con Maloney and J. Wills were somewhat injured but not seriously. The firemen saved themselves by jumping and escaped without serious injuries.

WILLOW SPRINGS, Mo., June 22.—Saturday afternoon engine No. 3 on the Nablett narrow gauge road about 10 miles west of this city, on a horseshoe curve, ran into a push-car containing eleven employes. James Kamtzer and Fred Eberlea were killed instantly.

THE AMERICAN DERBY.

It Is Won at Chicago by Strathmeath in the Presence of 40,000 Spectators.

CHICAGO, June 22.—Notwithstanding disagreeable weather the great American derby Saturday was a conspicuous and overwhelming success. Forty thousand people witnessed the race. The value of the stakes was $21,800. The result of the race was a victory for Strathmeath, ridden by George Covington, and owned by Green Morris, but he did not win it until after a game fight. The second horse was a great surprise, being Poet Scout, the least tried horse in the lot. The latter's stable companion, High Tariff, was considered the better animal of the two, but after running a mile he was suddenly seen to waver, slacken his pace and a moment later fell dead of heart disease. Poet Scout set the pace most of the distance of the race, but was passed by Strathmeath on entering the stretch, and the latter won by a length and a half. Kingman, the much-advertised Kentucky horse, was third, Vallera fourth, Ludowic fifth, Michael sixth, Pessarra seventh, Snowball eighth and Forerunner ninth. Balgowan was scratched. The time, 1⅛ miles, was 2:49¼, very fair for the track. The winner was the favorite in the betting at 2 to 1; Kingman was 3 to 1; Pessarra and Snowball, 4 to 1; the rest, 8 to 1 and more.

The record of the American Derby, one mild and a half, is as follows:

Year.	Horse.	Rider.	Value.
1884	Modesty	Murphy	$11,900
1885	Volante	Murphy	10,750
1886	Silver Cloud	Murphy	9,360
1887	C. H. Todd	Hamilton	13,600
1888	Emperor of Norfolk	Murphy	14,340
1889	Spokane	Kiley	16,760
1890	Uncle Bob	Kiley	16,760
1891	Strathmeath	Covington	21,800

Time—1884, 2:42¾; 1885, 2:49; 1886, 2:37½; 1887, 2:26½; 1888, 2:40½; 1889, 2:41¼; 1890, 2:55¾; 1891, 2:49¼.

LOOKS LIKE A BIG HARVEST.

The Government Crop Report Shows Generally Good Condition.

WASHINGTON, June 22.—The special bulletin issued by the signal office for the week ending Saturday shows the conditions of crops as follows:

Iowa and Nebraska—Too much rain during the past week for best crop conditions, corn especially needing sunshine; slight damage by hail in southwest Nebraska.

Michigan and Wisconsin—Conditions favorable to all crops, although sunshine and warmth are needed. Drought broken in Michigan. Hay is reported less than a half crop in Wisconsin.

Ohio and Indiana—All crops doing well, though rainfall has been badly distributed in some parts of Indiana. Wheat harvest begun in Indiana; crop heavy. Weeds somewhat troublesome in portions of Ohio.

Illinois—Heavy rains in Missouri and northern Illinois have damaged crops somewhat. Crop conditions favorable except cats. Corn growing well.

INSURGENTS GAINING GROUND.

The Esmeralda Destroys Balmaceda's Means of Revenue.

IQUIQUE, June 22.—The insurgent war-ship Esmeralda has shelled and completely destroyed the government works at the Lobos or Seal Guano islands. Shipments of guano are now impossible, and government revenues therefore cut off. The startling news has reached Iquique that there is serious disaffection among Balmaceda's forces at Coquimbo, an entire batallion having revolted. Several officers who refused to join them were killed. These troops are marching northward to join the congressional forces at Caldera.

A Sad Tragedy.

NEW YORK, June 22.—The steamer La Bretagne which arrived here Sunday from Havre reports that Joseph Feys, aged 40 years, a steerage passenger and native of Switzerland, while conversing with his family, consisting of a wife and five children, suddenly dragged his 5-year-old son Pierre from his mother's arms and threw him into the sea. The child was lost, and the father, who was apparently insane, was seized by the officers of the ship and put in irons. He had threatened to throw all his children overboard.

A NOTED HOOSIER GONE.

Death at Indianapolis of Ex-Senator Joseph E. McDonald.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., June 22.—Ex-Senator McDonald died at 11:35 Sunday night. He had lain in a comatose condition since 8:01 o'clock, and at 9:01 o'clock began the irregular breathing that showed demise was near. His death was peaceful and as if falling asleep. The funeral will occur Wednesday afternoon. Mr. McDonald told Dr. Runnells Sunday morning for the first time of his total abandonment of all hope of recovery. His strength had shown a decided break, and opiates were administered in the evening to relieve the continuous and painful hiccoughing. At 3 o'clock in the afternoon the communion was partaken of by him at the hands of Rev. Dr. M. L. Harris, of the First Presbyterian church, in the absence of his pastor, Rev. Joseph Milburn, of the Second church. The elders of the latter church and the immediate relatives participated in the service. Senator McDonald's mind was perfectly clear, and at the close he said he desired the communion as a testimony of his faith in Christ. He shook hands with all present, and said that now he would receive no more visitors. Shortly afterward he fell into an unconscious state, in which he remained till his death.

JOSEPH E. M'DONALD.

[Joseph Ewing McDonald was born in Butler county, O., August 29, 1819, and taken to Montgomery county, Ind., in 1826. At the age of 12 years, after a brief period in the village schools, he was apprenticed at the saddlers' trade in Lafayette. While working at his trade he studied law, and when he finished his apprenticeship he was prepared to enter Wabash college in the higher classics. In 1842 he entered the law office of Zebulon Beard at Lafayette. The next year he was admitted to the bar. Before he received his license to practice he was nominated for county prosecutor and elected over his whig competitor. This was the first election by the people of prosecuting attorneys. Later, at the first election when attorney generals of the state were elected by the people, he was the choice. As attorney general he served two terms, and two years later was elected to congress, serving one term. In 1856 he was elected attorney general of the state and reelected in 1858. Declining for the third time he resumed his law practice and the following year moved to Indianapolis. In 1864 he was his party's candidate for governor and canvassed the state in a joint debate with Morton. He was defeated, but there was cast a bigger vote than had been cast the two years previous. In 1875 he was elected to the United States senate. He failed to be his own successor, Benjamin Harrison being chosen.

In his private life Mr. McDonald was at the head of one of the largest law firms in Indianapolis and one of the three foremost at the Indiana bar. He was engaged in a good many prominent cases which have been tests as to the constitutionality of the law. Personally he was genial, kindly and winning. In speech he was forceful without passion. There was no deceit in his composition. He was well known all over the country, and familiars spoke of him as "Joe" or "Uncle Joseph." He was married three times, two sons surviving of the four children of the first marriage. The great part of Mr McDonald's life was his home life, for he was eminently a home man.]

THEY CRY FOR SILVER.

Meeting of the Free Coinage Men—Gen. Warner and Other Members of the White Metal Committee Issue an Address.

NEW YORK, June 22.—The national executive silver committee held meetings in this city Friday and Saturday. The following members were present: Gen. A. J. Warner, of Ohio, chairman; Francis G. Newlands, of Nevada, vice chairman; Lee Crandall, of Washington, secretary, and L. M. Ramsay, of Missouri. Edwards Pierrepont was unable to be present. Senators Jones and Stewart, of Nevada, were in consultation with the committee during the sessions. Saturday evening the committee issued an address, in which it says:

"The national silver committee desires to call the attention of the country to the object lesson which is being exhibited in the desperate struggle of the great financial institutions on both sides of the Atlantic to increase the gold reserves to avoid bankruptcy and ruin, and to the fact that any increase by one necessarily diminishes the reserves of others. For eighteen years the basis of credit in gold-standard countries has been growing narrower as the single standard has been extended and the production of gold fallen off, while the structure of credit has been growing proportionately larger and more insecure, until the relation of credit to actual money, as disclosed in the Barings' failure, in gold standard England has alarmed the world and started anew the scramble for gold that threatens all business undertakings and stalks as a menace to every legitimate enterprise. The remedy is in the restoration of bimetalism. Place our money system again upon the broad basis of gold and silver as the money of ultimate redemption instead of gold alone. Support the credit system of the banks and the country by both the metals under free and unlimited coinage. A stable and not a fluctuating currency is required by legitimate business. Who can doubt that greater stability resides in money coined from the metals automatically regulated than in credit devices that to-day are and to-morrow may vanish?"

The committee says this is the paramount issue in this country and should be made such in the elections this year. All other issues are involved in this and cannot be separated from it.

Brutal Murder of an Old Woman.

MANISTEE, Mich., June 22.—Jack Kehoe, a saloon keeper of this city, murdered his mother-in-law, Mrs. Ann McCormick, aged 55, Saturday morning by pounding her to death with a beer bottle. He attempted to kill his wife, but failed. She received serious internal injuries, besides a fracture of the skull and nose, but will recover. The family quarreled over property matters. Kehoe gave himself up.

Buried by Sand.

ERIE, Pa., June 22.—Recent rains softened the crust of a high sand bank in this city, and Saturday, when a number of small boys began to dig at its base, it caved in on them. Fred Anders was taken out dead. Ed Andrews was taken out alive, but will die. James Burnsand Philip Kaufmann were saved through the heroism of James Donlan, who, although half buried, kept the sand back with his little arms so as to keep clear the faces of his companions. Joseph Schwartz, a stonemason, was buried in another locality and was rescued from beneath tons of earth, but will die.

Double Murder.

WINSTON, N. C., June 22.—A double murder was committed in this city Sunday morning. John Smith and Wilburn Walker got into a difficulty with some unknown parties near a disreputable house and sought shelter in the house of Henry Goins, a colored man. They were pursued and fired upon, the first shot killing Mary Goins. Walker returned the fire, and Smith, who was between Walker and his pursuer, was shot four times. Smith and the woman died instantly. The unknown parties have escaped.

BEHRING SEA ARBITERS.

Sir George Baden-Powell and Dr. George M. Dawson Appointed to Act on Behalf of the British Government.

LONDON, June 23.—The government has appointed Sir George Baden-Powell, J. C. M. G., member of parliament for Liverpool, and Dr. George M. Dawson, of the Canadian survey department, as the arbitrators on the behalf of Great Britain in the Behring sea fishery controversy. The board of arbitration will probably meet in October. The British members of the board will meet almost immediately at Ottawa, whence they will proceed to Vancouver island, British Columbia, with the intention of spending two months on board a man-of-war cruising in the Behring sea, visiting the Prebyloff islands and all the principal stations frequented by sealers. At the expiration of their cruise it is expected that they will be sufficiently acquainted with the details of the seal-hunting business and with the needs and interests of the sealers to be able to meet the American arbiters as experts.

WASHINGTON, June 23.—The department of state has been notified that the British government has appointed Sir George Baden-Powell and Mr. W. Dawson agents for that government to visit Alaska and collect information respecting the seal fisheries. The statement coming from London that these men have been appointed arbiters is erroneous. The negotiations looking to arbitration of the claims made by the United States to jurisdiction over Behring sea have not yet progressed to a point that would permit of the appointment of arbiters, and, in fact, the nature of the arbitration itself has not been agreed upon. Presumably it will be intrusted to a board composed of two representatives of the United States, two of Great Britain and a fifth member to be selected by the first four. But this presumption may be negatived by an insistence upon Russian representation, or it may be that some neutral power will be called in. These are matters that will doubtless be arranged without difficulty when Great Britain and the United States have finally agreed upon the exact questions to be submitted to arbitration.

A BATTLE WITH CONVICTS.

Desperate Prisoners in Georgia Make a Break for Liberty—A Fight Follows in Which Several Lives Are Lost.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., June 23.—Full details from Coal City, the convict camp where an uprising occurred Monday morning, record one of the most daring breaks for liberty ever attempted in Georgia. At 6 o'clock Capt. J. Moreland, assistant warden at Slope camp, went into the stockade where 200 convicts were confined. He was accompanied by Jesse Rankin, the guard. After the convicts had been counted and the majority sent off to the coal mines, seven asked to remain behind in order to be furnished with overalls, claiming that they had been working in a wet place in the mine. The seven were: J. M. Lansdowne, S. H. Lansdowne, father and son; Samuel Green, Wilson Palmer, John Rutherford, "Abe" Wayman and George Ward. As the assistant warden started for the gate Wilson Palmer, a burly white convict serving a term for safe-blowing, drew a revolver and ordered the officer's hands up. After relieving the officer of his pistol Palmer fired his revolver within a foot of the officer's face, inflicting a fatal wound. Rankin in the meantime had been overpowered, but, struggling to his feet, managed to escape by knocking down a convict. The seven desperate men made a rush for Capt. Moreland's office, where they knew arms were kept. They secured a double-barreled shotgun and barricaded the door. By this time the guards were aroused and a general fusillade ensued, resulting in the death of Patrick Rawlin and "Jack" Rankin, two guards, and Samuel Green, Wilson Palmer and George Ward. While the firing was in progress "Abe" Wayman and John Rutherford made a break from the office and succeeded in escaping. How the convicts secured the pistol is not known.

TORNADO IN KENTUCKY.

Many Houses Wrecked and Reports of Persons Injured—Crops Destroyed.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., June 23.—A tornado is reported from the counties of Monroe, Metcalf and Washington, in southern Kentucky. About fifty houses were swept away and the loss to crops will amount to $25,000. Near Tompkinsville James Payne's house was wrecked and several members of his family injured. "Sam" McPherson's house and Jacob Bartlett's distillery were destroyed. Near Springfield the damage amounted to $10,000.

CAIRO, Ill., June 23.—The great storm Sunday struck the fruit belt at Villa Ridge with disastrous effect. Five thousand peach and 1,000 apple trees loaded with fruit were blown down. One planter alone lost 300 peach trees. Wheat in the shock was blown all over the county, while that uncut is laid to the ground for miles. Grapevines are badly injured. The tall timber on the Kentucky shore opposite here went down in great quantities before the blast and a report of fatal injury to oneman came in Monday morning.

THE TREASURY'S CONDITION.

An Available Balance of $4,664,879 on Hand June 22.

WASHINGTON, June 23.—Mr. McLelland, chief of the warrant division of the secretary's office, makes the following statement of the condition of the treasury: Balance in treasury June 1, $10,138,473; receipts to date, $21,663,124; total, $31,801,597. Payments to date, $27,136,718. Balance available June 22, $4,664,879. The treasurer's statement just issued, but which bears date of the 19th inst., shows a cash balance of $42,958,918, or $263,164 less than the total amount of deposits in national banks and of fractional silver.

Dashed to Pieces.

ST. PETERSBURG, June 23.—A terrible balloon accident occurred Sunday in the suburbs of this city by which four lives were lost. The balloon, which was a large one and belonged to C unt Apraxine, was filled with gas under the supervision of a party of amateurs. They lost control of the unwieldy globe, and it suddenly shot into the air, carrying with it four men. The balloon rose with tremendous swiftness and had attained a great height when it burst and the four occupants of the car came whirling down and were dashed to instant death on the earth below.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS

A Game Warden Needed.

Otter Tail county is one of the places where a deputy game warden is severely needed. During the past three months thousands of pounds of black bass, pike and pickerel have been netted and seined and shipped away. There is a special law for Otter Tail which prohibits netting and seining from March 1 to September 30, and also forbids the shipping out of the county. In spite of this law some of the best lakes are full of nets and were even so through the spawning season.

Postal Statistics.

The gross receipts of the Minneapolis office during the past year were $361,642.89, an increase over the preceding year of $46,105.49. This increases the salary of Postmaster Hale to $3,800. The salary of the postmaster at St. Paul is increased to $3,700. The gross receipts there were $319,470.68, an increase over the preceding year of $15,902.26. The salary of Duluth's postmaster is fixed at $3,200. The gross receipts were $60,917.84, an increase of $13,993.60.

Killed by a Wheel.

George B. Albertson, one of the most extensive and thrifty farmers in Wabasha county, was instantly killed at his farm in Crook's Valley by the bursting of an emery wheel on which he was sharpening a tool. The wheel was running at a speed of 800 revolution sa minute when it burst. One third of the broken wheel was driven into his head and death resulted instantly. He was 54 years of age and leaves a wife and five children.

Struck Dead in a Schoolroom.

A heavy and drenching rain fell at St. Paul the other day, and reports from all parts of Minnesota show that the storm was of wide extent and generally heavy. In most places it was a rain without other accompaniment, but near Atwater lightning struck a new schoolhouse, killing Solomon Peterson and slightly injuring a number of others.

A Minister Becomes Insane.

Rev. Robert Forbes, of St. Paul, one of the brightest and best-known ministers in the western states, has been sent to the Rochester insane asylum. For many years he has been presiding elder of the Methodist church in that district. His disease is pronounced paranœa, and his delusion is that his wife is unfaithful.

The Twins to Unite.

The first earnest attempt to unite St. Paul and Minneapolis has commenced, the leaders in the movement being Archbishop Ireland, Ex-Gov. Marshall and Senator Stevens. The proposition is to call the new municipality Federal City.

The News Briefly Chronicled.

Ola Nysluen was instantly killed and two other men injured by lightning near Little Falls.

The wife and little child of G. M Miller, of Minneapolis, were overcome by escaping gas. The boy died and the mother was in a critical condition.

Annie Johnson, the daughter of a Scandanavian farmer of Norman county, has married William Saice, an Indian on the reservation.

A LOST BABY.

Meg's Experience at Caring for the Household Pet.

ONE morning Mrs. Sackett put Julia carefully into her carriage. She tucked her up with rugs, afghans and shawls. Meg often wondered how the baby could breathe; but Julia was fat and hearty, and Meg knew that she grew heavier. So it must have agreed with her.

"Keep where it's pleasant and sunny, and take good care of her," said Mrs. Sackett.

She said this every day. Meg took as much care of Julia as any well-meaning but careless girl of fourteen does of a baby. At the crossing she thumped the carriage down into one gutter, and banged it up out of the other. The baby was used to this, and only opened her eyes wide and gasped on arriving at the opposite side.

Meg was just turning the corner when she heard her mother's voice.

"Me-e-eg!"

"Yes'm!"

"Stop at Hurd's and send home three pounds of brown sugar and a half-pound of tea!"

"Yes'm!"

Meg thrust her elbows through the handle of the baby-carriage, and crocheted as she walked. Crocheting tidies was Meg's favorite pastime. She always had a tidy under way.

Hurd's was a corner grocery store, with a door opening on each of the two streets. Meg wheeled the carriage close to the show window, and fastened the wheel with a stone so that it couldn't roll off.

Julia sat still, and gazed with attention at the resplendent advertisements of Jenks' soap and Tompkins' ginger, although she must have known these placards by heart. Babies have to endure so much which they do not understand that it is not surprising that they become philosophers.

Hurd's was crowded, as it always was in the morning, but Meg did not object to waiting. She chatted with Katie Allen and Lou French, and even drew out her tidy and did two rows before the salesman had time to attend to her.

Then she ordered sugar and tea with as grand an air as that worn by Mrs. Ponsonby, who "resided" in a four-story brown-stone house on a stylish avenue, while Meg lived in a "third flat."

"Wait for me!" said Katie Allen. "I've got to go to the butcher's."

"All right," answered Meg.

She waited, and when Katie started, she walked with her, talking briskly, down the street almost a block before she suddenly cried: "Oh! I forgot the baby!"

"What baby?" asked Katie.

"Why, I had our baby with me, and I've gone and left the carriage outside the store!"

"There wasn't any baby at the door when we came out," replied Katie.

"Sure enough," said Meg, "there wasn't."

They stared at each other, and Katie would have laughed but that Meg looked so solemn.

She gazed in bewilderment at Katie's round eyes and then cried:

"Oh, I know! I came in at the other door; that's it! She's round on Harrison street."

The girls ran laughingly back and turned the corner. There was no baby nor carriage there!

"Perhaps you didn't bring her!"

"Yes, I did! I left her just here. I know I did!"

"Could the carriage have rolled down the street?"

Meg looked up and down the street in vain. No carriage was in sight.

"Perhaps a policeman thought she was lost and took her to the station house," suggested Katie.

Meg began to cry. Katie's words seemed cruel.

"Run home, quick, and tell your mother about it!"

Meg took Katie's advice. She ran fast, for she was frightened. Mrs. Sackett heard her story and gave her a severe scolding for her carelessness.

"Some boy took it to scare you. It must be about the neighborhood. Go and look!" she ordered. She was a hard-working woman, and treated things in a matter-of-fact way.

But when Meg came back to report that no one had seen baby or carriage anywhere Mrs. Sackett became alarmed. She forgot to scold this time. She put on her bonnet and searched the street thoroughly. She inquired at all the stores, and even went to the police station.

Coming back from her fruitless expedition, she dropped wearily into a chair by the door. Meg could not bear to see her mother's white face. She picked up her hat and crept downstairs.

An organ man was playing a lively tune, and Lou French's little sisters were dancing to the music. They came up to ask Meg "if the baby was found," and Meg, without looking at them, choked and rushed down the street. She walked on in a breathless state for several blocks, and happened to pause for breath just where there sat, on a doorstep, a boy about twelve years old, with a woebegone and tear-stained face.

"OH! I FORGOT THE BABY."

Meg looked at him and asked, abruptly: "What's the matter? Have you lost a baby?"

"Lost a baby!" shouted the boy, indignantly. "You clear out of this!"

He seemed to look as if he thought she was making sport of him.

Meg was glad to "clear." She had only spoken out of the abundance of her thoughts. She walked along, surveying absently the windows she passed.

At the next corner she stopped again. Three women stood there talking. Said one of them, a small woman:

"I told her, says I: 'Mrs. Smith, you'd better report it at the station-house. It belongs to somebody that's looking for it, of course!' says I."

"She wouldn't take the trouble. She's too elegant!" remarked a stout woman, sarcastically.

"That's so," replied the first speaker. "She said: 'Let them that's lost it look for it. Jimmie brought it home, and he'll have to amuse it till the mother comes,' says she. It serves Jimmie right, though," the stout woman added, decidedly. "A pretty trick, to wheel home the wrong baby!"

Meg felt faint. She leaned against the railing. Whose baby were they talking about?

"Where was his own?" asked the third woman, who didn't seem to understand the circumstances.

"Why, you know he left it beside a store while he played marbles and his mother came along and took it home to frighten him!"

"Ha! ha! ha!"

"You may depend she was mad, though, when he brought home a strange baby!"

"Ha! ha! ha!"

Could two babies be lost in one day? Meg stood in doubt a few minutes, while the two women discussed the story. She remembered the little boy whom she had seen up the street and stepped boldly up to the talkers.

"Will you please tell me who's found a baby?" she asked.

The eyes and tongues of all three were directed at her at once.

"Why!" "Well—have you lost one?" "Mercy on us! do you know whose it is?"

Meg colored but stood her ground.

"Somebody wheeled our baby away while I went into a store on an er-

"ARE YOU REALLY GLAD TO GET THAT KID BACK?"

rand," she explained. "We've been looking for her all the morning!"

The three women were delighted. They all insisted on escorting Meg down the street and into the right house. The mournful little boy sat on the front steps, his attitude showing his thorough disgust with life.

"You'd better go up and take care of your twins, Jimmie!" laughed the sarcastic woman.

Jimmie looked at her, his countenance expressing unutterable things.

"Come, Jimmie, come!" cried the sharp little woman; "take us upstairs, we want to see your mother!"

"This young lady has lost her baby, Jimmie," said the tall woman, kindly. "Perhaps it's the one you've found."

Jimmie's face brightened. He stole a glance at Meg, remembering she had spoken to him. He turned into the house, and led the way upstairs.

"Here's somebody come for that baby!" he announced, gruffly.

He threw the door open, and immediately got behind it, whence he could easily observe proceedings, or escape, if he should find it prudent.

"I thought somebody would come!" exclaimed a drawling voice. "I knew the child would be called for. She evidently belonged to nice people!"

The speaker rocked herself in a low chair. Her hair was in papers, and she wore a pink wrapper. In her lap lay an embroidered tidy, at which she took languid stitches. It may be recorded here that Meg gave up tidies from that day.

She did not stop to examine the lady, however, but snatched up one of the two babies who crawled about the floor, and kissed and hugged Julia more lovingly than she had ever done before.

Jimmie, behind the door, was startled. He wondered if he should feel the same affection for Lauretta, if she was lost for three hours.

The three women all talked together. The lady in the rocking-chair listened complacently, convinced that she had done all that could be expected when she allowed the strange baby to creep on her carpet until called for.

"I told Jimmie," she laughed, "he'd have two babies to take care of, instead of one!"

Jimmie had disappeared into the hall.

"I think I'll take the baby home to mamma; she's fretting about her," said Meg, holding the baby tight. "We're very much obliged to you, ma'am, for keeping her here."

Mrs. Smith bowed politely. She indicated with her forefinger where Meg would find the baby's clothes and wraps.

Meg dressed her and carried her carefully downstairs, followed by a cheerful "Good morning!" from Mrs. Smith. With a light heart she tucked Julia once more into her carriage. Jimmie stood watching her from the door.

"Say!" he called. "Are you really glad to get the kid back?"

Meg laughed out of her gladness. "Why, of course!"

"Did you feel awful bad when you found she was gone?"

"Of course," said Meg, again. "What made you do such a stupid thing as to wheel home the wrong baby?"

"Oh," he said, grinning, "I didn't bring her home!" He lowered his voice. "I was playing with Bob Price, and I sent another fellow, and he didn't know her, you see!"

"Good gracious!" exclaimed Meg, looking at Jimmie with horror.

But Jimmie was bursting with his wrongs.

"Perhaps you think you had the hardest time of it, but if you had to amuse an extra baby three hours, you'd know finding a baby was worse than losing one!"

Meg was so impressed with his air of conviction that she said not a word.—Eva Lovett Carson, in Youth's Companion.

He brought it back to my office the next morning, saying that the musician was sick or something, and that's the last I've seen of him." Mrs. De Pride—"Was the phonograph empty?" Mr. De Pride—"Um! now I think of it, I believe it did have in it your reception of me when I came home late the night before. Maybe he's changed his mind about marrying."—Demorest'sMonthly.

SOLVING A MYSTERY.

The Usual Result of the Mischievous Boy's Inquisitiveness.

A woman boarded a Crawford street car the other day with a basket which had an old check apron tied over the top. She sat down near a boy with a bundle, and he no sooner saw the basket than he concluded there was a mystery concealed therein. For the first five minutes the woman watched so closely that he could do nothing, but the car finally came along to where a street band was playing, and she half rose up to see the crowd. As she did so the boy untied the string and raised the cloth.

"Land o' massy, but what's that?" shouted a man next to him, as he jumped up.

"Look out!"

"Let her go, Gallagher!"

"Stop this car!"

It was a thumping big cat. The cloth was no sooner raised than out he popped, ran over the man's knees, and during the next half minute he jumped all over everybody in the car. He finally came to the rear door, uttered a "spish!" at the conductor and made a long jump into the street and ran up a telegraph pole. Everybody looked at the woman and her basket, and she ran out and got off without stopping the car. Then everybody looked at the boy, and feeling that a speech of some sort was demanded by the occasion, he said:

"Who'd a thought of cats? I s'posed it was new maple sugar or pop-corn!"—Detroit Free Press.

The Origin of La Grippe.

A French physician who has been for some months engaged in official study in Russia for the purpose of discovering, if possible, the origin of la grippe, reports that Russia is its natural habitat, and that it originates there in the insanitary conditions which commonly prevail among the lower classes. The great amount of filth existing in the houses of the people, together with the natural dampness of the soil, afford precisely the conditions necessary for the development of the germ which is supposed to be the cause of this malady. The investigator referred to, claims to have found the germ of the disease in the mud and filth about illy-kept dwellings. He further reports the discovery of the germ of pneumonia associated with the germ of la grippe, which apparently accounts for the frequent association of these two diseases.—Good Health.

At the Food Exhibit.

A sort of tower built up of pies on a table. Exhibitor, a restaurant-keeper. Portly gentleman addresses him.

Mr. Treubieber—And what, pray, my dear sir, may that represent?

Exhibitor—That is the leaning tower of pies, sir.—Judge.

DOMESTIC CONCERNS.

—Both coffee and tea pots should be kept perfectly clean. Once a week boil a little borax in them with enough water to cover the whole inside.

—Cream Fruit Cake: One cup brown sugar, one egg, one cup sour cream, one cup raisins or dried apples chopped fine; one teaspoon cinnamon, one-half a nutmeg, two cups flour. Very nice.—Home.

—Rock Cakes: Ingredients: One-half pound of flour, one-quarter pound of butter, one-quarter pound of sugar, one teaspoonful of baking powder, two eggs. Put small pieces on a buttered tin and bake light brown.—Detroit Free Press.

—Orange Cake: Peel the oranges, and chop very fine; to two oranges take one half of a lemon; squeeze the juice and chop the rest; one teacup of sugar; bake a crust as for short-cake, cut open, butter well, and lay the oranges between. —Home.

—For coffee cake beat well together one-half cupful of sugar; add one-half cupful of molasses and the same amount of strong coffee. Then stir in one teaspoonful of all kinds of spices, one cupful of stoned raisins, one-half teaspoonful of soda and flour to thicken. —N. Y. World.

—Pickled Cherries: Look them over carefully, weigh and allow seven pounds of sugar to twelve pounds of cherries and one quart of cider vinegar. Let the sugar and vinegar come to a boil, skim, and add the cherries. Boil slowly twenty minutes and can. Be sure not to cook so fast as to break them.—Housekeeper.

—Potato Salid: Slice a dozen large, boiled potatoes, put into a dish and pour over them the following mixture: Boil three eggs hard, rub to a smooth paste the yolks, a teaspoonful of mustard, butter, salt and one-half teaspoonful of celery salt and pepper. Half a cupful of vinegar should be next whipped into it, a tablespoonful at a time. Chop up the whites of the eggs, and add.

—Brown Bread Pudding: Grate a slice of brown bread, and mix with it nearly an equal quantity of suet, add a little nutmeg and mace, the juice of half a lemon, and two ounces of candied organge peel chopped very fine; citron can be used as a substitute for the orange peel if it is preferred; half a cupful of sugar; mix all well together, then add four well-beaten eggs, butter a pudding mold, pour in the mixture and boil about three hours; serve with hot or cold sauce, as desired.

—A book-mark which is serviceable as well as ornamental is made of water-color paper, about eight inches long by three inches broad. This is doubled once across its width, and on it is sketched a vine, cluster of flowers or a figure of a child. The sides to the right of the top, or doubled part, are then perforated with three or four holes, and these are laced together with a narrow ribbon, which is tied with short ends at the bottom. It may then be lettered with any suitable words, such as "Good books are good friends," "To marke ye place," "You left off here," and then it is ready to slip over the corner of the page.—N. Y. Ledger.

NEW SUMMER SILKS.

Striking Contrasts and Brilliant Effects Are the Rule.

Changeable twilled silks more finely twilled than surahs, with designs of dots, stripes, waving ribbons, and baskets of flowers, in ecru or white, promise to rival the smoothly-woven India silks as summer dresses. They are made into charming dresses by Paris modistes, who delight in color this season, and add silk of a bright contrasting hue for their trimming. Thus a green and red changeable silk strewn with ecru baskets of flowers is trimmed with pale-blue surah facings, and has a collar, plastron, and a pointed belt of Louis Seize embroidery of rosebuds and gold done on pale-blue cloth. The seamless bodice with coat skirts is a favorite model. The fronts gathered on the shoulders cross diagonally to lap under the blue belt, and the diagonal crossing is edged with a wide frill of the changeable silk laid over pale-blue surah, each frill cut with selvage finish. The wide back is shirred at the waist line. The coat skirts are three loops, ten inches deep when doubled, of the material showing facings of pale blue. They are slightly full, and are gathered to the bodice back of the pointed belt under a twist or scarf of the twilled silk. The mutton-leg sleeves are very long, and without trimming. The skirt of five breadths has the front breadth turned under at the foot and faced with blue to match the coat skirts, then falling open on each side on a flounce of pale blue silk. This design is not confined to changeable silks, but is beautifully carried out in foulards, as one with gray ground strewn with large white leaves, made up with a collar and belt of gold embroidery, and facings of yellow India silk in the frill and coat skirts.

Chameleon silks, as the changeable silks are called, are imported in glossy taffeta with tiny dots and figures, to be used for sleeves, vests and flounces of wool dresses, and also in heavier faille, with chine flowers and ribbon stripes for entire gowns. A lovely house dress of yellow silk shading to pink has chine bouquets of violets, roses, and carnations. It is made all in one piece, the skirt sewed to the round waist, which fastens invisibly in the back under a plastron of olive green velvet that extends the length of the bodice in front also. The silk is plaited full on the high shoulders, and drawn without darts next the velvet pieces. A single under-arm form is on the side. A standing frill of velvet edges the low rounded throat. Sleeves full to the elbow have a gathered frill below. The skirt of six breadths has three breadths for the front and sides, extending around to meet at the back, where three other demi-trained breadths are massed in plaits in scarcely an inch of space at the waist, and spread out widely below. White embroidery in upturned points is set at the foot of the skirt.—Harper's Bazar.

—Besides the roundness of limb and redundancy of health that city women acquire from horseback riding, they gain a faculty for keeping their balance while on their feet in city conveyances. It is a most desirable acquisition for the city woman, whom we are accustomed to see tipping or staggering about in the street cars when forced to stand. Sharp-eyed men who ride horseback know at a glance when a woman standing in a street car is a horsewoman. They know it by the ease and sureness with which she adjusts herself to the motions of the vehicle, and at the same time preserves her feminine dignity.

IN THE ELECTRICAL WORLD.

—Mr. Edison claims that he can cure gout by the simultaneous use of lithine and electricity.

—After long opposition on the part of the vestry, the electric light has finally been introduced into old Trinity church. The new light was first used on Easter Sunday.

—A New York bank's vaults are said to have been fitted up with a combination electric alarm and flashlight camera that automatically takes the picture of the intruder.

—Ingenious engineers suggest that the artesian wells may be developed by means of electrical appliances into a powerful and cheap source of almost unlimited power.

—The North Avenue Railway Co., of Baltimore, Md., will undoubtedly extend its electric railroad to the center of the city, using an elevated roadway for part of the route.

—In Massachusetts electric light companies are compelled by law to place tags upon their wires so that linemen and other workmen may easily distinguish the different classes of wires.

—The Monterey, Cal., Electric Light and Development company has closed a contract with the Edison company for a central station plant to supply Monterey and Pacific Grove with lights. A 540-light incandescent plant is to be in operation in forty-five days.

—On the northern coast of Norway, under latitude 70.5 degrees, is situated the little town of Hammerfest. Every year for months the sun disappears entirely and there is a perpetual night, only lighted once in a while by a beautiful aurora borealis. The town of Hammerfest has just installed an electric light plant, which, it is said, is the one nearest the north pole. The International Thompson-Houston ElectricCo. furnished the apparatus and superintended the installation. There are two dynamos driven by water-power outside the town. One dynamo furnishes current for twelve arc lamps for street lighting. An alternating dynamo of thirty-five amperes and 1,000 volt capacity supplies private customers with incandescent lights on the transformer system.

—President Depew, of the New York Central, says of electricity as a propelling power for railroads: "While it would not surprise me to see electricity rushing our railroad trains along at the rate of fifty or sixty miles an hour, I recognize there must be more great secrets of the mystic power revealed before we accept it. When we can get electricity so cheap that we can produce it as we go at the same cost as we now generate steam, we can talk about electricity as a motive power. Many railroad men are of the opinion that the steam locomotive as a means of propelling cars, is doomed. They say its use involves too great a waste, and that electricity is already successfully employed for the propulsion of street and suburban cars. That is all well enough, and I glory in the inventiveness of our Americans, but electricity will need to be juggled a great deal more before we can run a through express train to Chicago with it."

How to Be Happy.

Some one gives these directions for making life happy: "Take time. It is of no use to fume or fret or do as the angry house-keeper who has got hold of the wrong key and pushes, shakes and rattles it about the lock until both are broken and the door is still unlocked. The chief secret of comfort lies in not suffering trifles to vex us and in cultivating our undergrowth of small pleasures. Try to regard present vexations as you will regard them a month hence. Since we can not get what we like, let us like what we can get. It is not riches, it is not poverty, it is human nature that is the trouble. The world is like a looking-glass. Laugh at it and it laughs back; frown at it and it frowns back. Angry thoughts canker the mind and dispose it to the worst temper in the world—that of fixed malice and revenge. It is while in this temper that most men become criminals."—N. Y. Ledger.

PLEASED WITH HIS SENTENCE.

He Had a Narrow Escape From Going Down for a Century.

A man charged with robbing a stage coach in a remote county of Kentucky was brought to trial the other day, and although he had numerous friends, was sentenced to the penientiary for a term of ninety-nine years. Immediately after the sentence had been pronounced, the prisoner's face lighted up with an expression of joy; and, moving about the court room he began to shake hands with his friends.

"Why, Bob," said a friend, "you act as if you were glad."

"I am," the prisoner answered.

"Did you expect to be hanged?"

"Oh, no."

"Then how can you be pleased at your sentence?"

"Why, you see I was only sentenced for ninety-nine years."

"Yes, I understand that."

"But," said the prisoner, smiling broadly, "I was afraid that instead of ninety-nine they might send me up for a hundred. I tell you, that to a man who is getting along in life one year makes a good deal of difference."—Arkansaw Traveler.

On the move

—Liver, Stomach, and Bowels, after Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets have done their work. It's a healthy movement, too —a natural one. The organs are not forced into activity one day, to sink back into a worse state the next. They're cleansed and regulated—mildly and quietly, without wrenching or griping. One tiny, sugar-coated Pellet is all that's needed as a gentle laxative; three to four act as a cathartic. They're the smallest, cheapest, the easiest to take. Sick Headache, Bilious Headache, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, and all derangements of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels are promptly relieved and cured.

"August Flower"

What Is It For?

This is the query perpetually on your little boy's lips. And he is no worse than the bigger, older, balder-headed boys. Life is an interrogation point. "What is it for?" we continually cry from the cradle to the grave. So with this little introductory sermon we turn and ask: "What is AUGUST FLOWER FOR?" As easily answered as asked: It is for Dyspepsia. It is a special remedy for the Stomach and Liver. Nothing more than this; but this brimful. We believe August Flower cures Dyspepsia. We know it will. We have reasons for knowing it. Twenty years ago it started in a small country town. To-day it has an honored place in every city and country store, possesses one of the largest manufacturing plants in the country and sells everywhere. Why is this? The reason is as simple as a child's thought. It is honest, does one thing, and does it right along—it cures Dyspepsia.

"For years I have been afflicted with bad Digestion, Constipation and Piles. I have tried all the medicines I could get hold of, but all in vain. Even my physicians could not relieve my costiveness. In the meantime I struggled under great pain. Life was a burden. Two weeks ago I saw the Chicago "Times," and my eye fell on an advertisement of Tutt's Pills. I decided to try them. They have worked wonderfully. They keep me regular, don't make me sick, give me an appetite and are curing my piles. I am strong and can walk any distance. If I had had these pills five years ago they would have saved me $10,000; but they have saved my life. Let the afflicted everywhere know their value, which is beyond expression."

—At the special Town meeting held in Delano, on Saturday June 20th, O. L. Billings was chosen moderator, and the ballot box was opened for the voting on a bond for $800.00 to assist in building an iron bridge across the north fork of Crow river. It was voted to make a bond of $800.00, Dated August 1st, 1891. Payable July 1st 1892. Interest not to exceed 9 per cent.

—The Town board have found that the printed blanks formerly used for verifying accounts are not in accordance with the law and propose to pass no more bills presented on them unless corrected in accordance with the law. Too much of our public business has been done in this slipshod manner. The idea that anything is good enough is not right. The way to have good laws is to enforce those we have. When, if they are wrong steps will soon be taken to correct the errors.

—The town board of Review has been at work three days this week as a great many buildings escaped assessment last year, 56 notices were issued, and served by constable John Ball, for the owners to appear and show cause why they should not be on the roll, they then adjourned to meet at the Weldelee building in Delano, Tuesday, at which time and place they met and placed on the assessment roll property omitted, and allowed the bill of B. Nieson for boarding pauper M. Balm three months,$24,00 and adjourned to Wednesday. On Wednesday they proceeded with placing on list property omitted last year, and with correcting the list, and also correcting village property assessment. Bill of Dr. Catlin for $5,00 allowed. Assessment of Mrs. E. Beckers was raised $800,00 on credits. Assessment of A. W. Wittman was raised $100,00, on merchadise, Mrs. Mary Erb was assessed $300,00 on credits, assessment of John Coolen was raised $300,00 on merchandise. Board adjourned till June 27th, Same place.

—Children's Day excercises at the M. E. Church on Sunday, was well attended and the programme well carried out. The church was arranged for the occa sion. Over the altar the words "Glory to the Highest, Peace on Earth, and good will toward men." Back of it, "God is Love." underneath which, was the word in evergreen "Welcome," a profusion of potted and cut flowers covered organ, alter, windows and wherever they could well be placed.

The exercises consisted of concert reading and responses, led by superintendent Charles S. Hawker.

—Editors Buckley and Catlin visited Montrose, on Saturday evening to gather particulars, concerning the murder of little Annie Brunder. This was one of the most cruel affairs that ever occurred in Wright or any other county.

—Dr. Catlin's coat tails were seen streaming out behind him near the Montrose station Monday—Eagle.

That's where they belong, we admit this charge. Editor Buckley was there, on the track to seee the Dr. get aboard the train by the aid of photographer Stadon, who had he been prepared might have had among his pictures that of an uncommonly long face presented by Buckley as the train rolled away for Delano leaving him behind. Editor Buckley believes that those that didn't run didn't ride that time.

—Yesterday evening terminated the exercises in Sibels grove, where a genuine old fashioned campmeeting has been held for the past week. Thirteen tents were pitched, a preachers stand erected, seats provided and all the requisets for convenience and comfort furnished. On Sunday many people from Delano, Montrose and neighboring places drove over to hear a sermon in English, in the afternoon. Rev. Hiller was preaching very eloquently, in German, as the crowd was gathering, when the hour had about arrived for the English sermon the rain began to come down in a heavy shower, when the campers "took to their tents" followed by the visitors who were kindly received and allowed to see something of camp life they were not expecting. "After the mists had cleared away" they again assembled and the boards were turned over, the large crowd found seats and enjoyed a fine sermon, in English, by the Rev. Dr. Nagler, of St. Paul. The meeting was well attended and was enlivened by instrumental and vocal music, and well enjoyed by those present. The ministers in attendance were: Rev. J. G. Bowrs, Minneapolis; Rev. F. L. Nagler, St. Paul Park College; Rev. G. E. Hiller, Toledo, Ohio; Rev. George Fritze, Clearwater; Rev. William Maas, Brownton; Rev. W. F. Fritze, Minneapolis; Rev. W. F. Everhart, Minneapolis; Rev. Fr. Bronkow, Morris; Rev. D. Pfaff, South St. Paul; Rev. W. A. Weiss, Minneapolis; Rev. A. F. W. Krienka, Blooming Grove; Rev. G. Raihle, Montrose. The Woman's Foreign mission Society was represented by Mrs. Dr. Nabarsburg, St. Paul, and Mrs. M. Zimmerman, Minneapolis.

Jonas Johnson Dead.

On Monday morning after a lingering and tedious sickness, consumption, Jonas Johnson passed away. He had long and patiently awaited the appointed hour "or ever the silver cord be loosed." He was born in Sweden in 1832; came to America at the age of 20 years, and to Minnesota in 1856, and was among the earlier settlers of our village where he has been well and favorably known, holding offices of trust at various times, was chairman of county Commissioners. His life was an active one marked by many interesting and instructive events. He was always among friends wherever he chanced to be. His funeral was held at the M. E. Church, on Tuesday afternoon; the pastor, Rev. Jabez Blackhurst, who had frequently visited him in his last hours, preaching the sermon. Rev. J. R. Davies assisted in the funeral ceremonies. His native countrymen came in numbers; a few of the comrades in arms, (he having belonged to company B, 4th Minn. Inf. Vol.) with their gray heads were present. Druids, from Watertown, and his home Grove turned out in regalia; the fire companies, in uniform and with their hook and ladder truck, accompanied the procession of their dead member; old settlers were there; and citizens generally, sought to show, by their presence, respect to the dead, and sympathy for the living friends who mourn his loss. He leaves a wife, daughter and three sons, all of whom make their home here.

JOHNSON.—In Delano, on Monday, June 21, 1891, Jonas Johnson, aged 59 years, 10 months and 9 days.

Card of Condolence.

At a meeting of the Delano Fire Department held June 23, 1891, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, Almighty God, in his infinate wisdom, has called unto Himself the soul of our beloved friend and comrade, Jonas Johnson, be it,

Resolved, That while we bow in humble submission to the edict of His divine will we mourn our comrade who was so soon separated from us. He was a true comrade, a firm friend and a kind father, and in his death we feel we have lost a comrade whose place cannot be easily filled,and that his bereaved companion and children have meet with a loss that cannot be restored to them on earth.

Resolved, That while we too well know that we can do but little to assuage their grief, we tender to the relatives our earnest and sincere sympathies in their sad afflictions, trusting that they may find consolation in their great sorrow through Him who doeth all thing well.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions, signed by the committee, be presented to the bereaved family of our late comrade, and that they be spread upon our minutes by the secretaries of our department.

County Cullings

It is reported that the public examiner dropped in on our county officials the other day and that some of them may be found wanting in their ways.

The prsss of business at the county auditors office one day this week was so great that he hadn't time to furnish our equalization board with last year's figures for comparison.

The people of Montrose are to be commended for their coolness and good judgment in not fastening upon their community the reputation of ruffians by hanging, on circumstantial evidence, the young man arrested for the cruel murder committed near their place last week.

The EAGLE, after its customary manner, insinuates considerable in commenting on an extract published in last week's GAZETTE. Among other things it seems to think the GAZETTE not apt to have a libel suit. We see no reason why the GAZETTE or any other newspaper that tells the truth need fear such things. For our part we are not courting one.

Ninth District Convention.

"In the sweet month of June." When life is abundant, and busy and sweet, the white ribboners of the ninth district gathered in annual convention in the M. E. Church, at Clear Lake, Sherburne Co., forming (though not as large as usual in numbers.) a company of our representative women, large in heart, earnest in purpose and devoted to the sacred cause, the grand work for "God and Home and Every land."

The cordial greetings of the Clear Lake friends, the bright earnest faces and tasteful decorations of flowers and plants, all combined to give a cheerful atmosphere in which to labor for two busy days.

The convention was called to order by the President Mrs. V. W. Voorhees of Minneapolis, on Tuesday evening, the 16th. The devotional services were conducted by Rev. E. Warren, pastor of the M. E. church, at Clear Lake. The address of welome was given by Rev. Geo. Dewing, of Clear Lake, which was full of cordiality and good cheer as well as some caustic remarks on the duties, responsibilities and grand opportunities of the women of the W. C. T. U. The response by Miss Hannah Berry, of Anoka contained much in a few words. The solo by Mrs. M. M. Nichols, of Minneapolis, was enjoyed by all; after which our state organizer, Mrs. R. Newcomb delivered an address on the "Origin, sphere, object and methods of the W. C. T. U."

Wednesday morning the convention opened by devotionals, led by Mrs. S. S. Sickles, of Minneapolis: The following committees were appointed by the chair. On Resolutions, Mesdames Sickles, Nichols, Neal, Stewart and Chase. On Credentials, Mrs. Canny and Furgeson. The reports of County Unions were most gratifying with no intimations that there were any unpleasant features in the work, but full of promise of future success. The report of Hennepin County by the President Mrs. Francis Neal gave 22 Unions with membership of 616 have many successes to record with great reason to be hopeful for the temperance cause, even in Minneapolis.

The Wright County Union reported by the President Mrs. M. E. Hoover, and by Mrs. M. E. Thompson of Minneapolis was excellent, Wright Co. will take up the year's work with fresh courage and resolutions to make it the best they have ever had. Anoka and Isanti Counties were reported by Mrs. L. G. Chase.

The report of Sherburne County by Mrs. C. E. Wilson was highly entertaining an encouraging from the fact that though less than six months old it numbers twelve devoted noble Christian women who are conducting successfully a Loyal Temperance Legion, all the different branches of W. C. T. U. work besides with a courage born of their convictions invited and right royally entertained the 9th district convention they are certainly worthy of emulation.

Report of the Minneapolis conference of Unions and White Ribboners was given by Mrs. C. R. Newcomb in her usual terse and interesting manner urging upon every W. C. T. U. woman the duty and privilege of supporting and reading the state paper.

The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted in the following for President Mrs. V. W. Voorhees; Treasurer Mrs. M. E. Thompson; Sec. Mrs. F. V. Denton.

Report of organizers by Mrs. C. R. Newcomb was encouraging. All along the line was heard words of cheer and healthful progress, increase in membership, young ladies coming to the front Loyal Legions springing up everywhere, and new fields for work opening among those whose pulpits have been heretofore closed to women. This is a matter of great congratulation.

Noon-tide prayer meeting was conducted by Mrs. F. Neal. Adjourned for dinner arranged by the ladies of Clear Lake at the hotel.

Wednesday afternoon session opened at 2.00. Devotionals led by Mrs. T. Neal. Reports of Loyal Temperance Legions of several of the different Unions were given as follows: Mrs. T. Neal for Hennepin, Mrs. Canny for Western Ave., Mrs. M. Nichols, Central Union, Mrs. M. D. Woodson 8th, ward, all of Minneapolis, and Mrs. A. T. Barker for Monticello, all had encouraging words to offer of work being done. Mrs. Neal said in her report "That one of the charms of the meeting was the pleasure of seeing those who are engaged in this grand work for the children, they are our hope. We can teach them that alcohol is a poison better than we can some temperance people who have not found it out yet. Let us bend every twig, and bind every bud of promise in the never fading wreath of Christian intelligence so that when we lay our armor down the noble boys and girls of our Loyal Temperance Legions will be ready to take it up, and grandly work on for "God and home and native land."

"Straws" a very interesting and logical paper by Mrs. S. P. Bradish, of Minneapolis was read by the Sec'y Mrs. Thompson, her reasons why every woman should join the Union were convincing. Mrs. Gearheart, of Elk River, gave an interesting talk on her personal work in Crusade, in Ohio, her words were inspiring and were received with especial favor by all present

Report of Y. W. C. T. U. of Anoka, by Miss Mamie B. Chase, of Anoka, was certainly one of the best if not the best and most encouraging report of the convention; it showed their zeal and enthusiasm in the work, their different plans of work and their determination to press on with still more vigor. Their Loyal Temperance Legion numbers above 170, alive and alert, there is certainly great reason to hope much for the Y's of Anoka. Such glowing reports should inspire every temperance worker, and arouse many from their apathy and indifference.

Model mother's meeting was conducted by Mrs. Francis Neal, a model mother, she plead eloquently for the children, the home, carrying consoling thoughts with her words to mothers and friends, it was an earnest talk and one of the great helps in our works.

Police Station work by Mrs S. S. Sickles of Minneapolis was very instructive and received the commendation it so richly deserved. The question box contained some practical questions which were skilfully made plain by Mrs. C. R. Newcomb.

Mrs. M. D. A. Woodson, of Minneapolis, read a very excellent paper, on "Our Cause." it was well written and gave much inspiration for future effort in our work.

Committee on resolutions reported each resolution was voted on separately and passed (reporter failed to secure them and cannot give them in this report.)

Three invitations were received for place of holding the next District convention two from Minneapolis, one from the Y's of Anoka, it was voted to accept the invitation from Anoka the time to be arranged by the Executive Committee and Anoka Union.

A rising vote of thanks was extended the citizens of Clear Lake for their uniform hospitality cordial reception and unworried attention in contributing so generously to the enjoyment of all. All came away happy, feeling they had been benefited and royally entertained by their sisters of the Clear Lake W. C. T. U.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

The evening session was opened with singing by the choir and devotions led by Rev Geo. Dewing. After which the Demorest silver medal contest was participated in by two gentlemen and six young ladies, all of Clear Lake. All the young people honored themselves and the cause. The medal was awarded to Miss Vine White. Judges Mrs. M. Nichols Mrs. M. D. A. Woodson and Mrs. E. A. Stacy. The pledge was circulated at the close of the exercises receiving thirty names including eight new members for the Clear Lake Union. The customary W. C. T. U. collection being taken, the W. C. T. U. doxology sung, the ninth district convention was adjourned to meet a year hence at Anoka.

CONSIDER THE RAVENS.

GEORGE MACDONALD.

Lord, according to thy words,
I have considered thy birds;
And find their life good,
And better the better understood;
Sowing neither corn nor wheat
They have all they can eat
Reaping no more than they sow,
They have all they can stow;
Having neither barn or store,
Hungry again they eat more.

Considering, I see too that they
Have a busy life and plenty of play.
In the earth they dig their hills deep,
And work well, though they do not heap;
Then to play in the air they are not loath,
And their nests between are better than both.
But this is when there blow no storms,
When berries are plenty in winter warms;
When their feathers are thick and oil is enough
To keep the cold out and the rain off,
If there should come a long hard frost,
Then it looks as thy birds were lost.

But I consider further, and find,
A hungry bird has a free mind;
He is hungry to-day, not to-morrow;
Steals no comfort, no grief doth borrow,
This moment is his, thy will hath said it,
The next is nothing till thou hast made it.

The bird has praise, but has no fear,
Which is the worst of any gear;
When hunger and cold and harm betide him
He gathers them not to stuff inside him
Content with the day's ill he has got,
He waits just, nor haggles with his lot;
Neither jumbles God's will
With driblets from his own still.

But next I see in my endeavor,
The birds do not live forever;
That cold or hunger, sickness or age,
Finishes their earthly stage;
The rook drops without a stroke
And never gives another croak;
Birds lie here, and birds lie there
With little feathers all astare;
And in thy own sermons, thou
That the sparrows fall dost allow,
It shall not cause me any alarm,
For neither so comes the bird to harm
Seeing our Father, thou hast said,
Is by the sparrow's dying bed;
Therefore it is a blessed place
And the sparrow in high grace,
It cometh, therefore, to this, Lord;
I have considered thy word,
And henceforth will be thy bird.

—The American Rural Home.

I. DONNELLY has issued a call for a meeting of the Committee of the State Farmers alliance and also of the State Central committee of the People's party appointed at the Cincinnati Convention. The meetings are called for the 7th day of July next, at the Merchants Hotel, in St. Paul.

A PROCLAMATION has been issued by Governor Boies of Iowa, stating that he has made personal examination into the facts connected with the recent flood at Cherokee, and finds 100 families in need of immediate assistance, and calling upon the charitably inclined to contribute to their relief.

THE St. Peter Tribune offers to show to any doubting Thomas "in St. Peter, Nicollet or Le Sueur Counties" a specimen of tin plate for roofing, made in this country. If any of our county folks would like to look at the curiosity we presume the editors of that paper would not refuse them the privilege. It is claimed the Black Hills country has fine tin mines and as the country settles up we presume they will be utilized.

COMMENTING on the Gazette's suggestion that the Republican national convention might find a place to meet in Delano's groves, form an acquaintance with the farmers, learn the feelings on the McKinley bill, Reciprocity, etc, etc. and that for drinks milk is plenty, or water, the Sherburne County Times asks. "Don't the Gazette know milk is for babes? We answer, yes, and ain't the delegates from the "protected INFANT industries?"

Farmers at the Grove.

The picnic and Farmers Alliance celebration which was advertised to take place at Goodsell's grove on Wednesday, was not as much of a success as was anticipated. The wheather on the eventful day was not calculated for out-door gatherings, especially in the forenoon. However, a number of the country folk ventured out in the rain and started toward town, hoping that brighter skies would soon appear and that they might have the pleasure of hearing the eloquent Ignatius. The rain ceased, but the expected orator did not come. Local Speakers, Rev. David Murdock and others, gave a short talk at the grove in the afternoon to a fair sized audience. The Albion band was promptly on hand, at 9 A. M. and in turn with the Howard band discoursed some of their best strains for the entertainment of those who sought shelter in stores and porches. It is hoped that a more successful time may be enjoyed before the season is ended.—Howard Lake Herald.

TARIFF A TAX.

We all Help to Pay It.

That tariff is a tax few care longer to dispute. It is levied upon imports for the purpose of raising money to run the government; to pay the officer's salaries: to pay pensions: to pay Indians, and some is used to hire ships to carry mails across the oceans. Some is used in building custom houses and public buildings in cities, and for various other purposes. It is levied upon the articles of daily use. Every family in our land whether rich or poor feels more or less, its weight. Families are apt to be larger among poor people, and require more to eat and more to wear if they are provided for, as most folks are, than do the rich, consequently the necessaries of life, groceries, clothing and working tools they must have, and when they buy they must pay more for the articles than if there was no tariff. One of the objects of the tariff, as now levied, is said to be to protect home industries: to keep out articles made or produced in other countries and give our own people a chance to trade with each other; this it would seem would raise the price and we that are not making articles to sell would be obliged to pay more for them. Unless it did raise the price above what it would be if imports were received free of course it would not aid the manufacturer. If a man buys a hoe, a plow, a saw or an ax, he must pay on it a tax to the government or a tax to the manufacturer who is protected: otherwise the tariff neither protects nor raises revenue. Sugar has long been protected, now it is on the free list and see the difference in size of the package carried home for a dollar. A part of the tax collected on other articles goes to pay the bounty 2cts per pound for that produced in this country. In Minnesota we understand two parties are to receive some of this bounty. If placing Sugar on the free list makes sugar cheaper why not place other things on the free list and let us buy where we can buy the best for the least money? This is natural. We see our citizens going from one store to another to find out who keeps the best articles for the least money, and who will pay the most for what they have to sell. Some will even drive to Minneapolis to get a cent or two more for their butter or eggs, poultry, potatoes or beans, and think they can save something for their trouble and time; this is natural. But why not allow goods shipped to this country from other land? Why not allow the Germans to buy the fine woolens made at their homes, in the Fatherland, by hard labor, and weary bodies who would gladly aid us in eating up our wheat, pork and other produce? Why not allow the linens from the Emerald Isle free access to this country, that the fathers and mothers, and relatives of many of our most respected citizens may procure the necessaries of life in return? Why not Americans, native born and adopted be allowed to use the fish procurred upon the coasts of Norway by the sturdy sailors who are brothers, sons, or fathers of many of our Scandinavian citizens instead of having them taxed so high that many people must use substitutes, or go without. Would not the question of commercial marine soon be settled? Would not American ships sail into ever port with the products of our country returning to our harbors ladened with the articles of use and luxury from all lands, and instead of taking our money out of one pocket and putting it in to the other would not we as a nation, as one of the most productive nations on earth stand an equal chance with any of accumulating wealth while living in a far more luxurious manner at less cost than now? Would not a very slight duty on imports suffice for government expenses then? When it would not be necessary to spend millions in subsidizing this, and that, and the other scheme. Some wouldbe politicians are found in our own vicinity that actually argue that they don't pay one CENT into the United States treasury for government expenses? If every farmer and every other citizen in our county don't pay his or her share into the treasury, we would like to know who does. When you look over the tariff list and see what things are taxed you must admit that you are possessed of more than average self denial if you deny yourself and families the use of many of the articles affected by the tariff. Though your money does not fall from your hand directly into the U. S. Treasury, it gets there all the same, sooner or later, and the more hands the articles have passed through before reaching you, the consumer, the more profit is charged up to you on account of the additional cost to the articles caused by adding the tariff tax. All persons purchasing food, clothing, household furniture, building materials, tools, and impliments, contribute their mite to the government tax. Whether they be rich or poor. The poor give more in proportion to their money than the rich do. It is astonishing to think that people who read newspapers every day, and transact their own business will stand up and argue in this enlightened age that they do not pay a CENT of tax to help run the government of our country. How can they be brought to think so? We all pay tax through this system.

DEMOCRATIC CONFERENCE.

Pursuant to a call issued at the request of the Democratic members of the House of Representatives a meeting of Democrats was held at the Nicollet House in Minneapolis on Wednesday, last. The meeting was called to order by Mayor Winston, of Minneapolis, who in a neat little speech welcomed to his city the Democrats from all over the State. He said Minneapolis was becoming famous as a city of conventions and that they proposed to have as many Democratic conventions as any other kind. He proposed the name of the Hon. Robert Smith Mayor of St. Paul for temporary chairman of the meeting. Mayor Smith said that owing to pressing business he would be unable to act. Mayor Durant of Stillwater another Democratic Mayor, of a third Democratic city, was next named for the position. Mayor Durant accepted in a neat little speech. C. A. Moody was then chosen Secretary and the meeting was open for business. A motion was made to appoint a committee of 13 on Resolutions when a delegate objected as he did not wish to mix superstitions in his politics. The committee was enlarged to 15 with Mayor Winston as chairman. A committee of 7 on permanent organization was next proposed and appointed with Lars M. Rand chairman. On motion the meeting was then adjourned to meet at Windom hall, the Nicollet quarters being to small, at 2 P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

At about 2:30 P. M. the meeting was called to order by chairman Durant. The committee on permanent organization recommended the tempoary organization be made permanent. Recommendation adopted.

Mayor Winston chairman of the committee on Resolutions then read the report as follows:

Resolved. That we thank all who have been instrumental in calling us together for the zeal they have shown for the cause of Democracy, and at the outset declare that the one purpose of this convention to be to take steps looking to the unification of the party, and all holding views in common with our own, and to the end when the campaign of '92 shall open Minnesota shall be in condition to enter the field with a well disciplined and thoroughly loyal army corps; and in so doing we propose to work in full harmony with the Democratic state contral committee and organizations and committees who desire the success of Democratic principles in ensuing campaigns, and ask and expect their hearty co-operation and assistance.

Resolved. That the Democratic party being a party ever on record as in favor of a "government of the people, for the people, by the people," should continue its good work for the welfare of the whole community, and disregarded and ignore and refuse to recognize the existence of any and all factions, rings or cliques designed to divert it from its common purpose to the interest of any man or set of men, and that "with malice toward none, with charity for all," we declare that true to our principles, we will continue to labor for the common weal, and will relegate to the rear any disturbing or discordant element, wherever found, that may seek to control the party or dictate measures in its own interests.

Resolved. That the result in Minnesota at the last general election demonstrated the fact that the members of the Democratic party, ignoring all petty biekerings and obstacles, need only place their shoulders to the wheel and keep steps to the music of Jefferson and Jackson and their many worthy coadjutors and followers, to march forward to victory in 1892; to which end we urge the Democracy throughout the state to at once organize local clubs and organize a happy, united and invincible Democracy which shall, under properly constituted leaders, redeem the state and aid in placing the nominees of the national Democratic convention in the presidential and vice-presidential chairs, with a congress which shall truly represent the people.

Resolved. That an executive committee be selected by this convention, composed of twenty-seven members, of which four members shall be appointed at large and three members from each congressional district, the president and secretary of this convention to be members ex-officio, said executive committee to devise ways and means to carry the foregoing into effect, with full power, so far as the convention can confer the same, to appoint sub-committees, as well as auxiliary committees, and to do any and all acts which in their judgment may redound to the credit and benefit of the Democratic party and of the people in whose behalf it was organized and continues to exist.

Resolved. That when this convention adjourns it be to assemble at such time and place prior to any state convention, as shall be deemed best by the executive committee, it being fully understood that the doors shall be open for the full and proper representation of all that may be in harmony with these resolutions said assembly to be called by the executive committee, who are hereby empowered to arrange all necessary conditions and details.

The report was adopted, when the Hon. D. W. Lawler, of St. Paul was called on for a speech, which he made in his usual eloquent style, predicting a sweeping victory for Democracy in 1892.

John Ives gave one of his patriotic outbursts of eloquence. H. C. Stivers of Brainard, L. M. Rand and D. B. Johnson of Minneapolis, and Senator Keller of St. Cloud, each warmed up to the occasion, and with the eloquent addresses from the Democratic Mayors of three Democratic cities of the state of Minnesota with its three out of five Democratic congressmen to sit in the Democratic congress when it next meets, it looks as if the Democrats will, by an overwhelming majority re-seat Cleveland, whose name was cheered and applauded whenever mentioned, not because of any particular personal prefferment but on account of his persistence in party principles believed in by the rank and file of Minnesota's citizens, as well as by the voters of the United States. Democrats are waking up early this time and propose to work for their principles. That is right.

Exhibit of the Colored Race.

CHICAGO, June 30.—A delegatjor of notable colored people called on Director General Davis and Maj. Handy to-day to discuss plans for an exhibit at the exposition by their race. The delegation recommended the appointment of James M. Townsend, the recorder of the general land office at Washington, as a directer or manager of any exhibit the colored people might make.—The Globe.

RAINY WEATHER.

HOME MAGAZINE.

A goose and a duck met in a farm-yard
In terrible rainy weather;
Said the goose, "Madam Duck, pray how dy'e do?
You seem in very fine feather."

"Why, yes," said the duck; "this mud is so nice?
We've puddles and pools in plenty;
I love to roll over in every one—
This morn I'm sure I've found twenty."

"Ah, well," said the goose, "I agree with you
It's a time for us to be merry.
I hate those hot days when the sun shines bright;
So let us sing high-down-derry.

"And we'll have a dance in this nice, soft mud,
Without any cards to invite us;
And your young ones shall quack and mine shall hiss.
Such music we'll have to delight us!"

ADVICE.

When boys and girls are kept at home
By very rainy weather,
Remember then that ducks and geese
Are in their finest feather.

It is rumored that there will be another new threshing outfit in this neighborhood this year.

ANNANDALE.

Elder Smith officiated morning and evening in the Methodist Church, last Sabbath.

Lightning struck the dwelling of Mr. Henry Stewart about two miles east of here, last Saturday morning. The damage to the house was slight. Mr. and Mrs. Stewart were at table eating breakfast and both were paralyzed by the shock, Mrs. S. falling forward onto the table, both soon recovered, only Mrs. H. has been afflicted with a headache ever since. Their children were still in bed and were uninjured.

The Blind man gave an entertainment in the Cotton Hall, last Saturday evening, and at the close, a vote was proposed and taken to ascertain which was the most popular young lady present. The contest was, mainly, between Miss Ada Ponsford, of Corinna, and Miss Houchin, of Albion. The voting was spirited but the former won the prize by a small majority: After which it was proposed to find out which was the handsomest young man present. The vote was taken and it was announced that Mr. L. R. Williams, our popular young Druggist, was elected, "Oh Golly" said he and being commendably modest, melted out of sight and was not visible, to naked eye, again till Monday morning. It will be entertaining to note the inquisitive glances that will be cast through the Drug store windows to see the handsomest man in town. But, he says, "Dock will get his pay for this."

Dr. Ridgway, at his office in this village, assisted by Dr. Munger of Fair Haven, performed, successfully, a very delicate surgical operation.

Are you coming to Watertown, on the 4th? They are going to have a fine celebration there Come! Every body.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

Washington, June 26, 1891.

Mr. Harrison and his cabinet have had a time to-day over the present and prospective condition of the Treasury. They have got a temporary breathing spell, and the deficit which existed a few days ago has been succeeded by a small, available cash balance; but soon after the first of July calls will begin to be made for cash to meet the appropriations made at the last session of the billion dollar Congress, and the question is where to get the money to pay them? The revenues of the Government both from customs duties and internal revenue are falling off at an appalling rate. The extension of the $50,000,000 4½ per cent bonds, while a little help, can hardly be considered a drop in the bucket when the amount that will be needed is considered.

Something has got to be cut off; that's as certain as anything can be. But to decide what, is what is driving the administration wild. All this month thousands of pension certificates, all ready to be issued, have been piled up in the Pension Office in order to stave off the payment of money for which they call. An apparent gain of a few millions is to be made by changing the form of the Treasury Statement so as to show the money on deposit with National banks as "available cash" in the Treasury, and Secretary Foster is credited with intending, if he can get the Attorney General to give an opinion that it will not be illegal, to issue certificates for general circulation against the twenty-odd million dollars of fractional silver now in the Treasury. It looks at this time very much as if the Democratic House of Representatives will find it necessary to investigate some of the contemplated financial juggling, and as if there was going to be serious trouble, perhaps impeachment for somebody.

So many of the candidates for Speaker of the House have been in town this week that every body was saying: "Well, the next Speaker of the House is in town". The sentence was originated by a bright newspaper man when McMillin joined Mills, Springer, Bynum, Wilson and several others already here.

Repersentative Breckenridge, of Arkansas, has some interesting, views of the present political condition of the country. He says: "At present the condition is that of general unrest: for thirty years the public mind has been clouded by the smoke of battle: public sentiment in all matters of politics has been more or less influenced by the remembrance of the war, and prejudice has entered into every process of reasoning. Now the people are beginning to think for themselves, and economic questions, not sentiment, are occupying their attention. The people are not satisfied that things should stay for all time as they are: they know that there's something wrong and they are determined to right it They will go at it awkwardly, not being used to dealing with such questions, and they will make some mistakes and do things that will be hurtful, but in the end they will accomplish the reforms they seek, and I can see that the final result will be a triumph for democracy.

Few people could, guessing off handed, come within many million dollars of the amount paid out in pensions by this Government since July 1, 1861. The figures were this week made up at the pension office and here is the total footing: $1,281,716,000. Just think, one billion, two hundred and eighty-four million, seven hundred and sixteen thousand dollars. If this money was all in fifty dollar bills the average man's life would not be long enough to count it, not even if it were possible for him to work continuously at the task.

Col. Robt G. Ingersoll and Mr. J. W. Mackay, known to fame as one of the Bonanza Kings, were closeted with Mr. Harrison for nearly two hours one day this week, and there is reason for believing that the subject under discussion was silver. It is somewhat puzzling why these gentlemen should have attempted to surround their visit to Washington with so much mystery. At the hotel where they stopped the name of neither of them appeared on the register. Such a precaution was absurd when both of them are well known to every newspaper man of any prominence in Washington.

"Lige" Halford, the President's private secretary, is now regarded as a political boss. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia, one democrat, one republican and one Army officer, who is supposed to have no politics, decided to remove the Health officer, a republican against whom charges had been preferred, and to appoint in his place a democrat, and their intention was announced in the local papers before it was officially consummated. "Lige" called a halt, because the new man was a democrat, and Mr. Harrison when he arrived the next day endorsed "Lige", and no change was made.

A BLAINE BOOMER.

Alger Continues Plugging for the Man From Maine.

OMAHA, June 29.—Gen. Alger, who arrived from his Western tour yesterday, said in an interview that "without doubt, if Secretary Blaine wants the presidential nomination he can have it. I think this feeling is generally gaining throughout the West, and his acceptance is all that is necessary. In the East I am confident he is stronger than four years ago. I have personal knowledge to the effect that many of his most influential opponents of 1888 are now anxious to have him nominated. Harrison is second choice—not that his administration has not been successful, but for the simple reason that Blaine is the most popular man in America.

"From my observations through the Western states, Cleveland has the lead in Democratic popular favor. His silver ideas have injured his chances very little. I scarcely think the Alliance will be in the field with a national ticket, but the old soldiers will certainly cut more figure in the approaching contest than ever before. That element virtually nominated Harrison in 1888, and its strength will settle the contest in any event."—Globe.

People's Party Constitution and By-Laws.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., June 29.—The constitution and by-laws, as revised and changed by Secretary Schilling, of the new People's party, were made public to-day. The articles call for the organization and regulation of local clubs to be conducted under the auspices of the national body. Stated meetings shall be held by every club. The president shall be elected at each meeting. Any citizen of the town or county may become a member by signing the declaration of principles and the platform of the national body and pledging himself unqualifiedly to support the principles as enunciated. Any member who makes a motion to indorse a candidate of or to enter into fusion with any other political party, shall immediately cease to be a member of the club and of the new party.—St. Paul Globe.

GERMANY'S production of silver in 1890 was 770,000 pounds, about 9 per cent. of the world's product.

TWENTY-SIX of the forty-four states, a considerable majority of all, have now given women some form of suffrage.

HALLINGTON BOOTH and Mrs. Booth are about to start on a nine thousand-mile trip to inspect the various branches of the Salvation army.

THE casualty record for the English football season just over shows twelve cases of death "directly attributable to injuries received in matches."

THE news comes via German sources that Thomas A. Edison is writing a novel which is to be dramatized for the stage. If anybody should be able to electrify an audience it is Edison.

NATHANIEL TAFT, of Middletown, N. Y., for forty years past a locomotive engineer and for thirty-five years in the service of the Erie railway, has never met with an accident on the road.

A. J. DREXEL heads the list of Philadelphia rich men with twenty-five million dollars. The city has one hundred and sixty millionaires whose total holdings foot up over four hundred million dollars.

THE slot machine has been put to a new use in Birmingham, Eng., being applied to the gas meter in tenement houses. When gas is wanted you drop a two-penny piece in the slot and get gas for an hour, at the end of which time it goes out and it requires another coin to turn it on.

YOU would think Stanley awed enough black men in Africa to match just one Pullman porter—just one. But you're mistaken. A porter remarked in San Francisco the other day that when he finished a run with Stanley this stern ruler of men yielded up to the potentate of the Pullman just $100.

GEN. HIPPOLYTE, of Hayti, is about sixty years of age and of coal-black complexion. He is the political idol of the pure blacks, whose blood has not been contaminated by intermarriage with the creoles. He is the son of a college professor of Port au Prince and is a man of considerable learning and cultivation.

THE craze for foreign travel is illustrated in a New York girl and the daughter of a prominent judge, who "has made several trips to Europe, and only last week," says an Eastern journal, "made her first visit to Brooklyn." The ignorance of American travelers in Europe of their own country has frequently been commented upon by intelligent foreigners.

MRS. ROSETTA R. HOSTETTER, of Pittsburgh, is one of the five richest women in America. She is the widow of the manufacturer of the celebrated bitters, and enjoys an income larger than that of most crowned heads. She travels a great deal, and is accompanied only by a maid and a secretary who assists her in taking care of the $20,000,000 her husband left.

JOHN RUSSELL YOUNG, who knows Sir William Gordon Cumming well, says of him: "A high-tempered, impetuous, brusque, outspoken, resolute man, with capacity for instant anger, sensitive, irritable, ready with a word or blow, the military temperament at times unduly developed; stern with men, infinite sympathy for dogs and dumb domestic animals, I could imagine anything of Sir William Gordon Cumming rather than his cheating at cards."

THERE has been opened in Boston the first woman's outdoor gymnasium which the world has seen. It is on the Charles river embankment, and is surrounded by a high board fence. All suitable appliances for exercise are supplied, together with a running track having eight laps to the mile. A city ordinance has been passed that will allow the arrest and punishment of those who even stop in teams to watch the gymnasium classes at work.

SCARPOLOGY, or the science of telling the character of a man by the wear of the soles of his boots, has been attentively studied by a Swiss doctor of the name of Galli. Speaking briefly, wear at the back of the heels invariably indicates conceit, pride and vanity. Soles worn toward the toes demonstrate deceit and even criminality, while a sole that shows an equal amount of wear on every part of the surface denotes a frank, upright and fearless character.

A MAN in Meade county, Kan., sold a section of land, fenced entire, good pump and windmill, house, sheds, etc., and free of encumbrance, for one dollar per acre during the dry spell in the earlier part of the season. The man had fifty acres sown to wheat and this was thrown in. The rain came, the wheat revived, and it now looks as good as any in Kansas and it alone will more than reimburse the purchaser of the land. The former owner has, it is said, already expended half the proceeds derived from the sale of the land in hiring able-bodied men to kick him for his folly.

THE new explosive, ecrasite, is the invention of two Austrian engineers named Siersch and Kubin. Its power in relation to dynamite is declared to be as 100 to 70, and it can be carried from place to place with perfect safety. It emits a thick black smoke, and the detonating noise is louder than that of gunpowder, but shorter, sharper and clearer. A bombshell loaded with it explodes with such terrible results that experiments against palisades representing 100, 250 and 500 men, at ranges of 300, 750 and 1,200 meters, recorded marks on every division of the palisade standing for a soldier.

THE New York Coffee Piping and Pneumatic Tube Luncheon Company (limited) propose to save time, it is said, by doing away with lunch counters entirely and laying mains and pneumatic pie and sandwich tubes through the streets and into every office, the same as gas or water. The business man sits at his desk and simply turns a faucet when he wants a cup of coffee and pulls a lever when he desires a piece of pie. The pie will be delivered in a rubber cylinder, and a meter will be attached to the coffee pipes, accurately registering the amount drawn during the month.

LATER.

Opposed to Irish.

BERLIN, June 30.—Copies of the full text of the second memorial presented by Herr Cahensly to the papal secretary, Cardinal Rampola, have been put into circulation.

The greatest importance is attached to the memorial. If, as it is hoped, the holy see can be induced to follow out its recommendations and appoint a large number of German clergymen as bishops in the United States the German influence across the Atlantic will be vastly increased and redound to the growth of the home German government in American affairs.

THE Farmers Review of the 1st, regarding harvest says: Harvesting is progressing rapidly in all the winter wheat states except Michigan and Wisconsin. The latest reports from correspondents would indicate the average yield to the acre in the various states where harvesting is sufficiently progressed to obtain reliable estimates, to be as follows: Illinois, 17 bushels; Indiana, 20; Ohio, 15 to 20; Kentucky, 10 to 15; Missouri, 19; Kansas, 18; Iowa, 19 to 20.

THE Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, will sell round trip excursion tickets between all stations, at a fare and a third for the round trip, except between points in North and South Dakota, where the rate will be a fare and a fifth, and further, excepting that these rates will not apply between St. Paul and Minneapolis and Chicago. Tickets will be sold on July 3rd and 4th, good to return until July 6th, inclusive.

FRANK PIERCE fatally shot E. H. Wishart at Des Moines, Ia., on the 30th. Pierce for years has been a prohibition searcher and has before shot several parties. It took forty policemen to protect him from the mob when he was jailed.

FRED STEINMAN, an iron moulder at Chicago on the night of the 30th, fatally shot his wife and then blew out his brains. Cause jealousy.

FORTY-THREE persons were poisoned by ice cream at a church festival at Brushton, N. Y. on the 29th.

A RAGING STREAM.

Missouri River Towns in Danger of Inundation—Residents of a Kansas City Suburb Driven from Their Homes by High Water—Gov. Boies Asks for Aid for Sufferers at Cherokee, Ia.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., June 30.—The Missouri river at this point is at a dangerously high stage. The water is the highest it has been since the great flood of 1881. It still lacks several feet of the record of that year, nevertheless much damage has been done and much more is feared, as the different river cities above report higher water than that here.

The water is rising steadily 1 inch an hour and will probably rise 2 or 3 feet more in the next day or two. Parts of Harlem, a hamlet just across the river, have already been submerged and about twenty-five families have left their homes. They have taken their household goods and are camping on the high ground.

The people have been made very nervous by the accounts of the disastrous floods in Iowa and they are taking no chances. Many of those who at present are in no danger have moved out of their houses and sought absolute safety in various places where the flood cannot reach. All the farms along the river are submerged and their crops ruined.

The embankment of the Hannibal & St. Joe road approaches the river at right angles across from this city. This embankment has served as a sort of levee and has protected a vast expanse of river bottom below it from the flood. Some fears are expressed that the embankment may not be able to withstand the pressure. If it should give way much valuable lands will be submerged, including the track of the Kansas City Racing association. In view of the emergency the horses which have been stabled there have been removed to places of safety.

On this side of the river the high water has caused no flood excepting as it has backed up the waters of the Kaw, which empties in the Missouri at this place. The back waters have submerged much of the lowlands, and the 100 or more squatters living there have been obliged to abandon their homes. The water has also backed up in the sewers in Kansas City, Kan., and has run out of the manholes, flooding various parts of the town. The Consolidated Tank Line Company's yards are flooded from the latter sources and other floods of a similar character are expected in the lower places of the town. Very little actual damage has been done as yet and no great damage is anticipated unless the Missouri waters should rise more than 3 feet above their present stage.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., June 30.—The river has risen steadily since Saturday morning. Residents of the French bottoms, north of this city, are in a state of alarm and many are preparing to move. If the river should overflow the French bottoms it is expected that a new channel will be cut through, leaving many farms on an island and diverting the main stream from the Kansas shore two miles west. If the present rise continues twelve hours the stock yards and hundreds of homes in South St. Joseph will be inundated. The situation is serious to the packing interests as well as to hundreds of small farmers on the lowlands. The Burlington tracks on the river front in the city have been strengthened by piling and rock to prevent serious washouts.

ATCHISON, Kan., June 30.—The Missouri river is now 2 feet higher at this point than it has been at any other time this season. Farms on the Missouri side were submerged Sunday night. Wheat fields will be a total loss. The water is also pouring across Doniphan point, a neck of land opposite Doniphan, Kan. This neck stood the test of the flood of 1881, when the river was 9 feet higher than it is now. No fear is entertained that it will cut through this time. South of East Atchison land is falling into the stream by the acre.

GOV. BOIES CALLS FOR CHARITY.

CHEROKEE, Ia., June 30.—Gov. Boies arrived in this city Monday morning and after surveying the flooded district issued the following proclamation:

"TO THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF IOWA: You have heard of the affliction which has fallen upon some of the towns of our state. I have made a personal examination of the facts in this city by coming here and going over the flooded districts and find that at least seventy-five families have lost everything and some twenty-five more have lost most of their household goods and much of their clothing, while their dwellings have been greatly injured by the floods. In addition to this loss of homes and of furniture and clothing, the county at large has suffered greatly in the loss of nearly every bridge, both iron and wood, within its limits. A careful estimate places the number of families which require help at once at 100, thus making a population of about 500 that require and will require for a considerable length of time to be cared for by the charity of our people. In addition to the above many of the surrounding towns have also suffered greatly and will be compelled to appeal to the people of the state for aid. In view of this calamity I recommend that the mayors of the several cities of the state and all other charitably disposed persons immediately take steps to organize proper committees to solicit aid for these unfortunates and see that the same is promptly forwarded to David H. Bloom, mayor of Cherokee, for distribution among those of this city who have suffered losses, and to such persons as may be named by the proper authorities of the other towns which have suffered from the same calamity. All contributions so forwarded will be faithfully applied to the purpose for which they are sent. Let contributions be prompt and liberal.

"HORACE BOIES, Governor of Iowa."

MILTON, Ia., June 30.—A cyclone passed 5 miles south of this place Sunday night tearing things up in terrific shape.

In Grant's Honor.

CHICAGO, June 30.—On Thursday, October 8, the equestrian statue of Gen. Grant will be unveiled in Lincoln park. The date was agreed upon Monday evening at a meeting of the local executive committee of the army of the Tennessee. The annual reunion of the society will be held on October 7 and 8. The first day will be devoted to business affairs and an address by Gen. Hickenlooper at the Auditorium in the evening. On the second day the monument will be unveiled, army and military organizations from far and near joining in the exercises. In the evening there will be a banquet.

The Sun's Fierce Rays.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 30.—The signal service reports Sunday as the hottest day in San Francisco since 1887, the thermometer registering 92 degrees at a little after midday, or an equivalent of 107 degrees on the streets. At Napa the thermometer reached 110 degrees in the shade, and at Sonoma and Healdsburg the maximum was 109 degrees and 108 degrees respectively. Grain is too far advanced to be injured much by the heat, but considerable damage was done to fruit. At Red Bluff the thermometer reached 104 degrees in the shade, at Fresno 110 degrees, and at Yuma 116 degrees

WANAMAKER'S NAME.

It Was on Keystone Paper—Testimony of Philadelphia Bankers Taken by the Councils Committee.

PHILADELPHIA, June 30.—Contrary to the general impression, Postmaster General Wanamaker did not appear before the investigating committee of councils Monday afternoon to explain the apparent discrepancy between his previous testimony relative to his ownership of Keystone bank stock and facts subsequently developed by the books of the bank.

The first witness before the committee was S. P. Dunham, president of the Mechanics' national bank of Trenton, N. J. Mr. Dunham testified that the bank had loaned Henry H. Yard money on two certificates of the Keystone bank, one of which was in the name of John Wanamaker and a power of transfer on the back signed by Mr. Wanamaker, the other in the name of A. L. Shingle and the transfer signed by him. The certificate in Mr. Wanamaker's name was numbered 450 for 200 shares and the loan was made April 28, 1890, on Yard's personal note.

Effingham P. Morris, president of the Girard Trust Company, who was the next witness, said that his company had once held certificate No. 450 of the Keystone bank. The certificate, together with Nos. 451, 452, 453 and 454 was held as collateral by the Girard company for a loan made to Mr. Wanamaker on March 3, 1886. Each of the certificates were for 200 shares. The loan was called in by the trust company on October 24, 1889. Mr. Morris had brought with him the loan book of his company, and in looking it over Mr. Etting, a member of the committee, called his attention to three loans made to the Keystone bank. Mr. Morris said that the loans were made to the Keystone bank on November 7 and 10, 1890. They were temporary loans and the collateral offered by the bank was 243 shares of preferred and 1,461 shares of common electric trust stock. Mr. Marsh, president of the Keystone bank, came to Mr. Morris (the witness) and borrowed the money, stating at the same time that it would be a great obligation to Mr. Wanamaker. Mr. Morris understood that the loan was to be made to Mr. Wanamaker, and, as he put it, "we are willing at any time to loan Mr. Wanamaker $400,000."

Howard Spencer Jones, a clerk in the employ of Mr. Wanamaker, was the next witness. Several of the certificates pledged by Mr. Wanamaker to his broker stood in Mr. Jones' name. Mr. Jones explained that he signed the transfers on the back of the certificates at the request of Mr. Wanamaker. He did not know that the stock stood in his name. Mr. Jones said that W. Rankin, in whose name several of the certificates stood, was a boy or youth formerly in the employ of Mr. Wanamaker.

KEPT THEIR WORD.

Enemies of a Peoria (Ill.) Man Warned of Their Determination to Murder Him—The Threat Fulfilled.

SPARLAND, Ill., June 30. — About twelve years ago an esteemed citizen named John Carver died, leaving one daughter and three sons. Subsequently his widow, whom he had left some $15,000, married a mere boy, Royal Frisby. Frisby at once developed into a first-class tough and began spending the money in debauchery. The citizens have for a long time been in arms against Frisby, and Saturday a "white cap" circular was sent to him and several sent to heads of families with an attached prayer: "Help Us for Humanity's Sake," and signed by the widow Carver and her three sons. The original circular detailed how, while yet the husband of Mrs. Carver, Frisby ruined her daughter, and how she bore him a child in the house of his wife—her mother. The father buried the child in the yard within 60 feet of the house. Mrs. Frisby was compelled by threats to witness the grossest of outrages by her husband until her daughter's shame and the shame of her household became public property. Then she secured a divorce and immediately thereafter her husband compelled her daughter, with a second child only two weeks old, to marry him. Sunday, not having heeded the warning of the circular, he stepped out of his house, and before he had gone 20 feet from his door he was filled full of buckshot and instantly killed. The coroner's jury held Gig Culver, of Henry, Mrs. Laura Frisby and her son, John Carver, for the killing.

SWITCHMEN WIN.

Trainmen Expelled from the Federation for Conspiring with the Northwestern.

TERRE HAUTE, Ind., June 30.—The committee appointed to investigate the charge of conspiracy preferred against the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen reported to the supreme council of the federation finding the brotherhood guilty. The Switchmen's Mutual Aid association had preferred the charge, alleging that the trainmen conspired with the Chicago & Northwestern officials to provide men to take the association switchmen's places. The vote sustaining the report was unanimous except for the three votes of the trainmen in the council. When the vote on the penalty of expulsion was taken two firemen, Dabbs and Hannahan, voted with the three trainmen. The three votes each of the switchmen and Brotherhood of Conductors were in favor of expulsion. Grand Master Sargent, of the firemen, who is the presiding officer of the council, did not vote.

A BALTIMORE FAILURE.

Levi and Joseph Straus, Maltsters, Assign.

BALTIMORE, Md., June 30.—Levi and Joseph Straus, maltsters, have made an assignment for the benefit of creditors. The bond of the assignee is $800,000. The embarrassment of Levi and Joseph Straus is accepted as an outcome of the assignment of Barth & Straus two weeks ago. The primary liabilities are $160,000 and the contingent liabilities $200,000, aggregating $360,000. The assets will aggregate $650,000. A number of banks in this city offered to help the firm over its trouble

Mrs. Philo Captured.

DIXON, Ill., June 30. — Mrs. E. L. Philo, the handsome blonde who leaped from a train on the Chicago & Northwestern railroad at Ashland last Thursday night while being conveyed to Denver by Detective Reno, was captured at Aurora Monday morning by Sheriff Stainbrooke, of Lee county. She was badly bruised about the head and one arm was broken. She was placed in Detective Reno's keeping and was chained to him. Thus they started for Denver. She declares she will never go there alive.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS

Many Fish Dying.

Some fatal disease is attacking the many inhabitants of the lakes in the vicinity of St. Paul. During the past few days fishermen have reported an enormous number of fish floating dead on the surface of the water. At Pickerel lake the water was literally covered with dead bass and other species. The same phenomenon was noticeable at Coleman's and Forest lake. The supposition was at first that some vandals had poisoned the water, but the mortality was noticeable in so many localities that that theory seemed untenable.

Clearing the Reservation.

Sioux chiefs Matowiackte and Ptesanwicaka, of the Yankton Indian agency, and a number of braves, are now camped at the historic pipestone quarries in Pipestone for the purpose of clearing the reservation, so as to have everything in readiness to begin work on the Indian industrial school early in the fall. An official order has been issued forbidding trespassing on the land which will exclude the Flandreau tribe of Indians, who have for generations been allowed to camp at the quarry and dig all the stone they desire.

Gave a Smallpox Banquet.

The business men of St. Paul gave an unusual banquet at the Merchants' hotel. Owing to the report that a case of smallpox had been found there, Proprietor Welz closed the hotel until the inaccuracy of the report was demonstrated. The formal reopening of the hotel and its freedom from danger of contagion was testified to by the presence of over 200 business and professional men at this so-called smallpox banquet.

Grasshoppers Infest 200 Acres.

County Commissioner Pederson, who has been investigating the grasshopper scare at Scrambler, Otter Tail county, says the main body of grasshoppers is in a field owned by Frank Putnam, whence they have migrated to the adjacent stubble. In other fields of the neighborhood there were also scattered smaller bodies of the insects. The area infested was probably 200 acres. They were being killed as fast as possible.

Cyclone in Olmsted County.

At an early hour the other morning a cyclone struck the eastern line of Olmstead county. The track of the storm was 6 rods in width and 5 miles long. The residence and barns of Charles Marks, near Utica, were destroyed. No lives were lost. A clear road was cut through the timber and the grain fields, and the track of the storm had the appearance of having been recently plowed.

A Morning Bath of Tar.

About 2 o'clock the other morning Michael Murphy, a farmer living 4 miles east of St. Peter, was called up to doctor a sick horse. On opening the door of his residence he was seized by four masked men, thrown to the ground and covered with a coat of tar and feathers. The party then rushed into the house and treated his housekeeper, who was in bed, to the same kind of a dose.

Grand Grove of Druids.

At the annual meeting of the grand grove of Druids of Minnesota held in St. Paul the following officers were elected:

N. G. A., Joseph Ehrmantraut, D. G. A., M. A. Beckman; secretary, Charles Webber, St. Paul; treasurer, F. Frederick, Minneapolis; G. M., John Roth, Lewiston; G. G., G. W. Horton, Minneapolis; G. S., Lewis Peters, St. Paul; grand trustees, E. W. Rebstock, Winona; J. A. Gilman, Minneapolis; supreme representative, Joseph Geicht, Winona; alternate, John Dahlquist, Minneapolis.

State Medical Society.

At the session in Minneapolis of the state medical society the election of officers resulted as follows:

President, Park Ritchie, St. Paul; first vice president, W. J. Mayo, Rochester; second vice president, W. A. Jones, Minneapolis; third vice president, Dr. Pine, St. Paul; secretary, C. B. Witherai, St. Paul; treasurer, R. J. Hill, Minneapolis.

The News Briefly Chronicled.

Rev. T. Jefferson Volentine, for the past two years in charge of the Unitarian church in Duluth, will go to Meadville, Pa.

At the annual election of the officers of the board of trustees of Pillsbury academy at Owatonna the old officers were reelected.

A fire broke out in Wyatt's furniture store at Crookston, caused by the explosion of a lamp, and the whole interior of the store was destroyed. Loss, $4,000; insurance, $1,500.

This will be the greatest year in the fruit business Minneapolis ever experienced.

Three new postoffices will soon be established in Minnesota on the line of the new railroad between Hinckley and West Superior.

The hotel barn of O. B. Glarum at Wilmar was burned, and eight horses perished.

The dairy and food department of the state will, after Aug. 1, rigidly enforce the new law relating to the artificial coloring in vinegar and food products generally.

Park Letts, 18 years old, was killed at Granite Falls by being thrown from a wagon in a runaway. He fell from the side of the wagon, striking on his head and breaking his neck.

Rev. M. D. Shutter, of Minneapolis, has received a D. D. degree from the St. Lawrence university at Canton, N. Y.

Ed Murphy, a Winona river rat, who had been loafing about the city for several days, was captured while in the act of burglarizing a showcase in Preece & Latch Company's store.

Great efforts are being made by the farmers and business men of Polk county to induce the Duluth & Winnipeg railway people to change the proposed bee line route from Duluth to Winnipeg and deviate so as to run into Crookston and through the Red river valley.

The contract for the Red river valley university building a Wahpeton, N. D., has been given to Barnett & Record, of Minneapolis, for $34,000.

The surveying of the Red lake reservation is progressing rapidly. It is expected that by October 1 the work will be completed.

W. H. Tuesdale, receiver of the Minneapolis & St. Louis railroad, has resigned.

At the Demorest medal contest at Northfield under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., Miss Kate Wyman received the first prize, a silver medal, and Miss Hattie Shorrocks the second prize.

An Easy Chair.

A large share of man's inventive genius has always been devoted to making himself comfortable, but it is only within the past century that his efforts have been crowned with success. Take the matter of chairs, for instance. It was a long time before the descendants of Adam and Eve could devise anything better for a seat than a log or a boulder. And even when chairs were invented, they were reserved for Kings, Emperors, Priests and high personages. Among some so-called civilized nations of the present day, sitting cross-legged on a mat is the only method recognized as the correct thing even in Japan, whose people are styled the "Yankees of the Orient."

Of all the peoples of the world, the American is the leader in that which conduces to comfort, and it is in our own country improvements are eagerly adopted. The inhabitant of the cottage, as well as the dweller in the palace, insists that his furniture shall be easy and luxurious. Accustomed to his cushioned chair and slippers at home, the American when he travels requires the same attention paid to his comfort. He will journey not only swiftly but softly and easily. Every effort is made to satisfy the demand, and hence the evolution of the sleeping, parlor and dining cars for railroad travel. These, however, were so far luxuries that their enjoyment involved expense beyond the cost of a railroad ticket, and thus many worthy people were debarred from the enjoyment of the rich. The question confronted the railroads, "Must thousands of independent American sovereigns be made to feel that they are only just common people? Perish the thought! We will provide them better than even the luxurious coaches now in use, and this accommodation shall be free." The result of this determination was the reclining chair car. To be sure, the traveler bound for St. Paul, Minneapolis or the bright and bustling cities that dot the shores of the majestic Mississippi could enjoy the Pullman sleeper or the parlor car, but a uniformed guard stood at the portal and exacted a round fee for entrance. The Burlington has been quick to discern and prompt to supply what would add to the comfort of the traveling public, and now places in its day trains a service of reclining chair cars, free of all charges, fees or exactions of any sort. Its day trains, thundering along the east bank of the Mississippi for full three hundred and fifty miles, unroll before the traveler's eye such a panorama of scenery, grand, beautiful and charming, that it has gained the title of the "Scenic Mississippi River Route." To these trains, leaving Minneapolis and St. Paul every morning, except Sunday, and Chicago every evening, except Saturday, are now attached the chair cars. No. 550, No. 553 or No. 556. Let us board one of these for a trip southward. Entering the vestibule we are in a short aisle on one side of which, neatly inclosed, is a Baker heater, which maintains an agreeable temperature by circulation of hot water in pipes running the whole length of the car. On the opposite side is the ladies' lavatory. Enter the body of the car. From the floor, composed of narrow strips of dark and light woods alternating, to the richly polished dark paneling of the sides, and the lighter and more brightly decorated ceiling, from which depend double lamps of crystal glass and glistening nickel, we find nothing but what is pleasing to the eye, speaking of comfort and of ease. Passing through, in the other extremity is a commodious smoking room and lavatory for the use of gentlemen, the size of which is a surprise to those who are familiar with the narrow limits of other cars. Now that we have had our smoke, let us sit down with our fellow passengers. The seat is roomy—no crowding from your fat neighbor; let the side arms back a couple of notches and you could not be more delightfully ensconced in your easy chair at home. To your left is the placid and beautiful Lake St. Croix. The lofty bluffs and the magnificent sweep of the river are wonderful in their loveliness. And now we swing around the towering heights of "Maiden's Rock," and the broad blue expanse of Lake Pepin comes into view. There is a flutter of ribbons among the ladies on the right, a craning of necks out the windows, and exclamations of delight are heard. This is the luxury of day travel, and among these well-pleased people the uniformed porter moves quietly, adjusting a window here and handing a glass of water there. It is after dinner and we have left La Crosse. You feel like taking a nap? Pull out that foot rest and let your chair-back fall another notch or two. Well, just one more word—you have seen almost "all kinds and conditions of men" here, but the "railroad hog," who spreads himself over two double seats and gets his feet on the cushions, is "not in it" in this place. What, dropped off to slumber already? Well, good-bye, and we are sure whenever you have a daylight journey to make up or down the river, you will travel by The Burlington, the only free reclining chair car line between the Twin Cities and Chicago.

HE GOT EVEN WITH HER.

He Saw She Didn't Like Him and so He Turned the Tables.

He had finished his introductory remarks and was about to propose, when he discovered that his proposal would be treated with contempt.

"Go on, Mr. Sprigger," she said, impatiently tapping her foot on the carpet as he paused in his remarks.

"I was about to say, Miss Hilder," he continued, "that I am aware that the human heart, especially a woman's, is a delicate thing, and I come to-night to correct a wrong impression which you have been under for some time, I think. To be plain, Miss Hilder, because I do not wish to cause you future suffering, let me state that I have never cared enough for you to ask you to link your lot with mine, therefore do not think that I can return the love you bear for me. My attentions to you have been prompted purely by a friendly feeling, nothing more. But I trust this will not mar our friendly relations," he said, taking his hat to go, "for remember, you will ever have in me a true friend. Be assured I will be always a nephew to you."

And she was so dumb with surprise and anger that she didn't say good-bye to him when he bowed himself out.—Boston Herald.

N freedom's land a home did rear
Stanch Puritan and cavalier;
Upon Atlantic's shore they cast
Their lot in life and anchored fast;
The yoke of toil the fathers wore,
The children's children gladly bore
For love of thee,
Fair country, free
From mountain top to boundless sea—
America! America!

With loyal hearts and courage strong
They fought the rising tyrant, wrong,
And freely their red life-blood gave,
The nation's future good to save.
How brightly Independence day
Greets us through them with banners gay,
And clangs its bell,
The note to tell
Of liberty we love so well—
America! America!

For aye shall fond respect be done
Unto our noble Washington
And those brave souls that shared with him
The musket smoke and cannon din.
Truth, freedom, honor, glory, might,
They wrote upon the banner bright
That waved o'er them,
Fair, starry gem,
Our country's matchless diadem—
America! America!

Strong union! whose might overcame
Opposing foes of noble fame,
And on whose face intestine war
Could trace no lasting mark or scar,
We cheer thee and thy glories great
Of valiant navy and of state;
While blue and gray
Proudly obey
Thy powerful and upright sway—
America! America!

Firm union! where sweet peace abides
In valleys green, on broad hillsides;
Where gallant sons and daughters fair
Guard thy renown with tenderest care,
We hail thy future from the past,
Where shadows came but could not las
And with warm zeal
To God appeal
For thy success and lasting weal—
America! America!

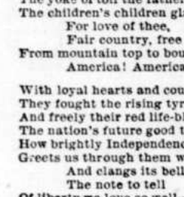
ONE DAY LATE.

A Magnificent Joke, and How It Ended.



"TELL-TALE!" "I'm not a tell-tale," and Beth's eyes filled with tears. "I only said when grandpa asked me that I saw you boys in the pasture. I did not know that you let the calf out and it broke its leg. You must not say I did."

"Let her alone, Jamie," said Will, with a superior air, "you can't expect much from girls, anyway. I think it is a great fuss to make about a calf's leg when it has three more left to walk on."

"She has spoiled our Fourth," growled Jamie, "when grandpa had promised to take us to town. I suppose she will go just the same. What does a girl know about the Fourth, scared at the least bit of noise? Grandpa ought not to take her, just in his busy time, too."

"You would not be so thoughtful about his busy time if you should have an invitation," laughed Will. "Come on, let's go to the creek for minnows."

"May I go?" begged Beth. "I want some minnows for my pond."

"No," said Will, shortly, "we have had all we want of girls."

Beth wandered disconsolately to the end of the porch where Jerry sat dosing a brood of downy chickens with cornmeal and cayenne pepper for the pips, and sitting down by him picked up one of the chicks, holding it close to her cheek, and the great tear that dropped on him made the little fellow think that a sudden shower had come up, and he peeped loudly to tell the others to run in out of the rain.

Meanwhile, Jamie and Will turned their steps to the creek, half ashamed of being so cross with Beth, but they were very sore at the idea of their carelessness having lost them the expected trip to town on the Fourth, and must vent it on some one, and Beth was the only one on whom they could. As they passed the milk house they saw their grandmother busy among her milk-

"SHE HAS SPOILED OUR FOURTH."

pans, and overheard a few words of her conversation with grandpa, who had stopped for a glass of milk.

"It is a pity, father, that the Fourth does not come on Saturday this year, then you could take in the butter at the same time and save an extra trip this busy season."

"It does," replied Mr. Downs; "that's what I calculated on when I told Beth I would take her."

"You surely are mistaken," and grandma raised her voice a trifle higher.

"Well, well, mother, we won't quarrel; the almanac will settle it."

The boys passed on, but what they had heard wakened a train of thought.

"It would be a monstrous good joke if grandpa should get hold of the wrong almanac and miss the day. I wonder how Beth would feel getting into town a day after the show," and Will rolled over and over on the grass at the thought of Beth's disappointment.

"It wouldn't be much trouble to slip an old almanac in the place of the new one; there is a pile of them in the garret, and ten to one grandpa would never know the difference," said Jamie.

The plan was so brilliant a one that the seining for minnows seemed very tame, and the boys dropped their nets and ran back to the house, consulting as they ran.

A hurried search for an almanac to suit their purpose, and as quickly downstairs again, for it was nearly time for the men to be in to dinner. There was no one in the large, airy kitchen, and it took but a minute to transfer the old almanac to the nail by the door, where the new one had so lately swung to and fro. The boys' hearts beat quickly when they went in to dinner and found grandpa studying the almanac.

"It is just as I said, mother," running his finger down the page, "the Fourth comes on Saturday; you certainly cannot dispute the almanac; who ever knew it to be wrong?"

Will and Jamie bent low over their plates, while grandma brought forth proof after proof to show that the Fourth was on Thursday last year, and consequently must be on Friday now, as it was not leap year. Grandpa listened with a good-natured smile.

"Well, mother, I have followed the almanac for fifty years, and I guess I will abide by it now."

Saturday morning came clear and bright, and Beth, in her fresh white dress and broad-brimmed hat, stood waiting for Jerry to bring around the old chaise which had been in use thirty years, or more.

"WHY, OLD MAN, YOU ARE A DAY TOO LATE!"

Will and Jamie could afford to be pleasant after the magnificent joke they had played on her.

"Don't scream when the firecrackers go off, Beth, for people will think you never saw any before."

"Tell us all about everything, Beth, and be sure to bring us a red balloon."

"Oh, don't forget some peanuts," begged Will, "it will be the only Fourth we will have."

"I wish you would go, the Fourth is more for boys than for girls," began Beth, but Jamie interrupted her: "You can tell us all you saw, and that will be fun for us," and he gave Will a nudge.

Beth and grandpa rode off in the high old chaise, Beth with her pockets filled with ginger-snaps, while under the seat was a well-filled lunch-basket. She sang little songs of happiness to the nodding clover and daisies along the road as they passed, for a day in town only came once in a long time, and besides, this was the Fourth of July, when all nice things happened. They lived far from neighbors, and the outside world seemed very wonderful to her, so she was glad when the long drive came to an end, and the streets of the village appeared.

But what a deserted look they had! Tired and sleepy—as though after a day of pleasure the whole town had taken a resting-spell. Along the road were scattered burnt firecrackers and empty paper bags.

"It's dreadful quiet for Fourth of July, isn't it, grandpa?" and Beth looked very anxious.

Mr. Downs drew in old Whiteface, and called to a man in a store:

"Where does the celebration take place?"

The man laughed. "Why, old man, you are a day too late for the Fourth, we had all that yesterday. Where have you been, anyway?"

Beth gave a little gasp and her yellow curls mingled with grandpa's white ones as she sobbed on his shoulder.

"The almanac said so," he repeated over and over, "I never knew it to be wrong before. There, little girl, we'll do something else just as nice, we'll go —" then, as his eye caught a flaming poster of a lion and an elephant in a deadly conflict, "yes, we'll go on to Paxton and see the menagerie, it shows there to-day; that will be a great deal better than a lot of noisy firecrackers."

Beth dried her tears. "Oh, how splendid! I wish Will and Jamie were here. We never any of us saw a really, truly lion in our lives."

Old Whiteface was put into a stable for the day, and grandpa and Beth boarded a train for Paxton. What a wonderful, never-to-be-forgotten day it was for her. The crowds of people, the band of music, and cage after cage of new and strange animals. She clung close to grandpa when the lion shook his yellow mane and gave a frightful roar, and when the elephant waved his long trunk high in the air, and clapped her hands with delight at the antics of the monkeys.

"It would be just perfect if the boys were here. I am so glad, grandpa, that we lost the Fourth!"

Will and Jamie spent a restless day. An uneasy conscience is never a comfortable companion, and their magnificent joke looked almost like a falsehood to them, and to do anything to make their little sister shed tears was not manly, look at it in any light they might. They had to watch their chance to replace the almanac, and their laugh at the thought of how mystified grandpa would be when he came to consult it again was a faint one.

They were at the gate, one on each post, to watch for old Whiteface, and when she was seen swinging up the road they called out:

"Tell us all about it, Beth. Did you scream at the firecrackers? Where are the peanuts? Did you see all the celebration?"

The fun of their joke had all returned, and they kicked their heels with delight.

"I didn't see any firecrackers," answered Beth, "but, boys, the lion was splendid! I heard him roar, and the monkeys were so cunning!"

Will and Jamie looked at each other. What did she mean? Where was there any lion?

"Wasn't it queer? The almanac was wrong, and we lost the Fourth, so grandpa took me to Paxton to see the animals. I wished every minute you were there, it was so splendid!"

The boys climbed slowly down from the post and went into the house. This was something they had not expected. Beth had seen what they had wanted to see all their lives—a real lion, and heard it roar! This was the result of their joke. There was not even a smile when grandpa walked straight to the almanac and took it down, examining it with a puzzled face. Their punishment seemed greater than they could bear.

It was a quiet family that evening—grandpa, deep in thought, trying to solve the unaccountable behavior of his faithful almanac; Beth, tired and happy, and the boys mute with surprise at the ending of their magnificent joke.—Louise Thrush Brooks, in Chicago Standard.

HUMOR IN GRAVESTONES.

A Few Novel Instances of Laughable Post-Mortem Devotion.

The tombstone literature of the world is sometimes amusing reading. In a little country churchyard not far from New York is a tombstone erected over a girl who died at the age of nineteen. It bears the inscription: "Educated to be a wife." Fancy the curriculum of the educational institution she attended! In a Baltimore cemetery is a lot with three graves. The stone at the right has an inscription testifying to the fact that a woman lies beneath and a hand sculptured below the inscription points to the center grave with the significant sentence: "He was mine." The grave at the left likewise has an inscription testifying to the fact that a woman lies there, and here again is a carved hand pointing to the center grave with the legend: "He was mine also." In the middle grave is buried the husband of these two women, and on his tombstone are carved two hands joined at the wrist, one pointing to the right and the other to the left. Then there is the inscription: "They were both mine."

Every one who has visited Hollywood cemetery in Richmond, Va., will remember the burial lot of a certain gentleman who laid away decorously and tearfully in this grassy plot three wives. The tombstones erected over this trio of unhappy women are exactly alike, and on each one is sculptured a beautiful hand pointing upward, a delicate method of signifying that the souls of these women are now soaring in realms of heavenly bliss.

It is related that the husband of these wives, upon recovering from his third bereavement, paid court to Miss Mattie Ould, who was the belle of Richmond, and who, although dead many years, is still quoted by Virginians as the wittiest, most fascinating and delightful of all the charming women who have claimed the Old Dominion as their birthplace. Upon one occasion Miss Ould accompanied this gentleman to the cemetery, and, standing beside these monuments, she said, positively: "If I ever should marry you, Mr. Steele, and I should die before you, would you mind having the hand on my tombstone point down? Just by way of variety, you know."—N. Y. Recorder.

THE AMERICAN GIRL.

According to Good Authorities She Is Not What She Was.

This charming product of the western world has come into great prominence of late years in literature and in foreign life, and has attained a notoriety flattering or otherwise to the national pride. No institution is better known or more marked on the continent and in England, not excepting the tramway and the Pullman cars. Her enterprise, her daring, her freedom from conventionality, have been the theme of the novelists and the horror of the dowagers having marriageable daughters. Considered as "stock," the American girl has been quoted high, and the alliances that she has formed with families impecunious but noble have given her eclat as belonging to a new and conquering race in the world. But the American girl has not simply a slender figure and a fine eye and a ready tongue, she is not simply an engaging and companionable person, she has excellent common sense, tact and adaptability. She has at length seen in her varied European experience that it is more profitable to have social good form according to local standards than a reputation for dash and brilliancy. Consequently the American girl of a decade ago has effaced herself. She is no longer the dazzling courageous figure. In England, in France, in Germany, in Italy, she takes, as one may say, the color of the land. She has retired behind her mother. She who formerly marched in the van of the family procession, leading them—including the panting mother—a whimsical dance, is now the timid and retiring girl, needing the protection of a chaperone on every occasion. The satirist will find no more abroad the American girl of the old type whom he continues to describe. The knowing and fascinating creature has changed her tactics altogether. And the change has reacted on American society. The mother has come once more to the front, and even if she is obliged to own to forty-five years to the census taker, she has again the position and the privileges of the blooming woman of thirty. Her daughters walk meekly and with downcast (if still expectant) eyes, and wait for a sign.—Charles Dudley Warner, in Harper's Magazine.

THEN AND NOW.

When they first invented gunpowder,
They did most dreadful things with it,
They blew up popes and parliaments,
And emperors and kings with it.

They put on funny hats and boots,
And skulked about in cellars, oh!
With shaking shoes they laid a fuse,
And blew it with the bellows, oh!

They wore great ruffs, the stupid muffs
(At least that's my opinion), then;
And said: "What, ho!" and "Sooth, 't is so!"
And called each other "Minion!" then.

But now, the world has turned about
Five hundred years, and more, you see;
And folks have learned a thing or two
They did not know before, you see.

So nowadays the powder serves
To give the boys a jolly day,
And try their Aunt Louisa's nerves,
And make a general holiday.

In open day we blaze away
With popguns and with crackers, oh!
With rockets bright we crown the night,
(And some of them are whackers, oh!).

And "pop!" and "fizz!" and "bang!" and "whizz!"
Sounds louder still and louder, oh!
And that's the way we use to-day
The funny gunny-powder, oh!
—Laura E. Richards, in St. Nicholas.

DOMESTIC CONCERNS.

—Roast Shoulder of Mutton: A shoulder of mutton should not be hasted in roasting, but simply rubbed with a little butter; serve with onion sauce.—Boston Herald.

—Indian Biscuits: One quart of cold Indian mush, one quart coarse wheat flour, one-half pint of milk. Make the biscuits as soft as you can well handle them, bake in a quick oven for twenty minutes.—Detroit Free Press.

—When washing black dress goods, soap must never under any circumstances be applied directly to the material. In order to obtain the necessary suds, it must be shaved and entirely dissolved in a basinful of boiling water, and then thrown into the washtub.

—For salad dressing boil together one-half pint of vinegar, one large tablespoonful of butter and one tablespoonful of sugar. Beat two whole eggs, or the yolks of four, with one-half cupful of cream. Add one teaspoonful of mustard to the boiling vinegar. Mix all together and stir constantly till it thickens.—N. Y. World.

—Boiled Turnips: Pare the turnips and cut them into quarters, put them into a stewpan with boiling water and salt, boil them until quite tender; then drain them dry and rub them through a colander with a wooden spoon, add one or two tablespoonfuls of cream and put them into the stewpan again with a large piece of butter and a little white pepper; stir them over the fire until thoroughly mixed and very hot; serve with boiled mutton.—Boston Herald.

—Omelet: Allow one egg for each person; two eggs make a small omelet. Beat the eggs well till light, season with pepper and salt and a spoonful of finely chopped chives or shallott and parsely; put a little butter in a pan, and when it is melted and hot, put in the eggs, etc., and fry. When the under side is colored and the top is about the consistency of scrambled eggs, slip it out of the pan into a hot dish, fold it over and serve at once.—Boston Budget.

—Bananas in Jelly: Make with boiling water a quart of strong and sweet lemonade, using only the juice of the lemons. Soak half a box of galatine one hour in a small cup of cold water; stir it into the boiling lemonade and set it where it will cool, but not harden. Cut three bananas in lengthwise halves and lay them in a mold wet with cold water, cover them with half the jelly and set the mold upon the ice until the jelly sets. Then slice in three more bananas and pour in the remainder of the jelly. Serve with cream or soft custard.—Springfield Republican.

—Cheap cuts of meat and tough poultry require long and slow cooking to render them tender. Give plate meat, costing five cents per pound, five or six hours for quietly simmering, then an hour before dinner roast it down in its own liquor, and it will probably be as tender as desired. The bones should be removed and the meat rolled and tied in shape, then put in a pot to cook. This cut from the fore shoulder contains more fat and bones than lean meat, but five pounds of plate meat is sufficient for as many persons, and the bones will make excellent soup.—N. Y. World.

—If you have a young chicken it is best to split it down the back and broil it. It is also good dredged with flour and browned in an iron pan in some hot butter, first on the outer side, then on the inner, sprinkling with salt after the former is turned uppermost. When done and removed on to a hot platter, pour a little cream into the frying-pan to boil up and mix with the brown deposit in it; salt it slightly, add a few drops of lemon-juice and pour over the chicken. Serve it trimmed with bunches of parsley, eithes fresh or fried crisp in some boiling lard.

—Cream Meringues: Four eggs (whites only) whipped stiff with one pound of powdered sugar, flavored with vanilla or orange. When very stiff heap in the shape of half an egg upon stiff letter paper, lining the bottom of a baking-pan. Have them at least a half inch apart. Do not shut the oven door closely, as they burn very easily. Watch very closely, and when a light yellow-brown take them out and cool quickly; slip a thin-bladed knife under each, scoop out the soft inside and fill with cream whipped very stiff as for Charlotte-Russe. The oven should be very hot.—Ladies' Home Journal.

TO BE MADE AT HOME.

Simple Waists and Bodices Useful for Summer Wear.

A very pretty and easily-fashioned little waist for summer dresses may be made after the following design: The full shirred yoke and sleeves may be made of sheer white lawn or cream white china silk. The waist is gathered at the neck and again at the waist, where a close belt holds it in place.

The pointed bodice may be of gingham, chambrey, china silk, challis or any pretty summer material, and is cut straight across the top, just below the armholes, with straps of velvet ribbon extending over the shoulder.

A very attractive gown may be made of stem green sprigged challis, with velvet straps over the shoulder, a silk guimpe and bodice of challis or green repped silk. An equally pretty gingham may be made after the same model.

Another simple waist which promises to be a summer favorite is called the Pennant, which is made as exactly like a man's as is possible for a woman's wear. Pockets on either side the front, and a box plait extends down the back. These are really skirts of tails, as a man would say over which the skirt is pinned. This gives delightful freedom to the arms, with no fear of the waist and skirt separating, as is the most depraved and embarrassing inclinative when the waist is cut off below the belt.

This waist may be made of flannel, linen or silk, and is equally pretty in either material. Rather more elaborate and dressy are silk waists with a shirt yoke in the back and a plaited front with a frill in the hem. With these is worn a broad scarf of the same material tied beneath the turn-down collar.—Boston Globe.

Stylish Shirt Fronts.

The shirt fronts are multiplying rapidly as the season advances. They are used in crepe de chine and in English crape for very handsome toilets, in light tints contrasting with the color of the dress. A belt made of rows of galloon is frequently used to terminate the bodice in front. Open jackets with shirt fronts are much worn. Often with these jackets instead of the shirt front is used an ample jabot of scalloped bands of chiffon.—Chicago Post.

The committee smoked the cigars and unanimously awarded the prize to the chairman.—Chicago Tribune.

WHAT HE REQUIRED.

He Did Not Purchase the Entire Establishment.

"By the great guns, sir," said a stout man in an ulster and white necktie, looking down from the balcony skirting the upholstery department of a well-known dry-goods store, "this is an immense place—huge, simply stupendous."

"Oh, yes; nice store," said the clerk, obligingly.

"The Bon-Marche isn't a comparison. No, sir; not a comparison, sir. How much of a stock do you carry?"

"About two hundred thousand dollars' worth."

"Good! First-rate! And furniture—how about furniture?"

"Over one hundred thousand dollars."

"Admirable! Take a house and go right through it, I s'pose—furnish it complete, could you—from top to bottom, eh?"

"Yes; everything from carpets to bric-a-brac."

"And lace curtains and tapestries, you keep them?"

"Keep everything."

"And you know what style is, too—renaissance, Pompadour, Henry II. and the Louis?"

"No one better posted than our manager. P'raps you'd better see him. Mr. X——, here one moment," and the manager came up with a smile on him like a half-moon.

"No idea of it," mused the ulster. "No idea. Had an impression you had to go to Europe for such things. Good taste—everything correct, surprising, really."

"If you could give me an idea," ventured the manager, "of about what you required, you know——"

"Ah, yes, I forgot. I want two and a half yards of green shade fringe. Magnificent establishment!" — Upholsterer.

BROKE HIS WOODEN LEG.

But He Imagined It Was His Bones, and Suffered Accordingly.

A police officer found a man lying on the sidewalk writhing in agony and moaning piteously that his leg was broken. He said he had been run down by a street car. An ambulance was called and the sufferer was removed to the county hospital. He was lifted gently into the wagon, and three officers carried him into the examing room. He was stretched out on a cot, and called feebly for morphine. Dr. Graves hurried down-stairs with his physician's case in hand. With a pair of scissors he cut the trousers leg covering the injured member. The fractured bone could be plainly seen by the impression through the cloth. "It's a bad fracture," soliloquized the doctor. "Hulloa, what's this? Bounce that fellow out of here!" he ordered, angrily. "I wonder if he thinks this is a wooden-leg factory."

The man raised up at the doctor's remark about a "wooden leg" and inspected his fractured limb.

"Durned if you ain't right, doc," he said. "My wooden leg is broke square in two. Durned if it hurt worse than a real leg. Got some string, any of you fellows?"

The fellow's wooden leg had been broken and imagination did the rest. He was provided with string, and, tying the parts together, hobbled off with a smile.—Chicago Mail.

SURE OF NOTHING.

He Had a Wife Who Had Humbled Him in Spirit.

A stranger on horseback pulled up before a cabin in one of the side counties of Missouri, and hailed a man who was sitting on the door-step, rubbing a coon-skin to soften it.

"Say, my friend, how long will it take me to reach the next town?"

"'Cordin' to how fast you go; some folks 'u'd never git thare."

"Well, then, how far is it?"

"Fur is what?"

"The next town."

"That's 'cordin' to whare you air."

"How far from here? I'm here, ain't I?"

"I don't state whare you air. You may be here and agin you may be not. May be one or both of us is dreaming."

"You're the hardest-headed old chump that I ever saw," replied the traveler. "Now without any fooling, how long will it take me to reach the nearest town?"

"That depends ergin, on how you go. Take you 'bout twice as long to walk as if you rode."

"Say, old man, you don't seem to know anything. Are you sure you're alive?"

"Nope, and you wouldn't be sure of anything, if you'd married a gal that you thought was as weak as a kitten, and had a red cow an' two geese feather beds, and then afore you'd been married three weeks, have her pour water in your boots and sand in your pie, and drive you out of the house with a red-hot poker, and then have her dad swear the cow's hisen, and her mam say the beds is hern. Would you know anything, stranger?"

"Why don't you remonstrate?"

"I've done all that I could, and she beat me every time. And I guess she could remonstrate harder'n I could. Go on, mister, and leave me. Keep straight ahead 'n you'll git somewhare. I dunno whare. I ain't sure of nothing any more."—Texas Siftings.

Came Over In the Mayflower.

Young Miss Twelve Years Old was reading Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," and became deeply interested in the fortunes of poor Christian as he struggled onward through the Slough of Despond, fought the fierce combat with the monster Apollyon, made his escape from the Giant Despair and from Doubting Castle, and finally reached the Celestial Gate. She and the mother were one evening talking about the Mayflower and who had come to this country in the ship.

"And who do you think came over in the Mayflower, my daughter?" asked the mother.

"Why, the Yankees, of course," said Miss Twelve Years Old.

"No, my dear; not the Yankees; it was the Pilgrims."

"Oh, mamma, was Christian one of them? Did he come to America? He was a pilgrim, you know."—Jack Fuller, in Arkansaw Traveler.

Asthma. "I have been a great sufferer from Asthma and severe Colds every Winter, and last Fall my friends as well as myself thought because of my feeble condition, and great distress from constant coughing, and inability to raise any of the accumulated matter from my lungs, that my time was close at hand. When nearly worn out for want of sleep and rest, a friend recommended me to try thy valuable medicine, Boschee's German Syrup. I am confident it saved my life. Almost the first dose gave me great relief and a gentle refreshing sleep, such as I had not had for weeks. PEARLINE

Is better than any soap; handier, finer, more effective, more of it, more for the money, and in the form of a powder, for your convenience. Takes, as it were, the fabric in one hand, the dirt in the other, and lays them apart—comparatively speaking, washing with little work.

As it saves the worst of the work, so it saves the worst of the wear. It isn't the use of clothes that makes them old before their time; it is rubbing and straining, getting the dirt out by main strength.

—Frank Cramer respectfully, and carefully waits upon patrons desiring green garden vegetables, cabbage, radish lettuce, etc, etc, strawberries large and luscious. Fresh and salted meats of all kinds.

—Smith & LaRose Big one Ring Show exhibited here, on Tuesday evening, to a fair audience.

—One of the second generation of Riley Sturman's Thousand Dollar Team visited Delano, on Saturday, and elicited many favorable remarks from those having an eye for a good horse.

—We are officially notified that a special train will run east from Wilmar to Minneapolis, on July, 4th, leaving Delano at 8:31 A. M., returning leave Minneapolis at 7:10 P. M. Rate 1⅓ fare for round trip.

—The picnic held in Breed's grove, on Tuesday afternoon, by the parochial school children was well attended and a good time had by the little folks. The weather was rather cold for the time of year but rustling about at a picnic keeps them from from feeling cold much.

--On Saturday a heavy rain fell wetting the ground in better shape, farmers claim, than any pervious rain this season has done. Crops are beginning to thrive and give better promise of a bountiful harvest than was anticipated a few weeks since.

—Joe. Merriman visited Howard Lake, on Monday, to see paterfamilias who is anxious to go "camping out" and gathering blue berries. This arrangement is not favorably looked upon by the friends who think the trip rather too much for a man that has been laid up so long and is not yet fit to take so rough a trip.

--A game of ball was played on the Delano base ball grounds, on Sunday, between the first nine and the "scrubs" the professionals were victorious 22 to 12. The batteries were Theodore Brandes, Frank Eppel and Frank Brasie for the Delano nine, and Chas Rader, Roy Mulford, and Joe. Bernick for the "Scrub nine."

—Frank Cramer's colt hitched to the horse power for grinding sausage took it into his head to have a run-away the other day. so lit out around the track in circus fashion making the mill run faster than even Frank had time to feed. This is one reason probably that Frank's bologna is so easily masticated this week.

—On Friday morning, Mr. Albert Plath who lived on the farm toward the river from Cap't. Sibel's, complained of feeling sick and vomited. At night he slept alone. On Saturday morning, he was found to be unconscious, and a doctor was sent for but before the messenger reached town Mr. Plath had died. He leaves a wife and four small children to mourn his sudden death. He would have been 45 years old next October.

--Good work is being done on our streets in filling up holes and low places with gravel. When the streets are made higher in the middle than at the sides, whether this be done by filling up the middle or by making a gutter on either side, we will have smooth streets, but so long as the water is permitted to flow across the street every time it rains as it does on R. R. Ave. and some others travelers will be jolted up. Some science should be brought to bear on our streets.

—A fairly well dressed and able bodied young man called upon several of our citizens lately and asked for a cup of coffee on being told that if he would saw some wood he could have some coffee he assumed an air of scorn and in a theatrical manner replied "saw wood, for a cup of coffee. It's too hot!" whereupon he was informed by the head of the house that "I have to saw wood for mine" and took his departure. If these summer tourists were obliged to earn their bread by the sweat of their brows as other people do there would, most likely, be fewer of them.

—The suit of Mrs. Smith administratrix vs. J. D. Brandon to collect on a promissory note before Justice Bohn last week, had a hearing on Monday, and a motion was made for a change of venue. In the afternoon the parties appeared before Justice Grafft when the Attorney for defendant, M. A. O'Hair moved the case be dismissed on the grounds that the transcript did not show that a change of venue had been ordered. Justice Grafft so ruled and the case was dismissed. Attorney O. L. Billings for the Plaintiff gave notice of appeal, and proceeded to begin a new proceedings at once, on the merits of the case.

—Mrs. J. E. Nelson, left on Wednesday, for a visit to Iowa, as she left the train at Minneapolis she had quite a scare on finding that her bracelet was gone but after considerable difficulty succeeded in getting back into the car where she found it on the floor.

—At the state land sale held on last Saturday there were 480 acres sold for the aggregate amount of $2,900. The highest price paid was $8.50 per acre, but most of it sold at the appraised value, $5.00 per acre. There were 13 buyers. This sale cleans up about all the state lands in this county that are of any value.—Buffalo Journal.

On Wednesday evening Tiff Hittsman and wife returned from Washington where they went to attend their son Ed who was accidentally shot and severely wounded while hunting elk on the 23d of May. His partner mistook him for an elk and fired at him twice in rapid succession hitting him in the right arm and again just above the right hip bone the ball passing through him. He was thirty miles from a doctor, but had an old army nurse who took care of him, after the doctor had seen him. He is getting able to be about some, but had a close call, very close. His brother, Ben, who went out with his father and mother, remained to help Ed until he is better. Mr. H. says "if anybody has a way to make a living here he would advise them to stay here and make the living." Mrs. H. says "Minnesota is good enough for me." They say it rained every day but the two last while they were there. The boom appears to be off, and about as many passengers are emigrating from the coast as from other states to the coast.

RESOLUTIONS.

At a regular meeting of Washington Grove No 9, U. A. O. D. held in Joseph Cramer's Hall on Thursday, the 2nd day of July, A. D. 1891. The following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted.

Whereas, It has pleased the High Architect of the universe to remove from our midst our late and beloved Brother, Jonas Johnson, and

Whereas, It is but just that a fitting recognition of his many virtues should be had; therefore be it,

Resolved, By Washington Grove No 9, U. A. O. D. that while we bow with humble submission to the will of the Most High. We do none the less, for our brothe who has been taken from us.

Resolved. That in the death of Brother Jonas Johnson this Grove laments the loss of a Brother who was ever ready to proffer the hand of aid, and the voice of sympathy to the needy and distressed members of the order; he was an active member of their society whose utmost endeavors were exerted for its welfare and prosperity a friend and companion who was dear to us all; a citizen whose upright and noble life was a standard of emulation to his fellow men.

Resolved. That the heartfelt sympathy of this Grove be extended to his wife and children in their affliction.

Resolved. That we extend our thanks to Brother Hiram Dyer of North Star Grove No 4, St. Paul and to the many Brothers of Franklin Grove No 2, U. A. O. D. for their kind and Brotherly assistance.

Resolved. That these resolutions be spread upon the records of this Grove and a copy thereof be transmitted to the wife and family of our deceased Brother and to the Delano Eagle also to the Buffalo Gazette for publication.

Signed, MARTIN NELSON, N. A.
HENRY C. PARSLOW, Sec'y.

DIED.

PLATH, in the town of Franklin, on Friday June 26, Mr. Albert Plath, aged 44 years.

Woman's Column.

For God and Home and Humanity.

EDITED BY MRS. E. A. STACY.

A Cipher.

Yes, I know it is true, we women are only ciphers, but ciphers have their uses, and are just as important as other figures, and cannot be spared.

A single gentleman is one; when he gets a wife he still calls himself the one, and his wife a cipher, so you see his value is increasing tenfold, for a cipher placed after one increases the value tenfold, and no man would be willing to place the cipher before the one. Therefore, as he was only one, we must be the other nine. Don't you see then in the home we are worth nine times as much as himself and therefore if they will not let us vote let us be satisfied with our greatness and improve our opportunities.—ADDIE M. RIGGS IN THE HOME QUEEN.

Five hundred children under ten years of age were taken into custody last year in London as drunk and incapable.

What the White Ribbon Means?

The consecration of the white ribbon is consecration of the body to our God. The consecration of the mind, it seems to me, is another radiant ray of light that converges to make the pure white of our emblem. I rejoice for the consecration of the white ribbon in that it tells a woman she is a drone and a sluggard unless she stirs around and makes the best of her powers.

The consecration of the white ribbon means not only the consecration to the Lord of the body and of the mind, the two halves of the great whole, but it also means the consecration to the home. I use the motto of Father Froebel, "Come, let us live for our children," and I have heard other wise kindergartners say, "Let us rather live with our children." When I see a white ribbon I know that that woman has a mother's heart if she be a true White Ribboner, whether or no she has children of her own to prattle around her knee and to call for her care and affection.

The white ribbon means that we are consecrated to the extermination of the legalized saloon.—FRANCES E. WILLARD.

License the Toper.

To the Editor of THE LEVER.

If to license the sale of intoxicating drink at retail is a lawful and desirable thing to do, if the saloon man should be taxed for the selling, and if it is unlawful to sell without a license, why should not the drinker, the man who participates in the act also be compelled to take out license?

It takes two parties to complete the act. The vender is no more guilty than the vendee and if revenue is the object it can just as well be doubled. It would not require a very complicated act of the legislature to inaugurate this great reform. The present license bureau could be provided with sets of tin tags. Say good for a month, and sell them to all who might apply at a dollar each. These tags would operate as a license to drink at any open bar in the town or city. Of course it would be made unlawful for a man to take a drink without a tag on his coat and equally unlawful to sell to the man who had no tag.

Possibly some supersensitive persons might object that the tag would operate to degrade and injure them, but not so; as things go in this country it would be a badge of honor to wear a whiskey tag, as it would indicate some high official position, policeman, alderman, legislator, justice of the peace, member of congress, senator, bummer, ward heeler, boss or general politician. They all do it. By all means let us have the tags. S.

"Remember, boys," said the new teacher, "that in the bright lexicon of youth there's no such word as 'fail.'" After a few moments a boy from Boston raised his hand. "Well, what is it, Socrates!" asked the teacher. "I was merely going to suggest," replied the youngester, as he cleansed his spectacles with his handkerchief, "that if such is the case it would be advisable to write to the publishers of that lexicon and call their attention to the omission."—MONTREAL STAR.

County Cullings.

Wright County was represented at the Democratic conference in Minneapolis, on Wednesday, by Ennis Brandon, J. A. Brasie, and T. J. Catlin, Hon. H. C. Bull was in the city but unable to attend on account of sickness.

THE Republican politicians in Minnesota are organizing low tariff clubs throughout the state to counteract the defection of tariff reformers from that party. The object is to keep the tariff reform element of the party in line. Some of them have been carried away with more or less violence by the Farmers' Alliance third party movement, and others are in danger of drifting quietly over the line into the Democratic party. The politicians see the necessity of doing something to counteract this, and so are organizing a Republican free trade party as an annex to the McKinley wing, which comprises the great proportion of the Republican host. This is one of the amusing episodes of politics --Pittsburg Post.--St. P. Globe.

POWDERLY'S MEN

Strenuous Efforts Will be Made to Placate Them.

WASHINGTON, June 29.—The fight of the Knights of Labor against Capt. Meredith, chief of the bureau of engraving and printing, has assumed increased interest in view of the fact that it has been taken up by the executive committee of that order. Information reached here this afternoon that Messrs. Powderly, Devlin and Hayes left Columbus, Ohio, to visit Washington in connection with the matter. Accompanying them are Daniel J. Ryan, secretary of state of Ohio, and D. K. Wilson, attorney general of Ohio. The Knights, in a former interview with Secretary Foster, made the threat that they would use the power of that organization to defeat the election of Mr. McKinley for governor this fall, if their demands for the reinstatement of certain Knights of Labor discharged from the bureau of engraving and printing at Washington were not complied with. It is with this object in view that principal officers of the Knights of Labor are on their way here accompanied by two of Mr. McKinley's closest friends.—Globe.

Taxing Corporations.

From the Wabasha Democrat we clip the following:

The state of Pennsylvania resolved to tax the cars of the Pullman Car Company on a basis proportionate to the number of miles traversed by them within the limits of the state. A like proceeding was instituted as to the Western Union Telegraph Company by the State of Massachusetts, the basis of taxation being the mileage traversed by its wires. In both cases the companies plead want of jurisdiction by a single state over a company doing an inter-state business. In both cases the supreme courts of the states decided against the companies. In both cases the companies appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States. In both cases the highest court of the nation has upheld the decision of the highest court of the states. There is a difference, which the supreme court affirms to be actual, between the effort of a state to restrict commence between the various states of the Union and the right and power of a state to levy taxes on property of alien companies while it is used in the state. And unquestionable, the plant of a railway or telegraph company is property. Nor does it seem that the movable nature of cars or locomotives can divest them of the quality of property. The cars of a railway company are subject it would seem from this recent decision, to taxation by Michigan as property used for profit in Michigan, and when they pass into Illinois or Ohio they become subject to taxation in each of those states. These decisions make final disposition of a long vexed question; and it is a disposition that will be approved by a large majority of the people of the country.—Inter-Ocean.

Directors Not Responsible

Perhaps the state of Pennsylvania and city of Philadelphia would not have lost $1,300,000 by the Keystone bank if the directors had their vigilance incited by personal liability. The recent decisions, however, are all against involving of directors of institutions in unpleasant concern for the integrity of the management. The past week the directors of the New York & New Haven railroad, of whom CHAUNCEY DEPEW was one, were held by the court to have no responsibility for the tunnel disaster which caused so great a destruction of life by reason of the refusal of the company to comply with the statue prohibiting the use of stoves in the cars. The president of the road was alone held as culpable legally. It is to be presumed, however, that when the legal machinery is invoked against him there will be found some crevice in the legal principles for his exit. If there is criminal liability anywhere, it will be located much lower down. It is remembered that a little time since the United States supreme court applied the legal principles to National bank directors in the same way. They can be know-nothings and do-nothings while unfaithful servants are packing their valises from the vaults for a luxurious sojourn abroad. The stockholders and depositors might be ruined and the directors incur no liability for not directing. Under this construction it can matter little to the patrons of financial institutions whether the directors are dummies or wooden headed. Their interests are not necessarily conserved by the directory. —St. Paul Globe.

OPIUM IN CANADA.

JULIAN RALPH, IN HARPER'S MAGAZINE.

Opium is manufactured in the cities of Victoria and Vancouver, British Columbia. As one manufacurer expressed it, "sufficient is made in one week in either city to meet the demands of British Columbia for two years." There are ten or a dozen manufacturers in Vancouver and more yet in Victoria. The opium imported is of a second quality, and is of Indian origin. It comes in the form of sap, and in the shape of balls that weigh about three pounds, and are encased in an envelope made by pressing leaves against the sticky substance. The Canadian revenue laws impose a duty of one dollar a pound upon this raw material, while our impost upon finished opium is ten dollars a pound. The difference when the raw material is worked into the finished product is therefore very great, and the temptation to smuggle is in direct proportion to the profit. The Chinese merchants in British Columbia find the method of manufacture very simple. The stuff costs two dollars and a half raw, or three dollars and a half a pound with the duty added. When it has been cooked into smoker's opium it has cost in the neighborhood of seven dollars, and it fetches from eight dollars to twelve dollars and a half a pound in various parts of the United States.

There are thirty or forty firms of China-men manufacturing it constantly in the two British Columbian cities, and one firm—not the largest—admitted to me that they produce from two hundred to three hundred pounds a month. There is scarcely a devisable manner of concealment of the little cans in which the opium is put up that is not practiced in smuggling this article over our border. It comes in barrels of beer, in women's bustles, in trunks, in satchels, under the loose shirts of sailors, in boat loads by night, in every conceivable way. By collusion with steam-boat and steam-ship captains, and through corrupt officials in our own country, the greatest profits are made possible. -The American Rural Home.

AN OLD SAYING.

It is an old saying and one that is worthy of honor, that the man who is his own lawyer has a fool for a client. It is equally true that the man who is his own doctor has a fool for a patient. The habit of accepting the suggestions of friends when one is sick, and running to the nearest drug store to buy some powerful drug of the properties of which and the appropriateness to the case there is only the vaguest idea, is a pernicions one and has caused the death of more than one man. At present there is a passion for the use of anti-pyrine, anti-febrin phenacitine and other drugs of the class all of which are dangerous in the hands of the unskilled and are used with the greatest caution by physicians. If some one has a headache, there is always a bystander to recommend the use of one or another of these drugs, yet it is altogether possible, in the case of at least one of them, that an ordinary dose would stop the action of the heart, in the case of a man whose circulation is weak. It is better to go to a physician in such a case, or else to do without medicine.—Albany Telegram.

THE CALF ON THE LAWN.

I'm goin' to fetch this 'ere young calf out here
in my front lawn;
He'll stay right here an' chaw the grass till the
hull thing is chawn;
He'll chaw that corner off to-day until he's et it bare;
Ter-morrer I will move his stake an' he'll chaw
over there.

Look bad, yer say, to see a calf out in a man's front yard,
An' blattin' like a bara-yard on this stylish
boolevard;
But thet air calf shall eat thet grass until I get him fat,
An' if he feels like blatin', w'y, I reckon he will blat.

W'en I fust took my farm out here this wuz a country road;
Across the way wuz parstchure lan', ware
huckleberries growed.
My calf wuz then hitched in my yard fer the hull town's inspection.
An' no darn enterprisin' dood cum roun' to make objection.

W'en this road growed a village street my calf
wuz in the yard,
An' now the street it swells 'ith pride—a city
boolevard,
But I will hitch this ere young calf out here in my front lawn;
He'll stay right here an' chaw the grass till the hull thing is chawn.

You say the way I carry on makes the hull city
laff,
Wall, let 'em laff; this 'ere's my lawn an' this
'ere my calf
An' things hez reached the purliest pass the worl' hez ever sawn
Ef an ol' duff can't let his calf chaw grass on his own lawn.

Wall, let em' laff; this 'ere young calf shall stay here anyhow,
An' if I hear 'em laff too hard I'll trot out the old cow,
I'll hitch 'em both to the same stake right here
in my front lawn,
An' let 'em stay 'an chaw the grass till the hull thing is chawn!

A GOOD OLD RULE.

SELECTED.

In journeying through this world of tears
Of blighted hopes and wasted chances;
With all its failures, doubts, and fears,
And ever varying circumstances,
'Tis best to keep this rule in view;
"Don't bite off more than you can chew."

The man who's living just for gain,
Who has no earthly thought beside it—
Whose greed has reached to such a strain
He doesn't even try to hide it—
Sometimes by crowding on too fast
May overreach himself at last.

And so when all looks bright and fair,
And fortune seems to smile benignly,
When opportunities both rare
And rich are offered to you kindly,
Wade in. But I'd say to you;
"Don't bite off more than you can chew."

A SPECIAL to the Globe says C. W. Brandborg of Fergus Falls was held for manslaughter, charged with killing Ole Anderson.

THE Christian Endeavor society is having one of the largest conventions ever known, in Minneapolis, this week.

IOWA republicans have placed in nomination for governor, Hon. Hiram C. Wheeler against the present Democratic incumbent Governor Boise.

THE Minneapolis Times says the report of the Asylum Trustees in the Northrop case roasts Dr. Northrop for the trouble and not Dr. Bartlett, superintendent.

TELEGRAMS from San Diego, Cal., State that the Chilian steamer Itata has arrived at that port as a convoy of the U. S. cruriser Charleston, and will await the actions of the courts at that place.

HANNIBAL HAMLINE the last of the ex-vice presidents, save the present incumbent, has passed away. He died July 4 at the Terratine Club Rooms, in Bangar, Maine. He had been in good health and his death came suddenly and unexpectedly. He was in his 82nd year.

THE Sub-Treasury plank in the Alliance party's platform seems to be the one to let a large portion of the members through. They go tolerably well till they get to that then they stop, stock still and look for something else. Democratic doctrines are catching most of them.

AT Sing Sing, New York on Tuesday the 7th inst., H. A. Smiler, J. J. Slocum, J. Wood (colored) and Shibuya Jugigio, (Japanese) were executed according to law for murder. The new method of killing them by electricity was used, and is said to have worked more satisfactorily than was the case with Kemler who was the first to try it a few months ago.

THE health of James G. Blaine seems to be one of the principal subjects for discussion, with a large number of the dailies. Democrats claim that his health is not good enough to permit him to hold his office to the end of the term and that he will soon resign. The republican papers claim that he is improving. The N. Y. Press claims that he is "making rapid strides toward recovery" and still, quotes Dr. Taylor who it says "visits him usually everyday." What does a man want the doctor for almost every day if he is not sick?

THE large assemblage of people at Howard Lake the other day to listen to the eloquent Donnelly denounce the old parties, (though Mr. D. did not come) shows the unrest mentioned by Editor Stacy, last fall, in the ranks of the Republicans has not become quiet yet. The wheat ring investigation, the state prison investigation, the asylum investigation, all go to show that a spirit of investigation is abroad in the land. If people will investigate and learn for themselves how things political are going they will soon determine on something substantial.

AMONG the most unfortunate sufferers of the human race are those confined within the four walls of an insane asylum. And a very careful selection should be made of a superintendent to oversee an institution where those that are dear to us must spend their days on account of mental disabilities. Asylums should be run with an eye to the comfort of the inmates. Plenty of help should be on hand to properly attend to their wants and needs, these attendants should be able and willing to look after their charges as if they were sane guests who could leave them when they desired, and should be paid enough to satisfy them that they are receiving for their services fair remuneration when compared with laborers in other fields. Superintendents should look after their assistants and helpers. They themselves should not be left entirely alone, but should occasionally be looked after by proper authorities. Dr. Bartlett the present Superintendent who has held the position for more than a score of years in as satisfactorily a manner as is usual should not for political reasons be now relegated to private life. If he has through his well known benevolence of spirit been imposed upon by designing parties once in a quarter of a century this should not cause him to loose his place. No one seems to have charged him with maliciously violating the law in taking patients in who had not been properly committed; but simply of having been too accommodating. If Dr. B. is to be asked to resign as has been intimated he should not be asked to do so on political grounds. If his offical duties are neglected more instances than one should be found. An investigation, however if properly conducted, can injure no one if things are all right.

GROVER CLEVELAND AGAIN

This Time on "Private and Special Legislation."

From the Lousiville COURIER-JOURNAL.

Providence, R. I., Jnne 27.—The dinner of the Commercial Club this evening was the last of the season, and was marked by one of the most distinguished assemblies that ever sat at its board. The company numbered 170. The especial guests of the evening were ex-President Cleveland, Richard Watson Gilder, of the Century; ex-Chief Justice Thomas Durfee; Hon. Oscar Lapham; Mr. Gardner C. Sims; Mr. Lorillard Spencer, Postmaster Charles H. George, President E. Benjamin Andrews, of Brown University, and Judge Douglass, of the Supreme Court.

Private and special legislation was the theme of the evening. Ex-Chief Justice Durfee was the first speaker. He lamented the corruptness of the lobby, and emphasized the importance of citizens and business men taking a more active interest in politics. Gov. Ladd said a few words in introducing ex-President Cleveland. President Andrews was the last speaker. Ex-President Cleveland said:

"I never attend a gathering of business men and recall the restless activity which they represent, and the strain of the brain, which they willingly bear for the sake of profit and success, without wondering that they are content to be so thoroughly engrossed in the immediate details of their occupations as often to lead to an habitual neglect of those affairs which, though outside of their counting houses, exchanges and manufactories have an intimate relation to their prosperity. No one can be oblivious of the fact that matters of legislation and the course of governmental policy are so important to the business in which we engage that our indiyidual efforts in its prosecution may be easily promoted or thwarted by the conduct of those who make and execute our laws. Yet in business circles we find but few men who are willing to forego their ordinary work to engage in the business of legislation. Indeed this unfortunate condition has reached such a pass that our business men think and often speak of politics as something quite outside of this interest of duty, which, if not actually disreputable, may well be left to those who have a taste for it.

"I am by no means unmindful of the spasmodic interference of business interests in politics, spurred on by a selfish desire to be especially and exclusively aided through legislative action. Such interference, based upon such motives, is more blameworthy than inactivity, because it amounts to an attempt to pervert governmental functions, which is worse than a neglect of political responsibility. But I speak of a heedlessness of the duty resting on every one of us as American citizens to participate thoughtfully and intelligently in the general conduct of the Government, which is ours and which has been left to our management. I seek to remind you of the interest, which you and all of us have, as members of our American body politic, in wholesome general laws and onest administration. This interest is represented by the share to which each of us is entitled in the aggregate of advantage, which such laws and such administration secures. This interest and this duty are surely worth all the attention we can bestow upon them, and the penalty of our neglect we shall surely not escape. In order that the patriotism and intelligence of the country should prevail in our legislation, the patriotic and intelligent men of the country must see to it that they are properly represented in our National councils. If they fail in this, they will be governed by those who simply make a trade of politics. If it is well that our legislation be influenced by the enlightened and practical business sense of the people, our business men must see to it that those they trust are chosen as their law makers. If they are indifferent on the subject, the vast interests which so greatly concern them and all their fellow-citizens, will be left at the mercy of those who neither understand them nor care for them, and I don't believe these dangers will be effectively averted until they are better understood by the people and more thoroughly resisted.

"It seems to be that private and special legislation, as it at present prevails, is an evil chargeable to a great extent to the listlessness and carelessness of the people. There is a kind of legislation which upon its face is private and special and which engrosses far too much of the time and attention of our law makers. The people have a right to claim from their representatives their best care and attention to the great subjects of legislation in which the entire country is interested. This is denied them if their representatives take their seats burdened with private bills in which their immediate neighbors are exclusively interested and which they feel they must be diligent in advancing if they would secure their continuance of public life. They are thus led by the exigencies of their situation, as they view it, not only to the support of private bills of questionable propriety, but to the neglect of a study and understanding of the important questions involved in general legislation. Nor does the pernicious effect for such a special and private legislation stop here. The importance of a successful champion-ship of these private bills, measured by the standard which ought not for a moment to be recognized, seems so vital to those having them in charge that they are easily led to barter their votes for measures as bad or worse than theirs, in order to secure the support of similarly situated colleagues. Thus is inaugurated a system called log-rolling, which comes frightfully near actual legislative corruption; and thus the people at large lose not only the attention to their affairs, which is due to them, but are often no better off than when robbed of the money in the public treasury.

"I have not mentioned the aspect of special and private legislation, which seems to me most pernicious. I refer to the habit which it engenders among our people of looking to the Government for aid in the accomplishment of special and individual schemes, and the expectation which it creates and fosters that legislation may be invoked for the securing of individual advantages and unearned benefits.

"The relations of our countrymen toward the Government should be founded upon their love for it, as the fountain head of their national life; their faith in it as the power which preserves them a free people; their reverence for it as the perfect work of the highest partriotism; their confidence in its justice and equality, and their pride in its ownership and management. These should furnish at all times sufficient motive for a lively interest in public affairs, and should supply abundant incentive to popular watchfulness of legislative and executive methods. In the light of these considerations, no thoughtful American can shut his eyes to the truth, that when our people regard their Government as the source of individual benefit and favortism, and when their interest in it is measured by the extent to which they hope to realize such benefit and favoritism, our popular Government is in dangerous hands, and its entire perversion is alarmingly imminent.

"These perils are not alone chargeable to legislation, which is confessedly special and private measures of a general character and apparently proposed for the public good frequently originate in selfish calculations or so completely subserve in their details selfish plans that they also tend toward the fatal point of sordidness among the people and unjust paternalism in the Government. No matter that plausible pretexts may be advanced for such legislation, if it has in it these elements, it ought to be condemned. Neither the cry of protection to American interests nor pretended solicitude for the public good ought to succeed in concealing schemes to favor the few at the expense of the many; nor should the importance to the country of legislative action upon any subject divert us from inquiry concerning the selfish motives and purposes which may be hidden behind the proposal of such legislation.

"It is quite time that our business men and all American citizens, who love their country bestir themselves for battle against the evil tendency of private and special legislation, in whatever guise it may assume. At this time no more important truth can be presented to our people than that they should support their Government in love and patriotism and remain unselfishly content with the blessings and advantages which our free institutions were established to bestow with justice and equality upon every citizen throughout the length and breadth of our land."

Dubious.

"Is it considered an honor to be sent out as a missionary?"

"Yes. Why?"

"I was only wondering," said Mrs. Vealy. "My husband's congregation are unamously desirous that he shall go."—New York Epoch.—Minneapolis Times.

CORRESPONDENCE

ANNANDALE.

We celebrated the Fourth agreeable to previous announcement. The day was propitions and every thing passed off pleasantly. We heard of no accidents or disturbances to mar the festivities of the occasion.

Postmaster Towle presided at the speakers' stand with propriety and dignity.

Judge Hooker, of Minneapolis, delivered the oration and well sustained his reputation as a public speaker. His discourse was largely historical and statistical and was highly instructive, and, his peroration was well calculated to arouse and keep alive the patriotic emotions that the recurrence of the day suggests.

Dr. L. H. Munger, of Fair Haven responded appropriately to the sentiment "The Stars and strips. Their significance to Americans."

W. B. Pineo, of Clearwater responded:—"The duty of Immigrants to the country of their adoption" and Prof. F. H. Lindsley of Delano responded to:—"Education in America."

A Recitation of "Our Great Commander" by Miss Mary E. Hulst, of Fair Haven was very well rendered.

The Instrumental music of the occasion was executed by the Kimball Cornet Band and, so far as we heard expressions of opinion, was very satisfactory. This is a new Band, comparatively, and of course not as much was expected as from some long experienced city Bands.

The Fair Haven Glee Club, as well as our own acquitted themselves creditably, and they, as well as the speakers and the Band are entitled to the thanks of the people of Annandale for their contributions to the entertainment of the occasion.

At the Ball Game, Our nine was not feeling as well as usual that day and the Howard Lake boys just scooped them, and, besides, our boys did not want to hurt the feelings of guests.

The sporting part of the program, was, as much as time would permit, carried out.

The whole was concluded by a Grand Display of Fire Works under the management of Amateur Pyrotechnists Williams, Klatt, Craig and Powers.

Our Schools. The Higher under the instruction of Prof. King and the Primary under Miss Grace Allen, closed with an exhibition last week, Wednesday evening. On account of the crowded condition of the house we were unable to witness the exercises, but learn from some present that they were highly interesting and complimentary of their teachers.

We had a little harmless catastrophe, harmless because nobody was hurt, here last Sunday forenoon. Two gentlemen (?) and their ladies were out each with a nice rig, taking in the wonders and possibilities of our little town and, evidently being in a hurry and each, apparantly, being in a little more hurray than the other, their horses were put down to their best time and, in turning out of Oak Avenue into Cedar Street one of the carriages turned a half somersault upon the occupants. The horse perceiving the perdicament, with friendly heels turned it back and then from pure disgust, with the same heels, demolished the vehicle till in the language of a bystander, "the pieces were not worth picking up." Judging by the number of empty botles that rolled out, the gentleman must have been a Thompsonian doctor ahd had been around among his patients gathering up his empty bottles. Moral, Make haste slow.

Mr. Frank Lewis has commenced the erection of a business house on Oak Avenue South of Buri's Hardware store.

ROCKFORD RIPPLES.

Everybody seemed to enjoy themselves on the 4th and some of the boys seemed to have a picnic clear up to the 6th with the assistance of stealing a jug of whisky out of a farmer's wagon of North Rockford. "Rip" says he don't know whether it was harvest or fighting whisky.

Mark Kelly, of Iowa, visited friends around Rockford station, on the 4th, returning home, Monday.

A. C. Rader & Co. has layed in another supply of wind mills.

D. R. Thompson received five cars of lumber and one of lime, last week. Dan's motto is "quick sales and small profits."

Underlocker and Sauser are making preparation to start a first class meat market. There is no reason why that a meat market would not pay in Rockford if properly run.

A large number of relatives and friends from Minneapolis visited folks in Rockford, on the fourth.

NORTH ROCKFORD NUBBINS.

We can't Hurrah for the 4th of July any more this year. Your correspondent spent the day at home. Those in attendance on the celebration at Rockford, claim it was the best ever held in Wright County.

Miss. Gracie Mosher, Albert Denny and sister Alice spent the 4th at Excelsior.

Hiram Herrington and family, of Maple Plain, visited at Dick Hopkins the 3d and spent the 4th at Rockford.

K. C. Crandall, of this place, took second money in the foot race at Rockford the 4th. "Kit" can run a little bit.

S. D. Fuller, of Rockford, visited at J. L. Parmeter's last Monday.

The school exhibition given by the school of District No, 42, will be held in the M. E. Church. Plenty of room. Come everybody, Miss Lillie is teacher.

William Cochran, of Frankfort, has received a pension from Uncle Sam. He gets about $1,300.00 back pay, and $12.00 per month from this on.

We understand that Levi Thompson has given his order for a new $2,000.00 Threshing outfit.

Mrs. Bert Roberts is visiting Maple Grove.

WATERTOWN WAYS.

Next Monday is fair day in Watertown.

The crops in this vicinity are looking splendid.

Mrs. F. W. Jacobs and family of Minneapolis were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. St. John from Thursday of last week until Wednesday of this week.

Mr. and Mrs Williams and family of Minneapolis spent the 4th with relatives and friends in Watertown.

Mrs. Glisbie and Miss Carpenter of Minneapolis visited with the formers Brothers, Frank and Arthur Crawford on the 4th.

About 50 of Delano's citizens attended the picnic at Watertown on July 4th.

F. A. Brarth and C. G. Halgren members of the Milling Co. were in the cities two or three days this week looking after their interests there.

Henry Dressler came up and spent the 4th with his parents and friends in Watertown.

W. H. H. Bilgram and his sister Miss Margret Bilgram of Minneapolis spent the 4th in Watertown and vicinity.

Among the strangers from abroad who came to Watertown and spent the 4th we mention, Mr. Baxter and two daughters of Bigstone. Mr. and Miss. Arbruch and Mr. Jac Warta of st. Paul. Messrs Charley and Patt Bums and Miss Maggie Burns, Miss Mary Murray, Pat O'Brian, Fred Acker and miss O'Hagen of Minneapolis and many others we did not ascertain the names of.

The Band gave us some very fine music, on the 4th.

The fourth of July as usual was celebrated in grand style in Watertown only this year surpassed all others for a number of years in the number of people present and the order maintained during the day, for, notwithstanding there were about 60 kegs of beer sold in the town there was not more than a half dozen who could not navigate straight. The picnic was well attended and well patronized, the fireworks were nice for the amount of money spent for them, and both Halls were filled to their utmost capacity with dancers.

Mr. Schramn, one of our old residenters, who lost his wife a couple of months ago was married again, on Monday, last to A mrs. Herming of Waconia, they immediately moved into mrs. S's house across the river and on Wednesday evening were tendered the usual tin-pan-kettle music that followers all weddings in Watertown.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, July 3, 1891.

Mr. Harrison's enjoyment of his vacation will not be enhanced by the knowledge of the fact that he has made a big mistake in barganing with Senator Quay for the Pennsylvania delegation to the next republican national convention; as it is now apparent that Mr. Quay will not be able to control the delegation without a bitter fight, if he can then. Such a fight always leaves a bad condition of affairs, as Mr. Harrison well knows from personal experience in his own State, which bodes no good to the individual who benefits by the triumph. This state of affairs is specially disquieting to Mr. Harrison, because it has been his policy ever since he openly entered the field for a renomination, to avoid anything like a fight in any state. He wants it to appear that his nomination is spontaneously demanded by the rank and file of his party, in the meantime patronage and promises are being used for all they are worth to add to this "spontaneous" feeling among the people.

It is a very difficult matter to keep anything secret after it has been discussed with a Government official, be that official the President or one of the heads of departments. Therefore it is not surprising that the principal object of the mysterious visit of Col. Ingersoll and John W. Mackay to the White House last week should have leaked out. It is as yet known to very few, but one of the number has given it to me. The two distinguished gentlemen were on a subsidy "boodle" hunt. They had already received the endorsment of Secretary Blaine, and they came here for that of Mr. Harrison, and there is reason to believe they got it. The scheme is to lay a cable between some point, not yet decided upon, in the United States and Brazil, and the expectation of the promoters of the project is that the subsidies will be more than enough to lay the cable. The idea is to be popularized by giving out the statement that the cable, like the subsidized steam-ships, is necessary before we can receive the full benefits of reciprocity with Brazil. It isn't considered very probable that anything involving the payment of a subsidy will be very popular with the House of the Fifty-second Congress.

Secretary Rusk assumed, under act of Congress, control of the Weather bureau last Wednesday, and Mr. Harrison appointed Prof. M. W. Harrington, of the University of Michigan, chief of the bureau in place of Gen. Greeley. It is very much feared that this is the first step toward making a partisan political machine out of a bureau that has hitherto been kept comparatively free from politics.

Another "ex" has been comfortably provided for by the appointment of exCongressman Simonds, of Connecticut, to be Commissioner of Patents, in place of Charles E. Mitchell of the same State, whose resignation was handed in some time ago. This appointment leaves heads very sore, one particularly sore being that of a Chicago man who thought he had a "cinch" on the appointment.

Jesse Seligman, the Wall Street banker at whose house Secretary Foster stopped when he went to New York several weeks ago, to ascertain how much interest the Wall Street people were willing to pay on the extended four-and-a-half percent bonds, came over here this week to learn why the announcement carrying out his orders had not been made. He was probably satisfied when told that the administration was simply going through the form of considering the matter for the purpose of bamboozling the people, and that in due time the official announcement would be made fixing the interest at the Wall Street figures, 2 per cent.

Mr. Harrison left today for Cape May Point, where he goes to hear what the wild waves are saying about his renomination and other things in which he is interested. Private Secretary Halford informs the public that the executive office will be removed to the same place next week, and that it will probably remain there for five or six weeks.

The administration is in a pickle with the Labor organizations. Just as Secretary Foster was about to capitulate to the Knights of Labor by giving employment in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to the seven knights, who were discharged by Chief Meredith, the Federation of Labor steps up and warns him to do so at his peril, which leaves him "between the devil and the deep sea", as it were.

NEXT to the tariff iniquity the profligate legislation concerning the public lands is perhaps the greatest outrage perpetrated by Republican legislation upon the people. Let us take a glance at the public lands. And first, who acquired them? Under the rule of the Democratic party the following acquisitions were made:

	Acres.
Louisiana purchase by Jefferson	756,961,280
Florida purchase by Monroe	37,931,280
Mexician treaty by Polk	334,443,520
Texas purchase by Pierce	61,892,480
Gadsden purchase by Pierce	29,142,400
Total	1,220,370,960

Under Republican rule, though Andy Johnson was President, the following were acquired:

	Acres.
Alaska purchase by Johnson	369,529,987
Excess of Democratic acquisition	850,840,973

Now let us see about the squandering of the public domain. From 1861 to 1875 there was was granted by Republican Congresses to private corporations lands as follows:

	Acres.
To railroad companies	163,648,944
To State for railroad purposes	19,240,844
To States for wagon roads	2,530,380
Total granted by the Republican party 14 years	185,415,208
The total granted by the Federalist, Democratic and Whig parties from 1799 to 1861—72 years—to States for public improvement purposes	29,824,033
Excess Republican grants	155 591,175

It will be observed that prior to 1861, when the Republicans first attained power, all the public lands granted for public improvements were granted to States, and not to private corporations. It was not until the party of monopoly got control that the public lands were given to Huntington, Stanford, Crocker, Hopkins, Gould, Mills and that layout, making of them millionaires twenty, and forty, and fifty, and a hundred times over.—Courier-Journal.

WILLIAM J. LADD, who received from Harvard this year the degree of bachelor of arts, was the first union man to enter Richmond, it is claimed, at the close of the civil war. He had passed his entrance examination when that struggle began, but instead of going through college he enlisted and made a good record.

MR. HULUKULU, one of the envoys of King Gungunhama, now visiting England, talked into a phonograph, and when he presently heard his own words repeated verbatim he remarked that it was now no use for him to tell lies as all his words were recorded. What a pity the phonograph cannot be put into more general use.

THE new constitution for Kentucky provides that the governor shall be elected in the odd-numbered years, the representatives in the even-numbered years, and that the governor shall be elected at the same time and place as the representatives. And now the constitution makers are wondering whether they have any provision at all for the election of a governor.

BISHOP COXE, the learned Episcopal divine, has taken up the war on the practice of bicycle riding by women. In a recent address in Buffalo, N. Y., at the commencement exercises of St. Margaret's school, he said he "hoped none of the graduates would ever be seen astride a wheel," and that "the girls he had seen riding on Delaware avenue looked like old women on a broomstick."

HORACE GREELEY once said: "The darkest day in any man's career is the day when he first seeks to get a dollar in some easier way than by squarely earning it." This, says the Troy (N. Y.) Times, is sound doctrine, and especially timely in this period of reckless speculation, bank wrecking and visionary financial theories, all directed toward getting gain with the least possible return therefor.

IN one minute and a half a Pennsylvanian ate twenty-four raw eggs, shells and all, on a wager and an empty stomach, and is anxious to bet fifty dollars he can eat twice as many in three minutes. There are some men who make whole communities tired. If this man will promise to eat six hundred eggs at one sitting, the money to pay for them, together with a fifty dollar bonus, can be raised by public subscription almost anywhere.

SIX years ago a New Jersey gentleman bequeathed five thousand dollars of his estate to his widow and twelve thousand dollars to Henry George for the dessemination of single-tax literature. The will was contested by the relatives of the testator, and now, at the close of the contest, Mr. George gets three hundred and ten dollars and the relatives two hundred and ninety-six dollars. The lawyers take the balance.

HARVARD is two hundred and fifty-five years old and has graduated seventeen thousand students. A little more than half of them are living. Harvard's oldest living graduate in point of class connection is Dr. Frederick A. Farley, of the class of 1818, and he is ninety-one. He is probably the oldest minister in Brooklyn. Harvard's oldest graduate in point of personal age is Rev. William Wittington, of Washington, who is over ninety-two. Yale's oldest boy is Edward McCrady, of Charleston, S. C., who graduated with the late ex-President Woolsey in 1820.

MR. SINGERLY has made an interesting experiment as to the time required to print his Philadelphia Record upon paper direct from the tree. This is the record: Chopping one and a half cords of poplar wood, stripping and loading on boat, three hours; time consumed in manufacture of woodpulp, twelve hours; manufacturing the woodpulp into paper, five hours; transporting to Record office, one hour and twenty minutes; wetting paper preparatory to printing, thirty minutes; printing ten thousand Records, ten minutes. Total time from tree to paper, twenty-two hours.

"A HUNDRED years ago," says a slot machine man in the Philadelphia Press, "a man in England who kept a tavern made use of the slot machine. This was a tin box containing tobacco. The frequenters of his tavern dropped a half-penny in the slot and it struck a lever which opened the box. Then the purchaser took out a pinch of tobacco and put it in one of the pipes lying around on tables in the barroom. This is the first slot machine of which any record is known. Nowadays they sell everything in them, especially in England, where they are used for postage stamps."

IT may not generally be known that before the war there was no such flower as the daisy in the state of Virginia. The hardy flower was a curiosity. Now the fields just around Richmond are white with them. This is especially so of the late battlefields about Chickahominy river and wherever the federals had encampments. An investigation shows that the seeds of the prolific daisy were brought there in the bales of hay brought by the union soldiers in Virginia when they were camped near the city. An old battery west of Richmond is the spot from which the daisy began to spread.

The Alliance Party.

ST. PAUL, Minn., July 8.—The first steps have been taken towards organizing the People's party of the State of Minnesota by the appointment and organization of a state central committee, which will henceforth occupy the position held by the old campaign committee of the Alliance. The meeting was held at the Merchants Hotel and the result was the appointment of the following committee:

S. M. Owen, Hennepin county; C. M. Perkins, McLeod; W. W. Erwin, Ramsey; Andrew Steenerson, Polk; J. H. Baker, Blue Earth; Thomas J. Meighen, Fillmore; John B. Hompe, Otter Tail; Andrew Richardson, Wabasha; J. F. McNally, Ramsey; D. P. Lister, Lac qui Parle: Carrington Phelps, Stewens; E. W. Fish, Ramsey; M. Weisenberg, St. Louis; J. H. Hanna, Renville; Ignatius Donnelly, Dakota; A. R. Holston, Polk; Louis Hanson, Clay; C. F. Bohall, Todd; H. B. Martin, Hennepin; A. D. Farris, Pipestone, and P. Gildea, Murray.

The state central committee met in the evening and completed its organization. The session was a long one and was reported to have been harmonious. Thomas J. Meighen of Fillmore county was elected chairman, Louis Hanson of Clay county secretary, and Andrew Steenerson of Polk county treasurer.

The executive committee appointed consists of these three officers and Ignatius Donnelly, S. M. Owen, C. N. Perkins, H. B. Martin, Andrew Richmond, W. W. Erwin, Gen. J. H. Baker and Dr. Fish. Plans were discussed for organizing the counties throughout the state. County Alliances now in existence, will appoint a committee for reorganization, and in counties where there are no county organizations the work will be left to local alliances. The platform of the new party for the time being will be the platform of the Alliance party.

WALLS BLOWN DOWN.

A Cyclone Partially Demolishes the Louisiana Penitentiary at Baton Rouge —Ten Convicts Killed and Many Injured —Other Work of the Wind.

BATON ROUGE, La., July 7.—A terrible tornado struck this city a little after 6 o'clock Monday morning, passing from southwest to northeast. The cyclone entered the city at the Garig brickyard, passed up through Catfishtown, and struck the hill just east of Mr. John Johnson's residence. Its path continued in a northeasterly direction, crossing North boulevard 100 yards to the east of the governor's mansion. It then went north, striking the penitentiary building and the J. A. Dougherty residence on North street, and thence beyond the city. The cyclone was 300 yards wide, and ricocheted along its course like a cannon ball, devastating as it went. In the city no one was killed, though several persons were seriously injured.

The state penitentiary was partially wrecked. Ten convicts were killed and thirty-five injured, five of these dangerously. There were forty prisoners at work in the pants factory at the time of the crash, and of that number six were killed and twenty-two were wounded and horribly crushed. On the second story or central floor was the hospital, where twenty sick prisoners lay undergoing medical treatment, of which number four were killed and fourteen seriously if not fatally injured. The fire alarm was sounded and the entire fire department was summoned to the scene of the dreadful catastrophe, and together with the citizens and prison officials, aided by the uninjured prisoners, worked vigorously for the rescue of the unfortunates who lay confined under the great heap of debris that was thickly strewn over every quarter of the premises. Scenes of the greatest horror greeted the eyes of those engaged in the rescuing work, and the pitiful wails and death groans from the men buried out of sight by massive heaps of bricks and mortar could be heard arising from every part of the wreck. Of the number wounded about six are expected to die, and the recovery of several of the others is extremely doubtful. The total damage to the penitentiary building is estimated at $30,000.

The towboat Smoky City was caught in the cyclone at 5:50 a. m. 8 miles below Baton Rouge. The entire cabin was blown down. The escape of the crew from death was somewhat wonderful considering the fact that they were asleep and that the greatest possible damage was done to the boat by the violence of the storm. Johnson, a colored fireman, was blown overboard and drowned. Eight members of the crew were injured.

In the city fifty houses at least were unroofed or destroyed. Mr. J. H. Young and members of his family were seriously hurt by the collapse of their house on St. Charles street. Mrs. Cotton, son and two daughters, living in a brick house on Main street, were injured in the falling of the building. Mrs. Cotton received a dangerous blow in the back of the head and also internal injuries, while one of the girls was cut on the leg. Mrs. Cotton, it is thought, will recover. There were no others seriously hurt. The governor's residence was partially demolished, and the roof of a handsome residence belonging to Mr. Marshal was carried away and large damage done to the place. The boulevard is one mass of trees that have been torn up by the wind, and the streets are filled with pieces of housetops and other timbers of every description. The rain fell in torrents all day.

The capitol was unharmed by the winds, as was also the business portion of the town on Main and Ferd streets. The southern portion of the city, styled "Catfishtown," suffered great loss and damage of property. In this section of the city several persons were seriously hurt and bruised by flying timbers from falling houses and fences. The drug store of B. A. Day was completely demolished and its contents ruined, the loss amounting to $5,000. Several of the small grocery stores and stall shops in this vicinity were destroyed. The brickyard of Galig, Reddy & Co. was badly damaged, but the loss is covered by insurance.

OTHER STORMS IN THE SOUTH.

BROOK HAVEN, Miss., July 7.—Monday morning about 6 o'clock the southwestern portion of this county was visited by a destructive cyclone, demolishing houses, fences and uprooting trees. The places of Amos Hodges and David Reeves were destroyed and a number of persons injured. At McNavis' logging camp one man was killed and three wounded.

MADISON, Miss., July 7.—A cyclone struck this place about 11 o'clock Monday. It came from the southeast. Disasters are reported as follows: H. E. McKay's plantation, destroying negro cabins, killing Wesley Young (colored), and wounding several others. Mr. B. H. McKay's building was wrecked. The storm then passed across the railroad, leveling telegraph poles. The residences of Glasscock and Brown were then first reached in town. Both houses were wrecked. The Presbyterian church and school building were completely swept away, and on A. M. Jones' place outstanding buildings were destroyed and stock injured, trees, orchards and shrubbery ruined. Passing out of town to the northwest the cyclone completely destroyed the two colored churches and the residence of Hannah Lee, colored.

STARVED TO DEATH.

A Woman with $1,500 on Deposit Dies of Starvation.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., July 7.—Mrs. Davis died in the utmost squalor Monday from starvation. She had saved in her lifetime $1,500, which she had on deposit in a local bank. She became too ill to work some weeks ago, and refused to use a penny of her money in the bank. She would not even send her son, who lives in Omaha, enough money to visit her. Her friends discovered her condition too late to be of any assistance to her and she died from starvation.

Public School Statistics.

WASHINGTON, July 7.—A census bulletin on education, prepared by Mr. James H. Blodget, expert special agent, gives the preliminary showing of public school enrollment from the records of the states not shown in previous bulletins. The combined bulletins for the whole country show an apparent enrollment in the public schools for 1880 of 9,951,608 and for 1890 a public school enrollment of 12,522,721, an apparent gain of enrollment in public schools of 26.54 per cent. The gain of population meantime was 24.86 per cent.

PAID THE PENALTY.

Murderer Slocum Executed by Electricity at Sing Sing, N. Y.

SING SING, N. Y., July 7.—At 4:42 a. m. Slocum, one of the condemned men, was taken from his cell to the room where the execution was to be held, seated in the chair, and in the presence of the witnesses the current was turned on. In a second life was apparently extinct. Smiler, Wood and Jugigo, the other condemned men, will be sent to their doom one by one, the Jap last.

THE APPARATUS OF DEATH.

The chair in which condemned men suffer the death penalty is a substantial as well as comfortable-looking piece of woodworkers' mechanism, and, with the connections with the dynamo, was designed by Capt. Hilbert, the prison machinist, under whose supervision it was built. It is constructed in a very workmanlike manner and differs very materially from the chair used in the execution at Auburn prison. As the visitor enters the room of execution he faces the chair, which is placed at the opposite end. This article of furniture, which is an object of terror, is very solid. The seat is broad, and the back, on which a heavy headrest is constructed, has a slight curve. Above the rest and fastened to the back by a long strip is a figure "4," which is intended to rest on the head of the occupant. It is through the wire in this that the current passes. Besides this there are a number of straps used to secure the prisoner in position after he has taken his seat in the chair. The condemned man is strapped to the chair. Against the base of his spinal column presses the cold, clammy webbing of the lower electrode, and against the top of his forehead is pressed the moistened sponge of the upper electrode.

The chair faces the east, and directly behind it is a low cabinet for the use of the man who turns on the current and who is thus out of sight of every one. Its sides, however, do not reach the ceiling, so the operator can have plenty of ventilation. Directly back of the cabinet and against which the cabinet stands is a door leading directly to the dynamo room. On the side of the cabinet is a sliding door, which on being opened reveals the switchboard, by which signals are given to the operator, who stands in the cabinet and turns on the fatal current. This apartment—of ordinary partition height—extends into the room about 5 feet. Upon the south side is the switchboard of the electrical apparatus. Before this the scientist stands. The dynamo which generates electricity at the other end of the prison yard is directed by signals. When the scientist is satisfied with the voltage and amperes he pulls down the handle just under the globes. This shuts off the lights and throws so much more strength into the current. Then he is ready to send the death-dealing current into the control of the executioner.

It is the man in the closet who turns the switch. He stands ready. At a knock from the scientist, which is indicated as he throws down the switch handle, giving him all the current, he knows that his duty must then be done. His apparatus is simple. Heavy insulated wires come through from the switchboard. The negative current passes through the wire which extends downward through the floor and thence through coils at the bottom of the chair to the negative electrode up through the body of the condemned. The current to the positive electrode is carried along an upper wire. It passes through a curved tubing which is suspended above the head of the victim. The executioner stands grasping the handle. The signal from the scientist shows that all is ready. The handle falls. The switch is dealing death.

CRIMES OF THE MEN.

James J. Slocum lived at 7 Cherry street and had been a baseball player and a common laborer. He had long been a wife-beater, but commonly pounded his wife with his fists and kicked her. On the night of December 31, 1889, he went home and took an ax which had been used by his wife to break up boards for fuel, and beat the woman's brains out with it. He was convicted in March, 1890, before Judge Martin, and was originally sentenced to die during the week beginning May 5 of that year.

Harris A. Smiler was at one time a Salvation army captain. He was a printer by trade, and had developed a rare faculty for getting married. At the time the murder was committed there were three women living to whom he had been married, and none of them had been divorced. The last one to go through the ceremony with him, Maggie Drainey, was his victim. He had been living with her at 284 Seventh avenue, but on account of his brutality she had determined to leave him. He went home drunk on the night of April 3, 1889, and when she refused to promise to remain with him he shot her to death. He was originally condemned to die in the week beginning August 14, 1890, but the appeals taken have saved his life thus far.

Joseph Wood was one of the negroes employed in building the new aqueduct. One pay-day in May, 1889, he got in one of the fights common among the gangs of laborers employed there. His opponent was an Italian, Carlo Ruffi, also an aqueduct laborer. Ruffi was killed. Wood has always asserted that he took Ruffi's life in self-defense. His case was taken to the supreme court of the United States on the novel plea that Wood was not tried by his peers, because no negroes were on the jury. The appeal served only to prolong the prisoner's life.

The last of the four was a common specimen, neither better nor worse, of the crews of the ships that sail out of the port of New York. His name is Shibuyo Jugizo, and he is a native of Japan. He was living in one of the James street sailors' homes while awaiting the pleasure of the boarding house boss in the matter of putting him on board of a ship on which he had already signed articles to return to Japan. He got into a dispute with a countryman, Mura Canni, about a berth in the forecastle in the ship. Jugizo got a carving knife and stabbed Canni to death in the course of the fight that followed.

CONCERNING LARGE CITIES.

IN the great animal market at Hamburg, in Germany, giraffes sell at $7,000 a pair, chimpanzees go at $800 apiece and select lots of Sumatra monkeys at $1,000.

ACCORDING to the latest municipal reports there are in St. Petersburg one hundred and fifty-three streets and squares without pavement, sewers or gaslights. They are the breeding spots of disease and crime in the great metropolis.

THE street railways of Paris are under the government control and the rules for their guidance are very strict. Only four passengers are allowed to stand on the back platform, and they must pay the same fare as the first class passengers inside, viz., six cents, while those on the roof of the car ride at half rates.

THE census of London shows a population of 4,211,056—an increase in the last ten years of 395,485. In 1801 the population was 958,863. The increase during the last twenty years has been greatest in the suburban districts, the rate there being calculated at 126.8 per cent., while that of London proper has been only 36 per cent.

A Wealthy St. Paul Woman Remembers Her Dog in Her Will.

The will of Mrs. May I. Dayton, of St. Paul, who died in San Francisco recently, makes some peculiar bequests. The fourth provision requests her executor to pay to Mrs. Martha Wetenball, of Minneapolis, five dollars a month for the board and care of her dog Tasso so long as he shall live. James C. Reed, of Newport City, private secretary of the late President Arthur, is named as executor, and the bulk of her property in Minnesota, South Dakota and elsewhere, valued at $255,000, is willed to Mr. Reed. Lyman C. Dayton, of St. Paul, husband of the deceased, says the will is a forgery and he will contest it.

Married a Priest.

A marriage notice in a Chicago paper that Charles Mikula had wedded Miss Regina Brown in Chicago created a sensation at St. Paul. The lady in the case is Mrs. Regina Zahonyi, musical principal in the Franklin school, who was divorced from her husband June 11, on the ground of drunkenness and cruelty, though he and his friends denied both charges. Charles Mikula was the assistant priest at St. Agnes' Catholic church, who by his oath had no right to contract marriage.

A Church Reinstated.

The Swedish Lutheran church at Litchfield that was expelled from the Augustana synod a few months ago because a number of its members belonged to secret societies has been reinstated. Persons who belonged to secret societies before they joined the church will be taken back, but those who have joined secret societies since joining the church will not be allowed to remain in the church. Hereafter no member will be allowed to join secret societies.

Grand Commandery.

The grand commandery of Knights Templar of Minnesota in session at Rochester elected the following officers:

Right eminent grand commander, Sir Knigh Powell, of Redwood Falls; deputy grand commander, Sir Knight Hugo; grand generalissimo, Sir Knight William Bushnell, of St. Paul; grand captain general, Sir Knight A. T. Stebbins, of Rochester; prelate, P. P. Hubbell, of Detroit; recorder, Thomas Montgomery, of St. Paul; treasurer, J. G. McFarland, of Minneapolis.

Sunday-School Workers.

The Minnesota State association of Sunday-schools in session at Duluth elected officers as follows: President, Nathan Ford, St. Paul; secretary, C. C. Steetson, Minneapolis; treasurer, J. E. Bell, Minneapolis. Four vice presidents were also elected. Judge A. D. Perkins was made state superintendent. Five thousand dollars was the sum set aside for the work in the state for the coming year.

In Favor of Margaret Spence.

Secretary Noble has confirmed the decision of the local land office at Duluth in the celebrated Spence case, involving title to one of the celebrated McDonald forties. The decision was in favor of Margaret Spence, the scripee. The property is worth about $100,000 and is leased for mining purposes.

The News Briefly Chronicled.

The corner stone of the east side Odd Fellows' building in Minneapolis has been laid.

Julius Schultz, of Dayton Bluff, who was struck in the side of the head by an engine, died from his injuries.

The jury in the personal injury case of Charles Gibson vs. the Minneapolis, St. Paul & Sault Ste. Marie railroad brought in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff at St. Paul, assessing his damage at $10,000.

William I. Chowen has tendered his resignation as postmaster at Chowen, Hennepin county.

Half-breeds near Beaver Creek discovered silver that tests 60 per cent. C. A. McGraw has bought the mine and expects to raise money to develop it.

The annual reunion of the First Minnesota infantry was held at Winona, over 100 of the old veterans being in attendance.

George Ehlers attempted to commit suicide at Winona by hanging himself in the barn. He was discovered and cut down in time to save his life.

Frederic Schumacher, Henry Vluseman and Albert Schling were arrested at Ada for attempting to wreck a passenger train on the Great Northern road. They are boys of 16 and 17 years of age.

The St. Paul, Stillwater & Taylors Falls road has been placed in the hands of a receiver.

William Minger, 22 years of age, was drowned in Mowery's pond, near Fremont Corners, while bathing.

Seth Abbott, of Minneapolis, father of the late Emma Abbott, has made an assignment.

Prof. W. F. F. Selliek, superintendent of the public schools at Northfield the past year, has resigned his position, and the board has accepted the resignation.

State Auditor Bierman sold over 15,000 acres of state land near Alexandria at prices ranging from $5 to $15 per acre.

Lightning struck the elevator of the Minnesota & Dakota Elevator Company at Spicer, and it, with 700 bushels of wheat, burned. Only a heavy rain at the time saved the town.

Charlie Anderson, a bricklayer, was found alongside the railroad track about a mile from Wadena with a bad cut back of his head. He was slugged by tramps.

At Sacred Heart there was an old settlers' celebration to commemorate the first settlement of the western part of Renville county twenty-five years ago.

Will Davenport and Joe Johnson, aged respectively 12 and 13, were drowned at Northfield. They and another boy, Cliff Davenport, aged 11, got into a canoe to play and it accidentally parted from its fastenings and the frightened boys jumped into the water.

An unknown woman, supposed to be insane jumped into the lake at Washburn. She was pulled out by an elevator inspector.

The apple crop is an entire failure at Owatonna but the lack is somewhat compensated for by a bountiful crop of strawberries, and the prospects were good for a large yield of raspberries and other small fruits.

In sinking an artesian well at Warren, natural gas was struck at a depth of 20 feet. It came out with such force that it threw stones 30 feet high. The gas was accidentally ignited and a flame shot into the air 40 feet.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—Lord Randolph Churchill is to receive ten thousand dollars from the London Graphic for a series of twenty letters about his tour in Mashonaland. This is for serial publication only, and when collected in a volume they ought to bring the author as much more.

—Bismarck is quoted by a Berlin correspondent to the effect that he will publish his memoirs during his life, so that he can defend them if they are attacked. He says it would make him "jump in his coffin" if some persons he could think of were to have an opportunity of lying about him unanswered.

—Dr. Edward Everett Hale declares that the secret of the power of Browning over the great masses of men is that he talks as if he were talking to archangels, and, even if we do not understand, we are uplifted. Doubtless, yet the most valuable and lasting impulse is not that received from something that is vaguely comprehended and blindly admired.

—Two weeks before Moltke's death the account of the celebration of his birthday last October 26 was published in book form. In it congratulatory dispatches from princes, statesmen and generals occupy seven hundred and eighty pages; from societies and meetings, fifteen hundred pages; from students and schools, one hundred and seventy four pages.

—Whistler and Oscar Wilde are great friends. The story goes that on one occasion Whistler told a very funny story, and after the applause had ceased Wilde drawled out somewhat peevishly: "Egad, Whistler, I wish I'd said that." Thereupon Whistler retorted, amiably and soothingly: "Ah, never mind, Oscar, but have patience, for you will say it, indeed you will."

—In 1878 Mr. Anthony Rich made a will leaving something of his property to Charles Darwin, "to whose transcendent genius and subtle investigation, extending over a long period of years, the discovery and practical proofs of the law of evolution is due." When Darwin died Mr. Rich made a codicil declaring that this gift should take effect as if he had died before Darwin, and that the property should be subject to Darwin's will. Mr. Rich has just died, and two relatives of Darwin are appointed executors.

—The gallant Gen. Franz Sigel may be seen on Broadway, New York, at times, but he does not look as vigorous as in other years, and it is evident that the hard experiences of life have told upon him. He is but sixty years of age, yet it is half a century since he was a student of the military school at Carlsruhe in Germany, forty-three years since he held command in the Baden revolution, forty years since he came to America, and thirty years since he entered upon service in the war for the American union. He has had a life of activity and many experiences as a soldier, politician and writer.

—The young Chinese emperor has celebrated the completion of his twentieth year by picking out a new wife. Precedent allows a man of his rank seven of these companions, and this acquisition is only the second. His mother examined the many candidates for the honor, and selected ten therefrom, out of which number Hwangti made the final choice. This maiden is the daughter of a mandarin of the yellow button, and is said to have the smallest foot in Pekin. To be an emperor's wife in China is not considered a very enviable lot, as after marriage she is never permitted to see any of her old friends again.

HUMOROUS.

—No Obstacles There.—She—"You will ask papa, will you not, or must I?" He—"Oh, I have seen him. Fact is, he made the suggestion that it was about time for me to propose."—Indianapolis Journal.

—Watts—"Do you really think old Deacon Podberry has such great faith in prayer as he pretends to?" Potts—"Yes. Haven't you noticed that he never prays for his enemies?"—Indianapolis Journal.

—First Passenger—"They say that everybody is more or less superstitious. How is it with you? Do you believe in signs?" Second Passenger—"Believe in signs? You bet your life I do! I make my living painting them."—Somerville Journal.

—She—"Did you enjoy your life at college?" He—"Not altogether." She—"Why not?" He—"One of my professors used to have a habit of making jokes and we were all of us afraid of being suspended if we didn't laugh."—Sommerville Journal.

—The Improved Sportsman (after the hunt)—"Well, forester, did the baron have good luck?" "Remarkably good luck." "What did he score?" "Nothing." "And you call that luck, do you?" "I do, indeed. Whenever he has let anything before it has turned out to be a huntsman."—Fliegende Blaetter.

—A Slip of the Tongue.—"Just imagine, my dear fellow! I was at the hunt for the wild boar—suddenly I stepped out from behind a bush, when—" "Come now, you told me all that story day before yesterday." "Impossible! Why, I—I only heard the story myself two hours ago!"—Fliegende Blaetter.

—Awfully Near a Bad Break.—"Good evening," exclaimed the young man as he approached the front stoop where his girl was sitting. "Is it warm enough for—" "Sir," she interrupted in forbidding tones. "For ice cream?" he went on, in the most tranquil manner imaginable, and the girl on the front step looked silly.—Washington Post.

—The Truthful Editor.—Veritas—"I didn't see my last communication." Editor—"It was in, I am sure, for I put it in myself." Editor (after Veritas has gone)—"There! I shouldn't wonder if he thought I meant the paper, while the idea I meant to convey was that I put it the waste basket. Well, well, if people will misconstrue one's meaning one can not be held responsible."—Boston Transcript.

THE LITTLE LASS IN PINK.

A peerless pearl of beauty,
A jewel of romance!
Who would not ride in tourney
To gain her winsome glance?
Who would not be a minstrel,
The golden rhymes to link,
And sing her praise in merry lays—
The little lass in pink?

So tiny are her glovelets,
So dainty are her shoon,
I trow the pixies wrought them
Beneath the midnight moon;
And o'er the elfin stitches
They sang, with many a wink,
"We twine a twist that none resist
The little lass in pink."

She hath a witching dimple;
Now was it not a sin
That when the fairies crowned her
They put that dimple in!
The heartaches it hath given
It grieves my soul to think:
She hath no care how lovers fare—
The little lass in pink.

Her smile is like a dewdrop
That glistens in the morn.
Her frown—no eye hath seen it:
She never looks in scorn.
Her footsteps fall like rose leaves
Beside the fountain's brink.
The gallants sigh as she goes by—
The little lass in pink.

After the revel's over,
When stars grow dim above,
And slumber's drowsy fingers
Have kissed the eyes we love,
Ho! gallant cavaliers,
Your parting beakers clink:
"May time tread light and never blight
The little lass in pink!"

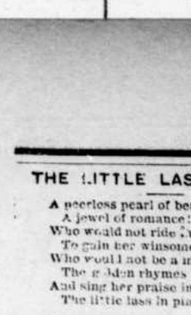
MRS. HERRICK'S BABY.

Its Advent Causes a Genuine Sensation in Carterville.

[Written for This Paper.]



'TIS a hot, dusty summer day, and along the whole straggling length of the one street of the little mining camp but two living creatures are visible. From the open windows of the Mermaid and White Elephant saloons comes a hum of lazy voices whose owners are doubtless playing freeze-out for the drinks; aside from this, the motley cluster of log houses and "A" tents partakes largely of the silence popularly attributed to a cemetery.

Of the two animate objects on the street, one is "Gawge," the huge Ethiopian who officiates as presiding genius of the culinary department at Peter Hoskins' boarding house, near by. He, after the fashion of his race, is lying on a bench, face downward, taking an audible siesta, with the dense rays of the scorching sun beating unheeded upon his broad back. The other creature is the saddle-horse belonging to Doc Starr, the physician from the neighboring camp of Anaconda; this animal, tied in front of the one-story and two-room residence of Homely Herrick, is busily engaged in brushing off the torturing armies of flies which beset him.

Homely Herrick is a leading citizen and a very important personage, indeed, in Carterville and all the camps around. Not that he possesses any unusual charms of mind, manner or person—not in the least; for he is lazy, ugly, drunken and shiftless to a degree seldom known. But, what exalts him in the eyes of all his fellow-citizens is the fact that he is the proud husband of the only woman within a hundred miles or more—hence he is a person to be looked up to, and his opinion, even at his drunkest, is accepted as the utterance of an oracle.

Mrs. Herrick is not a goddess, although any man in Centerville or anywhere else who says anything calculated to cast a shadow of doubt upon the divinity she is supposed to possess, might as well select his last resting-place about the time he utters the sacrilegious words. In fact, this fair creature is a fat, coarse, densely ignorant Cornish woman, who sometimes uses cuss words, and is as unprepossessing personally as her spouse—perhaps more so. She also has a very depressing effect on the scales in Centerville, inasmuch as she tips the beam to the tune of something like twenty-two stone.

But she is a woman, and, as the sole representative of her sex in this wild little camp, is gazed upon by the four hundred men of Carterville with feelings akin to worship; and the lucky man who is so fortunate as to receive the lady's gracious permission to carry her bundles home from the store is for days thereafter the object of vividly-green jealousy on the part of his companions.

A figure emerges from the front door of the Herrick mansion. It is Doc Starr, who hastily mounts his horse and gallops wildly up the street, followed by a swirling cloud of white dust.

"BOYS, BABY AT HERRICK'S!"

"Gawge," snoozing on the bench, awakens from his slumber and gazes at the coming horseman in blinking surprise, for Doc Starr is usually merciful unto his beast, and this unwonted haste on his part, on such a hot day, astonished the colored gentleman.

The physician draws rein at the Mermaid, throws his reins over a post, and rushes into the barroom, where he brings all the miners to their feet by yelling, in a manner entirely at variance with professional ethics: "Boys! Baby at Herrick's!"

There is a wild rush, and the bar and the card-tables are deserted, the bartender coming with the rest, and they almost crush the bearer of the wonderful news in their eagerness to get near him.

"Sho!" "Do tell!" "Great Scott!" "By gosh!" "Why in Texas don't you give Doc a chance?" "Boy, or girl?" (This last hesitatingly.)

"Girl!" yells Doc, proudly, "born last night. Come on, boys—let's liquor up." But in the wild shout which follows his announcement the invitation passes unheeded.

Then there is a brief consultation with the physician. Yes, Mrs. Herrick is sitting up, and is well enough to receive visitors, he thinks. The news spread like wildfire, and in less time than it takes to tell it, there is an excited mob of men—almost three hundred of them—in the street, whither they have flocked from saloons, stores and boarding houses.

Doc Starr, Pete Hoskins and Heavy Fairbank, the rotund proprietor of the Mermaid, are appointed an interviewing committee to apprise the happy parents of the intentions of the mob and are hurrying down the street toward the Herrick abode. They return soon with the desired permission, and the eager but now quiet procession moves rapidly along, headed by the committee and Clip-ear Tomkins, the gentleman who runs the White Elephant.

The doors of the Herrick home are opened wide, the one for the worshipers to enter by and the other for an exit. The procession halts and the four gentlemen leading it enter to take their look at the little, red, ugly, blinking thing which Mrs. Herrick proudly holds in her arms.

Doc Starr has seen it before, and may see it any time, so he does not linger; Hoskins and Fairbank, being bachelors, merely look curiously at the little creature and pass on, feeling queer. But Tomkins is said to have a wife and family somewhere back in the "states," and a hungry, heart-starved feeling wells up in his breast and two big tears start from the keen eyes that have not known them for years. Tomkins looks long and wistfully—then the crowd outside tells him to hurry. He stoops hastily over the babe, kisses it bashfully, and, with something like a sob, grabs a handful of coin and nuggets from his pocket, throws it into the lap of the astonished Mrs. Herrick and says: "Git somethin' fer th' kid," and rushes out.

And so all the rest of the afternoon the wondering, curious throng goes in and out of the little room, each one leaving a remembrance behind him, until Mrs. Herrick's lap overflows, and then a vacant chair and a wooden table are strewn with little sacks of gold dust and littered with nuggets and coin. It is more money than the poor couple ever dreamed of having all at once, and Mrs. Herrick sits in stupefied amazement and her wondering spouse hastens down street to spend part of his suddenly-acquired fortune for whisky.

And the miners come in, four at a time, to see and be conquered—old men, young men, ignorant miners and men whose faces, if shaven, would betoken their owners gentlemen by birth and education. Married men, some of them whose throats feel choky and stifled as they look upon this tiny creature and think of their own little ones at home, far away, and they leave the house lingeringly and sneak off by themselves to have a good, lonesome, comfortable think. Young men, some of them hardly more than boys, also come in and see this baby with strange feelings in their hearts, and go away ashamed of themselves, somehow, though they know not why. As they join their friends afterward they endeavor to assume an air of cheerful nonchalance they are far from feeling.

There is no procession back up the street. The men who marched together down to Herrick's awhile ago go away alone, or in quiet groups which soon separate. Somehow nobody feels sociable, and Heavy Fairbank and Clip-ear Tomkins as they sit before their respective places of business in the evening, think a great deal, but do not notice how dull trade is.

The little red baby, in the midst of plenty where poverty has reigned before, squalls and howls and makes night hideous just as other babies do, never knowing how many hearts she has softened nor how many sweet and tender recollections she has caused to wake in the rugged breasts of the throng of hardy, reckless, careless men who gathered this day to do her honor.

And Mr. and Mrs. Homely Herrick have issued "P. P. C.'s"—verbal—to their many friends. They are going back to the "states" and Carterville mourns.

R. L. KETCHUM.

True to His Mother's Memory.

Mrs. Goodenough—And you are hungry, poor fellow. Here, take this bread and milk. And now tell me, my good man, why you became a tramp.

Rednosed Billy—Because I have never forgotten the teachings of my dear, dead mother. She always—heaven bless her—impressed upon me the wise counsel: "Waste not, want not."

Mrs. Goodenough—Yes; but I don't see—

Rednosed Billy—Of course you don't. It isn't to be expected that you, with your ignorance of scientific facts, should see. But you must know, madam, that it is well established that every adult laboring man wastes five ounces of muscle in the course of a day's labor. Therefore, while I reverence the memory of my sainted mother, madam, I cannot, nay, I will not, work.—Chicago Times.

Not Afraid of Snak

An Ohio woman picked up an armful of sticks and carried them in to throw on the fire. One of the sticks twined itself around her waist. Did she shriek and alarm the neighbors? Not a bit of it. She put the snake in a bottle, corked it up and when she went to town sold it to the local druggist for two dollars as a curiosity. A woman as enterprising as that doesn't get scared easily.—Detroit Free Press.

SCHOOL AND CHURCH.

—America has 441 educational institutions with the right to confer degrees.

—Vienna university had last term 4,409 regular and 1,811 irregular students; 3,242 young men were there to study medicine, and 216 to study theology.

—Mrs. Charlotte B. Richardson has left thirty thousand dollars to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, the income to go to the department of industrial chemistry.

—German professors and university authorities have a natural cause for their great dissatisfaction at the kaiser's ridiculous advocacy of dueling in the large increase of duels.

—The university of Upsala, in Sweden, during the present term has an attendance of 1,658. Of these 254 are in the theological department, 740 in the philosophical, 443 in the law, and 221 in the medical.

—Harvard has decided to count work done in the summer schools as regular term work for the A. B. degree. This makes the summer schools an integral part of the university. This concession makes it easier to get a degree in three years.

—There are forty-five Lutheran churches in Philadelphia. Only one other city in the country has more; that is Chicago, with sixty-three. Next after Philadelphia comes Baltimore, with thirty-three, while New York has only twenty-two.

—A Baptist missionary tells of 1,371 persons being baptized in one place, between the hours of 1:30 and 6 p. m., by three ministers. This is an average of more than one hundred to the hour for each officiating baptizer—more than three in every two minutes.

—The university of Pennsylvania talks of lengthening its medical course to four years. This calls for an endowment fund of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, to which, on certain conditions, Provost William Pepper is willing to subscribe fifty thousand dollars.

—Harvard has enriched its resources by addition of a Semitic museum, its collection the gift of Jacob Schiff, of New York. It is composed of originals, photographs and plaster casts. Among the originals are clay tablets with records dating as far back as 2200 B. C., Babylonian and Assyrian seals curiously carved, and manuscripts, Syriac, Arabic and Hebrew.

—The London board of education has appointed six women, at a salary of four hundred dollars each, to visit schools. Heretofore lady visitors have been regularly employed, but without remuneration, the position being honorary. The visitors will be expected to put in as many hours' work as the teachers, and to furnish weekly reports to the board accounting for every hour of service during the session.—School Journal.

—The Catholic missions in Bengal under the conduct of the Belgian Jesuits have been very successful. Commencing in 1881, the first year for which we have exact figures, we find the converts amounted to 16,149. In 1886 their numbers had increased to 20,000, and in 1888 these had advanced to 53,281. In 1881 baptisms numbered 378; in 1886 they had increased to 3,274, while in 1888 they reached the total of 35,000.—Chicago Times.

—Prof. Harper states that the building fund of the new Chicago university has been enlarged recently by $500,000, making a total of $1,250,000. In addition to its building fund is the endowment fund of $2,000,000 for the support of professors, scholarships, etc. The trustees have decided to purchase additional land. The Morgan park theological school is to be made a part of the university. The erection of buildings for the academical department will be begun at once, and the classical, scientific and theological departments will be open in 1892.

SMALL LOSSES.

A Word of Advice Concerning Petty Failures.

The batch of bread is spoiled; the dress pattern is ruined; the best tea set is broken—and this world is a wilderness, with no truth or virtue under the sun.

Let us see. Any loss is bad; but some losses are worse than others. There are some things which are only gained by losing them, and there are others which we can not lose; spending them, they remain in our possession. Here are wasted the materials, the time, the labor and the patience. It was all for nothing. Is it not fit to sit and make moan? Is it not meet to bewail the disaster and reiterate the particular, with much self-reproach and beating of the breast?

The materials are spoiled—perhaps. If they are indeed hopeless, it is best to thrust them far away, lest they tempt the beholder to fresh lamentation. The time? Why throw good time after bad? Should not the next hour be made more profitable, instead of less, because of the one wasted? The patience? Ah! that is one of those blessed possessions which are gained by spending, of which the store is increased by paying out. And the labor? No honest labor is really lost, though its end we can not see, and though its present result may be sometimes counted a failure. The attempt remains to bless the worker, and spur him on to fresh achievements.

The loss is not so great as it might be. Up, and do better!—Harper's Bazar.

What an American Girl Needs.

What the American girl needs most is good health. If she has that she is blessed far beyond those who have accomplishments by the score. She should, above all things else, be allowed to grow up with her womanly instincts unimpaired, for upon them, rather than upon her training, will her happiness and success in life depend. Let her nurse dolls, make clothes for them, build playhouses, make mud pies, and romp with the boys. As she grows up encourage her to make clothes for herself as well as for her dolls, and to make pies of dough instead of mud. If she shows a taste for needle-work don't discourage her, because her knowledge will not detract from her social qualities. If of a domestic turn encourage her in it by allowing her to have charge of certain branches of housework. If music is her taste afford her every opportunity for becoming proficient.—Pittsburgh Commercial Gazette.

Sound Advice.

Flossie—I've engaged a dressmaker, mamma, to work at the house, and I'm going to assist her.

Mamma—I would advise you to get two. You will need one, you know, to rip out what you do.—Judge.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—Oatmeal Cakes: Scald one pint of meal; add two eggs, one tablespoonful of flour, milk enough for thin batter. Bake in gempans.—Good Housekeeping.

—Parsnips: Wash and scrape lightly, but do not peel; cut lengthwise and put in a stew pan with two or three slices of fat salt pork, barely cover with boiling water. Let them cook dry and brown a little.—Housekeeper.

—There are many simple and effective disinfectants, among which are: Coffee pounded and burned on an iron plate, sugar burned on hot coals, vinegar boiled with myrrh and sprinkled on the floor and furniture of a sick-room.

—Rock Cakes: Rub half a pound of butter into a pound of dried flour and half a pound of fine sugar; mix the whole with two beaten eggs and a teaspoonful of essence of lemon; drop them on to a baking tin and bake them for half an hour.—Boston Herald.

—Butter Dressing for Vegetable Salad: Melt one-quarter of a cup of butter in a plate. Do not let it boil. Mix with it one teaspoon of dry mustard, one saltspoon white pepper, a little cayenne, and one tablespoon of vinegar. Stir with a fork, and as the butter cools it will thicken. Mix it with asparagus, string-beans, shell-beans, cauliflower, or other warm vegetables, and serve cold.—Boston Budget.

—Young Potatoes: Pare potatoes and cut in inch squares. Cover with boiling water and cook till tender. Pour off water and add enough milk to barely cover them. When this comes to a boil, add a tablespoonful of flour stirred smooth in a little cold milk, and one well-beaten egg. Pour this in slowly, stirring the potatoes constantly, or it will be lumpy. Salt and pepper to taste, and serve hot. This is an excellent way to cook young potatoes.—Housekeeper.

—Chesnut Sauce: Boil two cups shelled chestnuts in water for three minutes, then throw them into cold water, so the skins will come off easily. Put them on to cook in two pints of stock for one hour; then take them out and mash very fine. Now put them back into the stock and add one tablespoonful of flour browned in two of butter, and one teaspoonful of lemon-juice. Season with salt and pepper and strain the whole before serving.—Detroit Free Press.

—Colors are much used in embroidery on white linen, and give a rich appearance, but too much diversity of this kind causes a muddled, unpleasant look, and it is a relief to turn to tea-cloths, etc., worked with a simple outline pattern in one color only. In this case the design may be allowed to extend almost all over the cloth. One of the easiest and best forms of outlining consists simply of back stitch. This is an old stitch revived, but few equal it in delicacy and effectiveness.—N. Y. World.

—Spiced Currants: To four pounds of currants picked from the stems take two pounds of sugar, one-half pint of vinegar, one teaspoonful each of all kinds of spices and a small piece of gingerroot. Place the spices in a thin cheese-cloth bag. Put the vinegar and sugar on the fire; when it comes to a boil skim it and pour over the currants and cook gently for ten minutes. Put into a stone jar, and next day heat the sirup and pour boiling hot on the fruit. Do this for several consecutive days. The last day boil the sirup till it just covers the fruit.—Ladies' Home Journal.

CONCERNING GLOVES.

The Prevailing Shades Now Being Worn.

The fashion in gloves might be called a standard one, for, all reports to the contrary, the shades seen are gray, black and all of the various tan ones. In the heavy walking glove, made with overlapying seams and closing with four large buttons, the deep shades of tan—those that verge on the reddish-brown—are best liked; but for general wear the undressed kid glove, six-button length and closing with two buttons, in one of the lighter tan shades, is preferred. The sack glove, that is, the one that slips over one's hand and has no buttons, is noted in white, light gray and tan, and is more desirable in the white and gray, for the reason that either of these colors clean so very easily. Very few mitts are worn, and as silk gloves have the unpleasant habit of wearing out at the finger-ends in a marvelously short time, and as they are not beautiful, they can not be commended for either economy or good taste. The tan glove harmonizes with every color worn except gray, and for that the gray glove is in order. Though a few glace gloves are seen, they have not the vogue of undressed kid, which by its extreme softness and pliability recommends itself to most women. Do not make the mistake, under any circumstances, of choosing a glove that is too small. Get one that will fit you easily and give free play to your fingers, so that you do not hold your parasol in a strained manner, nor will you find it impossible to count your change in a street car.—Ladies' Home Journal.

NOVELTIES IN JEWELRY.

Handsome and Fashionable Articles of Gold and Jems.

A neat set of tablets between silver covers is made in the form of an artist's palette.

Violets and pansies in enamel, with diamond centers, have become favorite designs for scarf pins.

A new brooch consists of a heart, set with rubies, about which is tied in a bow knot a ribbon of small diamonds.

An odd-looking stud presents the appearance of a common pearl button. A link cuff button in the same design is also shown.

The handles of spoons are now ornamented with floral designs in enamel. A spray of lilies of the valley and a bunch of violets or pansies are the most popular designs.

A handsome opal brooch is in the form of a tortoise. The shell is represented by a large opal surrounded by small diamonds. The other portions are of gold, two rubies being set in the head to represent the eyes.

An opal bracelet was recently exhibited in which there were eleven opals and twenty-six diamonds. A large opal is in the middle and the others are graduated down to a small stone at either end. The diamonds are set between the opals.—Jewelers' Weekly.

HE HAD THE IDEA.

The Applicant Proved That He Could Report a Winning or a Losing Game.

He was a bright-looking young fellow and as the place was vacant it was only a question of finding out whether he was sufficiently well posted to do the work properly.

"Have you ever reported a game before?" he was asked.

"Only once or twice," he replied, "but I am thoroughly familiar with it and I have made a study of the reports in the papers."

"Quite right, young man. Now, if we win a game you can tell how we won it?"

"Certainly, sir, that is my strong point. I can enthuse over the brilliant double play that retired the other side with three men on bases, and dilate on the magnificent team work. Yes, indeed, sir, I can describe the brilliant playing that won the game for us."

"Good. Now, if the other side wins can you tell how it did it?"

There was a shade of anxiety in the editor's tone as he put this question, but when he got a prompt "No, sir," he rubbed his hands together gleefully and asked:

"What would you do under those circumstances?"

"Tell how we lost. Big difference between the two, sir. While I can't tell how the other side won I can describe in detail the accident by which we lost. I'm modest, sir, but I think I am unexcelled in describing how a run was accidentally scored in the eighth or ninth inning that cost us the game. I can tell you, sir, the brilliant plays that win a game for us, and the blamed fool plays that lose one, but ——"

But that was sufficient. He had the baseball crank's idea and he was engaged.—Chicago Tribune.

THE JULY WIDE AWAKE

Is a good number for hammock and veranda reading for old and young, as some of the tempting titles show.

One of the interesting features is an illustrated article concerning a famous piece of the handiwork of one of Hawthorne's characters, "Deacon Shem Drowne," of the tale of "Drowne's Wooden Image;" the WIDE AWAKE article (in two parts) relates to "Ye Boston Grasshopper," namely, the big gilded creature which forms the Faneuil Hall weather-vane, and is written by Lucinda J. Gregg and Elizabeth Browne McPherson, the latter a descendant of Hawthorne's Browne; it gives portraits of the Grasshopper and of Peter Faneuil, and views of the three Faneuil Halls. Other interesting illustrated articles are "Amy Robsart's Embroidery, and the Gates of Warwick;" and "Pussy in Private Life," by Eleanor Lewis; notable mention of notable cats of notable people. There are two illustrated stories, specially good reading for the Fourth, "The Anti-Boy Picnic," by Helen A. Hawley, and "The Rogues' Path," by James McKay, the latter a historical tale of two plucky children. The serials are of goodly length: "Five Little Peppers Grown Up;" "Miss Matilda Archambeau Van Dorn," and the Italian child-life serial. The short ten-minute articles include "A Rush Light," by Amanda B. Harris, "Sea Daisies," by Mary E. Bamford, "The Chimney Swallow," by Rose Dalton, "Horology Problems," by E. H. Hawley of the Smithsonian Institution, "Figure Drawing for Children," by Miss Rimmer, and others. And there are several bright pieces of verse, suited to the popular taste. The four pages of "Men and Things" are highly enjoyable.

WIDE AWAKE is $2.40 a year; 20 cents a number. A specimen (back number) will be sent on receipt of 5 cents. D. Lothrop Company, Publishers, Boston.

THINGS DIDN'T SUIT HIM.

Not Even the Clever Repartee of the Mild Young Lady.

A medical man from Norway stayed over recently for a few days in Chicago. Nothing in the city seemed to pleased him. He found fault with the mayor, the pavements, police, gas, light, heat, electricity—along with all the other forms of motion and commotion—not to mention politics, of town, township, state and nation. As an ancient writer would say: "He air a most consequential cuss." One evening at a house on Dearborn avenue he was talking about education generally, and comparing the slow methodical processes of Europe with what he called "the filling, forcing and pumping methods" pursued in the United States. He spoke in loud, harsh, strident tones and didn't seem to afford an excellent specimen of any sort of careful training in his own person. "One thing that very much surprises me," he said, "is that American children, who are carelessly and badly brought up, be come in time such amiable and thoroughly polite men and women." This remark was leveled at a very mild mannered young lady, who lifting her eyebrows said (not with her eyebrows): "Dr. ——, the results, from whatever cause, are evidently quite the opposite of what are produced by the benificent system in Norway." The company laughed, and almost gave three cheers, while the medicine man looked angry enough to help Bottom the weaver in enacting a part in which some cat had to be torn.—Chicago Journal.

Two Results of the Grip.

"Billy was sent up for three years for robbing the store, I see."

"Yes; he told the judge that he had just had the grip and wasn't accountable for his acts, but the judge didn't let up on him a bit."

"The judge was hard-hearted."

"No, it wasn't that; he had just had an attack of the grip himself."—Judge.

"August Flower"

Mr. Lorenzo F. Sleeper is very well known to the citizens of Appleton, Me., and neighborhood. He says: "Eight years ago I was taken "sick, and suffered as no one but a "dyspeptic can. I then began taking August Flower. At that time "I was a great sufferer. Every-"thing I ate distressed me so that I "had to throw it up. Then in a "few moments that horrid distress "would come on and I would have "to eat and suffer "again. I took a "little of your med-"icine, and felt much "better, and after "taking a little more "August Flower my "Dyspepsia disappeared, and since that time I "have never had the first sign of it. "I can eat anything without the "least fear of distress. I wish all "that are afflicted with that terrible "disease or the troubles caused by "it would try August Flower, as I "am satisfied there is no medicine "equal to it."

--To-morrow, Saturday is Fair Day.

—The Model Roller Mills are loading a car of flour to-day.

—The GAZETTE'S compositors celebrated the 115th anniversary of our National Independence at Federal City, alias Twincite, alias St. Paul and Minneapolis.

—Quite a number of Harvesters have been sold in this neighborhood, this season. The good prospects for an abundant harvest encourage the farmers to invest in machinery.

—A carload of little chil lren attended by several sisters from the Catholic Orphan Asylum, of St. Paul passed over the G. N. on Wednesday, for an outng at Litchfield.

—L. M. Maxfield is anxious to find the parties that carried away his ladders from Wittman's drug store, on Tuesday night. He says he will make it warm. Better fetch 'em back.

—Most travelers between here and the county seat go the new Ziebarth road now-a-days, and are seeing it at its worst. If they can get through after these heavy rains they will probably think it a fine road after it dries off awhile. The Ruckoldt bridge is not considered safe at all since the last rains. Better not venture that way until the new bridge is opened up.

--Mrs. W. C. Schuman and three children left very suddenly for home, Denver, Col., on Monday morning. Unfortunately she visited a house where a little girl was having the meales and not caring to be caught away from home and have the family down with the disease she started for home at the first opportunity cutting short a month's pleasant visit she had anticipated having with her sisters, giving them but a week.

—On Wednesday evening John, nine year old son of Andrew Sunday, living with his father, a mile and a half west of town while running with his brother, through the garden near Mrs. Biggots house, struck his foot against a scy the hid in the potato patch making a severe cut on the instep of his right foot, about four inches in length, laying bear the joint. Surgical aid was secured and the cut sewed up. The little fellow will have to lay up for a while. His little brother said John can not go to school now.

—On Tuesday afternoon as S. Fleck was bringing a load of people to the train for Minneapolis William Lewis and his wife drove up behind him and undertook to pass near the west end of the wagon bridge. Mr. Fleck's team jumped and threw the back seat with its occupants Mrs. F. Perleck, two children and her mother to the ground, brusing the women about the shoulders and frightening them considerably. Mr. Lewis was watching the accident and allowed his horse to get out of the road for enough to overturn the buggy breaking the cross piece to the shafts and bending up the top. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis escaped without being bruised or injured.

—Our nation's birthday has come and gone. Delano did not celebrate this year. The quietest 4th for years was the consequence. Our citizens visited neighboring villages; some claim to have had a good time, but we have heard no such enthusiastic rejoicing over the way the day was spent as has been the case for the past several years when Delano had a celebration at home. "Be it ever so humble there is no place like home" even for a 4th of July celebration. We predict, that next year the people in this "neck 'o woods" will see one of the grandest celebrations in Delano, on July 4th that has every been known "here abouts" and that is saying considerable.

—On Wednesday evening a couple of young ladies created considerable of an excitement and no little merriment at Lyle's ford. They rode the horses to water, bareback. One was apparently an old hand at the business and selected the quiet horse, white the amatuer equestriana taking "Hobsons choice" got the mate. The new beginner managed to ride until the drinking place was reached when she allowed the rope to fall in the water and had no way to guide her horse which took a bee line for the other shore and began eating grass, after considerable argument with her companion who was sitting quietly on her mount, near the middle of the stream, it was finally decided that she had better come back, as if she came over there with her horse neither of them could get back. Miss amateur watching her chance finally secured a hold on the halter rope and got her animal headed for the barn, being behind the other and her colt which was feeling frisky, the mare began to hurry up while her fair rider kept saying in a loud voice, I will surely fall, I will, I will surely, she managed to ride to the middle of the river when she began to slip off and after acquiring a position something like a sack of bran would stuck on for a few feet further when she gracefully slid to the bottom of the river, feet foremost, let go the animal and pulled for the shore. Next time she rides she will, most likely have a bridle on her horse.

—Druggist Wittman is getting a new sidewalk.

—Jesse Brandon has sold his driving team to Mr. Grano, of Litchfield.

—Len Delrick is carpentering, this week, a new floor in his barn is the result.

—Read Grover Cleveland's speech at Providence, in another column of the GAZETTE.

—Our base ball nine played a friendly game at Waverly, on the 4th coming off victorious by a score of 28 to 15.

—Charles Eppel has been re-flooring his saloon, this week. Andrew Haunsman and John Ball are the planners.

—Justice Bohn will try to adjust the differences between Mrs. G. W. Smith administratrix and J. D. Brandon, on Monday, next.

—Dr. Catlin, has on hand a few points of vacine virus. First come first served. It must be used while fresh to secure good results.

—Read Rev. W. H. Wilson's letter from the Evergreen State found in this week's GAZETTE. The Chinese question seems, as yet, very unsettled. And the Elder seems bent on assisting in its solution.

—Rev. Jabez Blackhurst received a telegram, on Wednesday bringing to him the sad news that his son, Harry's wife had died suddenly, in Minneapolis Mr. B., his wife and daughter, Katie, took the evening train for that place.

—A pleasant family reunion of the O'Hair family was had on Tuesday, in Delano, from whence they proceeded to Rockford where they gave photographer Stadon the job of making a family picture of Mrs. Mary O'Hair, of Waverly, mother: four sons, M. A., of Delano Attorney; Thomas F., of Wheaton, Attorney; P. of Waverly, Physician and John, of Minneapolis, Clerk, and three daughters, Mrs. B. I. McEachran, of Iowa; Mrs. Charles O'Hara, of Woodland, and Miss Hannah, of Waverly. There was present at the reunion Mrs. T. F. and Mrs. M. A. O'Hair also Miss Clare McEachran and Misses Marjorie and Grace O'Hair.

—This week the farmer starts his mower, and the smell of the fragrant new mown hay is abroad in the meadows. Hay is fairly good and if care is taken to cut it when the sky is clouded over and put it up while the sun shines good hay will be to sell and keep, but if, as many do when the weather is fine the mower is run for all it is worth and the grass left for several days, to heat in the swoth and to dry for a few hours in the hot sun and to be rained on a few times, a poor article may be expected, with heavey horses and other evil consequences. "Don't cut more than you can handle, between showers," is a good motto in rainy seasons, also "make hay while the sun shines."

—Saturday, July 18, is the day for the Annual School Meeting. This is the time for persons having children that they care to send to school to attend the school meeting and aid in electing trustees who have an interest in the education of the young. Men who will try to do the best for the children that can be done. A board of school officers should not be picked out altogether for their financial qualifications; their ability to barter and trade and accumulate this worlds goods "for what shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and loose his own soul." The school house should be kept in a healthy condition, proper heating and ventilating apparatus should be furnished. Pure water should be supplied. Things should be so arranged that the Principal can superintend all the rooms and not be confined to one room. The trustees should visit the schools and see for themselves what is the attendance and note the progress being made.

The People's Party must certainly have forgotten something and will suffer accordingly. The name of Wright County's great People's Party candidate, the Hon. A. Y. Eaton, does not appear among the agitators.

From newspaper reports we learn that H. L. Gordon formerly a resident of Wright County, now of San. Jose. Cal., had his health drunk by the boys of the gallant old 1st Minnesota, Inf., at their reunion in Winona, recently. He furnishing the wine.

A. R. Holsten, of Polk County is one of the Alliance State committee We presume this is the former Wright County Republican politician who resided at Delano afterwards at Cokato, in the practice of law, as the name is the same and he is the prosecuting Attorney of the county in which he now resides.

From a special to the Minneapolis Times we learn that the Farmers Elevator Company of Cokato on the 7th elected officers as follows: President, John Nigren; secretary, Frank Swanson; treasurer, S. J. Swanson; directors, J. N. Olson, H. Halvorson. The directors declared a dividend of 82 per cent. Since incorporation, two years ago, there has been a net dividend of 126 per cent declared.

This is a people's government. The government is what the people make it, or allow it by their indifference to become. If we wish to have good and wise laws well administed it is our duty as individuals whose votes count one to find out for ourselves, what are good laws then see to it that we have good men in important places to administer them. Begin at the school election a week from next Saturday.

The Buffale Gazette, which has got to be one of the neatest and newsiest of our exchanges, was somewhat disfigured last week by the insertion of one of those old, antidiluvian, stereotyped articles "Tariff a Tax." A patent medicine "ad" would be just as entertaining and instructive.—The Buffalo Journal.

Our readers prefer to consider live political questions to reading the "ads" alluded to above. We have on hand a few copies of the Gazette, of July 3, containing the article so distasteful to the senator. If any one wants to look at a copy send us your address and so long as they hold out we will supply you. TARIFF IS A TAX, and we all help PAY it just the same.

County Superintendent Lindsley has issued To School District Officers a circular, to be read at the Annual School meeting which occurs Saturday. July 18th., in each district, which, if the directions there given are carried out, will materially aid in getting school houses and schools in good shape for fall terms. Let all voters turn out to the school meetings and see to it that things are done in proper shape; that competent men are put into the offices of School Trustees: men who will look after the interest of the schools, visit them occasionally, and know what is going on for themselves. It is too common an occurance for the trustees to hire the first teacher they can meet whether good, bad or indifferent, provided they can be got cheap enough and set them to work and never go near to see whether they are fit for the place or not. This should cease Turn out and vote.

TAKE NOTICE!

If you want to get good and cheap BINDING TWINE call on me, I have a large stock on hand at my office, in Delano. Prices best for the quality, west of Chicago.

THE EVERGREEN STATE.

Letter from Rev. W. H. Wilson, Pastor 1st. M. E. Church, Coupeville, Washington.

COUPEVILLE, WASH., June 30, 1891.

EDITOR GAZETTE:—Once each week the BUFFALO GAZETTE comes to the parsonage, and is searched before breakfast. Once in a while it brings us the news of the death of some one of our acquaintances, which brings back to our minds the words, "for here have we no continuing city," and helps us to strive to make doubly sure of a safe port in the future. Sometimes we read in it of friends we love prospering in business, and other things which makes us rejoice with them. So taking it all round we must have the GAZETTE. So Mr. Editor, when our subscription expires, please say so, and we will renew. We are having rather lively times on our beautiful Island, over the Chinese question, the Island county board of trade, met at the city hall a few weeks ago and passed some resolutions in regard to the pig tail race, the reasons for this was, that the Chinese, are being smuggled in by lawless characters, and are becoming as they say, a nuisance. It is reported that there is now 400 Chinese on the Island, where one year ago there was only 100, there is considerale feeling about the matter the board passed the resolution that the Mongolians must go and to consumate the plan they drew up a few articles, and delegated a committee to procure names, the 1st clause was something like this.

WHEREAS, The Chinese part of our population is overreaching the rate best calculated to advance the white population and whereas they are sapping the country and keeping poor but honest white men out of employment.

RESOLVED, That we the citizens of Island County, Wash., do declare that we will not hire, keep, or harbor, any Chinese that may come to us: nor will we rent to them our land; nor will we rent land to any person or persons, that employ Mongolian labor.

RESOLVED That every rancher who refuses to sign and live up to this contract, shall be deemed hostile to the best interest of Island County and shall be so held before the people of the county.

Well, you see men differ in opinions so much that some will not sign the boycott which is likely to provoke trouble. I can't tell what the outcome will be. One thing I do know I will never stand by and see a Chinese abused and have declared my intention of doing as Rev. Banks did, at the time Seattle tried to get rid of the celestials. He stood at the corner of Front street and held his shot gun in his hand and when the word came fire, as the angry mob pushed the Chinese towards the wharf and the word came FIRE, the preacher discharged his gun into the angry mob. All the people want the Mongolians to stay It's only the whisky element that will neither work nor allow any other man to work that's taking a prominent stand in this matter Now the board of trade are all very good men, but are influenced by a few party office seekers, who think by driving out the Chinese, they can control the RUM element vote, which is quite large here. But God has always helped a defenseless people and he will make bare his arm of strength we believe in this matter. There is some talk of having one or two companies of soldiers come for safty to these unfortunate people and to protect property. Crops are looking fine this year, the potato crop is very large, one of my church men has seven thousand dollar worth of potatoes growing, providing he realizes ten dollars per ton. There are several farmers that have 160 acres of potatoes, fruit is just getting good, that is some of the smaller kinds, cherries are getting ripe, we think this one of the best countries under the sun. Well, we have been able to add one more church to the list this year, costing lot and all two thousand dollars. every dollar was paid when we dedicated there was however three hundred dollars debt when it was complete but the trustees took the responsibility and on the day of dedication I simply asked the people for a collection and they gave near 400 cash. In the morning of the day of dedication Thomas Nesbit remarked at the breakfast table, Bro. Wilson, if you will walk with me this morning, on my farm I will give you a deed of five acres of land, if you will select it which of course I was glad to accept accordingly Mrs. Wilson, Rev. T. J. Massey, Mr. and Mrs. Nesbit started out to find the spot which we were not long in finding and received it from this kind brother as a gift. It is worth one thousand dollars, we will have it cleared this fall and planted out to fruit trees, which in a few years will become valuable. We were very sorry that we were not at home or in the city when Bro. Frank Gerry, and Mr. Moett's family passed through our place, they were on board the steamer Wasco bound for Emitsburgh and when rounding Pen's cove, in the San-wan Straits, the ship became crippled, and on account of a very high sea, was forced to lay at the Coupeville dock sometime. We missed a good visit with these old friends, we received a letter from Mr. Bugbee, of Rockford, Minn., saying they had stopped off her for a short time at Dayton, Wash., and asked me to look about their goods which were shipped sometime ago we are looking for them along soon. Everything moves on very fine, large congregations attend church we are trying to press the Temperance cause along, and thus far have met with good success. If any of my old friends want to come west let me say come on the Whidby Island before you make up your mind where to locate. God is with us, the family are all well.

Lost Without His Paper.

From the New York Tribune.

"For goodness sake, let me see a newspapers," said a man getting off a streamer the other day. "I feel as if the world had stopped. Has any king been killed? Has Wall street sunk into the bay? Has Italy come down on us with her ironclads? One never realizes how absolutely necessary newspapers are to his happiness until he is where he cannot get one. I shall be uncomfortable for the next month, for I shall be learning of something from day to day which I missed knowing about because I did not see a paper for over a week. Once I went away for a rest, and, so that nothing should worry me, I 'swore off' on newspapers. Three days of it drove me half crazy, and I sent for papers for each of these three days, read them, felt like a new man and had a real good time for the rest of my vacation—but I read my papers every day."—Minneapolis Times.

Smothered to Death.

Special to the Globe.

ASHLAND, Wis., July 7.—A little two-years-old child of John Dubinski was smothered to death, last evening, between two feather ticks. The parents were summoned before the coroner, but their testimony discredited all belief of willful murder.

Killing the Hoppers.

Special to the Globe.

CROOKSTON, Minn. July 6.—The destruction of the hoppers goes on. Machines for their capture are leaving town in large numbers. No great amount of damage is as yet reported. A fine, warm rain fell this morning for some five or six hours.

GRAND FORKS, N. D., July 6.—Commissioner Barry, of this county, has returned from the grasshopper district, which he states, is increasing in area. The hoppers are beginning to hatch on low-lying lands, and are coming out rapidly. Many farmers in the vicinity of Orr are catching from five to ten bushels per day.--Globe.

Camping out, Outfit.

For Sale, cheap, a camping out outfit consistng of a good sized wedge tent stove, stools, etc. etc. Call at the GAZETTE office for particulars.

Harvest Trips.

On July 21st and Aug. 4th the Great Northern Railway will sell tickets to Northern Minnesota and North Dakota points north of Fergus Falls, Breckenridge and Wahpeton, to Buford inclusive, at one fare for round trip, good for 30 days.

Harvest hands are scarce in the Red River Valley and good wages are being paid. This will give land-seekers a chance to see the country and pay expenses.

A CYCLONE at West Superior last night killed five men and wounded many more.

THERE was a similarity in the places of death of two old comrades. Hannibal Hamlin died at a card table in his favorite club room, and J. R. Gidding over a billiard table with a cue in his hand, when he was Consul to Canada.—St. Paul News.

Tariff Pictures.

The import statistics for May strike another blow for what is sneeringly called protection to the American hen. When eggs were on the free list in May, 1890, we imported 1,791,504 dozen during that month, at a total valuation of $194,073, or 10.8 cents a dozen. Well, our imports for May, 1891, were only 196,504 dozen eggs, but the consumer did not suffer because American farmers sold 1,595,000 dozen more eggs; for these last imports were valued at $16,540, or only 8.4 cents a dozen.—N. Y. Press.

It is presumed that the PRESS has access to the statistical reports on eggs as it has several times lately, made use of something like the above quoted article:

And granting that their statistics are true concerning the falling off of importations to the tune of over one and a half million dozens. We would be glad to have them tell us where their information comes from that American farmers sold 1,595,000 dozens more eggs in May 1891 than they did in May 1890. Have we not just as good a right to say that the laborer in the east, in the manufacturing centers has changed his DIET and is going without his EGGS? And again, as is claimed by the PRESS if the price of eggs has been CUT DOWN from 10.8 cents per dozen to 8.4 cents per dozen, nearly 2½ cents per dozen where is the American farmer benefited? If the PRESS can't find better protective tariff arguments than these to send out west she had better let up on that line. The farmer's won't favor a protective tariff that reduces the price on their eggs.

THE LINCOLN JOURNAL has found one man who is sorry that he ever deserted the republican party and consorted with the alliance. It would now be interesting to have testimony from the sixty-odd thousands of alliance men in this state who are sorry only because they did not leave the republican party sooner.—Ashland Leader, Neb.

San Francisco for the Democracy.

The Democrats of San Francisco are making a tremendous effort to secure the location of the Democratic National Convention of 1892 in their city. THE PRESS favors San Francisco. If the gathered Democratic host could also be persuaded to keep right on "going West," when they reach the Golden Gate, the country might still worry along.—N. Y. Press.

But Democratic principles seem to be spreading, north, south and east as well as west.

The Senate Also.

The Republicans have found comfort apparently, since the last election in the faith that the Democratic majority in the house next winter will be so overwheming as to be unruly, and all sorts of wild vagaries will have an airing. These are to turn the public stomach and spoil the chances of Democratic success in the general contest. It is intimated that the Republican minority will from its cover of obsurity incite the romantic people and extremists to produce all the strange concoctions possible. Perhaps the majority will be a little unwieldy, but the Republicans will have from six to eight majority in the senate, according to the moods of the Alliance senators from Kansas and South Dakota. Any measures from the Democratic house must be stamped with the approval of the Republican senate and president to become effective. The responsibility for legislation will be equally divided. But the Democrats do not share the Republican anticipations that their members will attempt to electrocute the party. On the other hand, they believe that when the Democratic president is inaugurated March 4, 1893, the senate will have a sufficient majority for the Democrats. Ohio and New York elect legislatures this year, and the Democrats have a better prospect of New York than they had last year, and should gain Hiscock's seat. John Sherman is nearly certain to be thrown out in Ohio, and his successor will be a large per cent Democratic. The Republicans about concede that the Democratic districting will make the next legislatures in Wisconsin and Michigan Democratic. They will elect Democrats in place of Messrs. Sawyer and Stockbridge. The chances are good that the two from Minnesota and Nebraska will not be Republicans. Montana may be counted on to send a Democrat in place of Sanders. There are fair chances for the Democrats in Rhode Island and Connecticut, and some incline to believe that the fossil Dawes of Massachusetts will give place to one of those bright and progressive young Democrats who are coming to the front there now. In Pennsylvania Quay is to come on to the coals, and, if those Republicans who are after him mean business, he may do the Jonah act. There is very little chance for the Democrats to lose a senator anywhere. With the most moderate sort of luck, then, they will have the senate neatly two years hence.—St. Paul Globe.

The Independent Farmer.

The farmer has been considered the independent man of our country. He lived on his own land, raised his own bread and butter and meat and potatoes. If in the first settlement of the country he was obliged to procure most of his sustenance from the wilds of nature it was but a little while until his sickle gathered in the golden sheaves, and the corn in the ear, and his larder was supplied with abundance. Progress, has ever been his motto and by dint of the sweat of his brow he has climbed the ladder as fast as any other man and still holds his place in the front ranks for independence. To day the farmers are the thinkers and actors among our population. Our common school systems have supplied the rising generations with a good means of obtaining the rudiments, of an education which has been improved in a manner which places the man that can not read, write and do his own figuring in the small minority. Being thus equipped with the means of looking out for themeelves, they secure a number of good reliable newspapers and keep abreast of the times as to what is going on in the world. Machinery has been made for their benefit and use and with the lapse of years one well worn implement after another has been laid away to give place to a more mordern inyention. Instead of sowing by hand, the farmer with long stride and swinging arm, with the grain bag on his back, distributing the grain by the handful over his field, the farmer now sits on his latest improved seeder and evenly sows his grain while enjoying the ride. In place of the sickle came the cradle which gave way to the reaper, soon to be followed by the self-binder which allows the independent farmer with the aid of his own family to gather a much larger harvest, in better shape than was done a few years since by aid of a number of hands hired to help harvest and which required a large amount of cooking for. Not many years since the horse or the ox treaded out the grain; then man flailed it, then came improvements and the thresher run by horse power, followed by the now fine steam threshers were placed at the disposal of the independent farmer, who all the time puts in full hours at work, and though his work is easier he must do far more of it to pay for all the expensive machinery which he is possessor of, and to pay taxes on his valuable property? Who should more than this same independent farmer be posted on the politics of our country? Who should know the markets of the world; where to buy and sell; and when to buy and sell to best advantage better than he? Who should be acquainted with the systems of taxation and know where the government gets its huge surplusses, and when the treasury like John Phoenix's bank account is represented by a $—, a place for dollars, what has become of the money, if this man who is toiling daily does not know? If this the most independent man in America pays attention to these thing they will be run to better advantage than if left to scheming politicians and money accumulators. It is the duty and privilege of every farmer in our land to be out and vote intelligently at every election; big or little and have a hand in the free government "of the people, for the people and by the people."

St. John Is Heard From.

NEW YORK, July 13.—The new prohibition tabernacle at Port Richmond, Staten Island, was crowded yesterday to its full capacity. Ex-Gov. St. John, of Kansas, was the principal speaker. In the course of his remarks he said that the whole license system was a sin against God and should be made a crime. He had heard that one of the prominent features of the world's fair at Chicago was to be a beer paradise. He hoped that this was not true, but, if it proved to be the case, he called upon all persons in favor of prohibition to boycott the world's fair.—Globe.

CORRESPONDENCE

ANNANDALE.

Elder Higgins returned from Canada the place of his nativity, where he had been spending his vacation, last Thursday evening, greatly refreshed, mentally as well as physically and occupied the pulpit last Sabbath morning and evening, discoursing at Silver Creek in the afternoon.

We had the Circus, without the horses; we had the tent, the ring, the clowns, the acrobats and rope walkers, here last Thursday. The music was good but the street parade, our other half said it reminded her of the Fourth of July Rag-muffins. Everybody went to see the show even us, and every body said "pretty cheap affair." They carried off some $300.00 from here and left some 37½ cents. It is surprising what fools we all are to encourage such mountebanks. But, the next show that comes along we will all go just the same.

Miss Ada Ponsford, daughter of Wm. Ponsford, Esq., the popular Town Clerk for the town of Corinna, was surprised last Tuesday evening by a party of her young friends from this village and elsewhere who called to tender congratulations on the recurrence of her natal day.

The busy workers, a society of young girls and boys under 15 years old from Fair Haven held a picnic in Pratt's grove Wednesday. This society is organized for moral, charitable and religious improvement and is under the principal management of Mrs. Baldwin and Mrs. Johnson ladies of Fair Haven and has been in operation three years and it is the purpose of the lady managers to give the children an outing twice a year and this occasion is one of them.

NORTH ROCKFORD NUBBINS.

The school exhibition was not held in the M. E. Church as reported last week.

We are always ready to correct any mistake made in these items.

Mr. C. J. Crandal son of J. D. is visiting relatives and friends here for a week. "Clint" has been superintendent of schools of Pipestone County for several years. His education was begun in the old log school house in District No 42. We are always glad to see C. J.

The Epworth League will not have any more Literary meetings until after the busy season is over. The League is increasing in numbers and will keep up the Gospel meetings on Sunday nights.

Rev. W. H. Wilson is letter in last weeks Gazette was much appreciated by the people at this place. We are all glad to hear of his success and good fortune.

Fred Lucas traded horses with a chicken buyer the other day. Fred claims he has got a flyer this time.

Nearly every farmer in this vicinity has either a new or second hand binder. The grain looks splendid here.

The question is asked which is the worst. A Christian going fishing on prayer meeting night or a nonprofessor going fishing on Sunday?

Your Rockford correspondent says in last weeks items that a North Rockford farmer had a jug of whiskey stolen from his wagon the 4th. Are we to understand from this that they sell whiskey by the jug in Rockford.

The 4th at Maple Lake.

At Maple Lake the people began to assemble at an earle hour, coming from all directions. All seemed replete with patriotism. The procession, having marched through the various streets, proceeded to the grove. There the commemorative ceremonies began by the Maple Lake Cornet Band giving some of its most pataiotic strains of music.

Dr. O'Connor read the Declaration of Independence with clear and forcible elocution.

Mr. John F. Collins was the first speaker. He had but little time for preparation. Mr. Collins spoke very eloquently and with the appearance and dignity of a veteran political orator.

We give a few thoughts from his discourse. He said. "In ancient and modern times it has been a custom among the people of various nations to assemble to commemorate great national events. In accordance with this time honored custom we have met today, to celebrate with music and speech that greatest of events, the Declaration of American Independence; to listen to the reading of that immortal document, which is a menace to tyrants, but which speaks to men of justice, of equality and of happiness. We have met to testify our gratitude and veneration for those illustrious heroes, whose deeds of valor and trials of fortitude have secured for their posterity the blessings of liberty. Moreover, to fortify ourselves by those moral forces which bound the Colonies into an indissoluble bond of unity. The ancients had their heroes, of whom the deified Ireland's Great martyred patriot hath said, "man dies but his memory lives." Though Washington and Jefferson have passed from the stage of life, the exit was only a transition from this terrestrial abode to that celestial kingdom to dwell forever supreme among the hierarchy of the immortals of our political faith.

The ancients had their national holidays, characterized by splendor and the cruelties of a barbaric age, in which the captives were chained to the wheels of the conqueror's chariot, as trophies of war.

How different is this scene, where humanity rules the day. The army of the Revolution, unlike those of Alexander, Caesar and Napoleon, fought not for plunder, but to secure for themselves and their posterity the blessings of liberty.

Independence once accomplished, our ancestors founded a government in wisdom and philanthropy, with wonderful foresight, a political edifice the corner stone of which is human equality. A government by which all men's rights which under former governments belonged to kings alone. A government of well-night heaven born conception, E PLURIBUS UNUM, one out of many, one composed of many, held in firm equilibrium by the forces of equality truth and Justice. England sought to destroy the life of the young Republic, but this time the glamour of invincibility of British Arms fell before the daring genius of Jackson at New Orleans, never to rise again.

The Republic grew in power and prestige, defying assault from without, but Rebellion aimed a mortal stroke at the sacred covenant, under which men had dwelt in place and harmony. Then arose the second army of the Republic, this time to save "what the heroes of 1776 had created."

Mr. Collins indicated some of the causes that produced the Rebellion. He gave considerable attention to the Rebellion. The men who contributed so much to the preservation of the union, he eloquently eulogized, giving some of them a place in his "hierarchy of the immortals." He treated of the times from the Rebellion to the present and discused some of the topics of the day. He expatiated eloquently on the greatness of this age, the rich fruits of its inventive genius.

The speaker said. "The Rainbow of peace spans the North and South. At the Gulf of Mexico, contending forces stood in battle-array, now stand two statues one clothed in robes of blue the other in gray, with hands clasped in friendly embrace."

Mr. C. M. King was to give the oration, but could not be present. So he had Mr. J. J. Woolly, of Howard Lake, take his place. Mr. Woolly's speech was logical, eloquent and instructive, and was highly appreciated. We give only a few ideas from it.

Mr. Woolly began by saying that man when originally placed on earth was innocent and consequently happy. He did not long continue in his State of original happiness. In punishment of his disobedience God sent the deluge. Mr. Woolly gave a representation of the political status of mankind subsequent to the deluge, referring briefly to the great empires that prevailed in the ancient world. From a review of the political life of England, the speaker proceeded to portray the condition of the colonies at the time of the Revolution. Mr. Woolly pronounced an eloquent eulogy on the heroes of the Revolution. He called particular attention to their indomitable courage, both physical and moral. Their physical courage being demonstrated by the fact that they dared to resist and defy to arms the haughty mistress of the seas. They are distinguished for consummate political wisdom and exalted patriotism.

A gentleman of extensive learning, conversant with the facts of history generally, holds the opinion that the greatest of all historical events is the discovery of America by Columbus.

While conceding the intrinsic importance of that event, Mr. Woolley maintains that there is one of superior greatness—that which occurred on the fourth of July 1776—the Declaration of American Independence.

The speaker particularly eulogized Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Jos. Otis and Patrick Henry, particularizing their respective claims to eternal gratitude. That heroic patriot Patrick Henry said "Cesar had his Brutus, Charles the first his Cromwell, and George 3d may profit by their Example." With the final words of the patriotism inspiring speech made by this celebrated "son of Liberty" in the convention of Virginia. Mr. Woolley closed.

Mr. Martin O'Loughlin presided very genially. The celebration was under the auspices of the Maple Lake Cornet Band. The various games and amusements, usual on these occasions, took place in the afternoon. The day was perfectly peaceful, not a solitary indication of drunkenness.

Thus passed away the 115th anniversary of that glorious day, the memory of which, and of whose heroes, will not pass from earth, until time shall be no more.

The incense breathing morn of the one hundred and fifteenth anniversary of American Independence, was ushered here by the firing of cannon, adequately loud to call back to the present scense the illustrious heroes of 1776.

The fourth of July, 1776, what a millenneal day. That transcendently glorious day on which was born the grandest being that has ever eminated from the womb of time, American Liberty.

Grander and more radiant than Minerva when having just issued full panoplied from the brain of Jupiter, more magestic than the Olympian Jupiter appears this magnificent personage with body invulnerable and soul angelic and immortal in the attitute of benediction, laden with the choicest blessings, and inviting with eloquent tongue "the persecuted of every creed and the exiled of every clime" to come to this spacious sanctuary.

For ages liberty had no home on earth, and it seemed that cruel destiny had pronounced the decree of its eternal banishment.

In the oriental empires of antiquity tyranny reigned supreme. The first Republic came into existence in Greece more than two thousand years ago. Athens was the intellectual metropolis of the ancient world. Its philosophy has exercised a potent influence over the thought of the world to the present time.

The Athenians, by aiding the people of Ionia in their attempt to emancipate themselves from the yoke of Persia, excited the wrath of Darius the Persian king.

The Athenians sent twenty ships with a small force to assist their relations in Ionia. They landed on the Coast of Asia Minor. They captured and accidently burned Sardis, the capital of Lydia, 499 B. C. Having heard of the burning of Sardis, Darius called for his bow, and shot an arrow towards the sky with a prayer to Auramazda for assistance to revenge himself on the Athenians. He also had a servant repeat to him thrice a day, as he sat to dinner, the words, "Master, remember the Athenians."

Darius with an army of 110,000 men proceeded towards Athens. Athens was the home of patriotism, And the Athenians adequately appreciated the blessings of liberty.

Miltiades with an Athenian force of 10,000 men and aided by 600 men from Platura, met and defeated the Persians on the plain of Marathon. This battle occurred September, 490 B. C. Ten years supsequently Xerxes, having succeded to the throne of Persia, resolved to make a more formidable invasion than that of his fathers.

He collected an army exceeding 2,000,000 of fighting men, and including the women and the retinue of attendants, the whole multitude is said to have exceeded 5,000,000 of persons.

This formidable army, such as had never been seen before, marched from Asia into Europe over two bridges of boats extending across the Hellespont at a point where it is one mile wide. Those who conducted the march lashed the soldiers with whips, while crossing to increase their celerity. It took them seven days and nights to cross. The Persian army advanced directly towards Athens.

At the Pass of Thermopylae, Leonidas with 6,000 men opposed the progress of the Persians and for two days kept the enemy at bay. But on the third day the Persians discovered a secret mountain path, which lead them to an advantageous post. Hence it became an impossibility to continue holding the Pass. Leonidas seeing inevitable death at hand for all who would remain, dismissed all his allies, retaining his 300 Spartans. Leonidas determined to perish fighting the enemies of his country. Inspired by his heroism the 300 spartans remained to share his fate. Leonidas was among the first that fell. Of the 300 only one returned, bringing the news to Sparta that her heroic sons had died in her defence. A law of Sparta forbade her soldiers to flee from an enemy under any circumstances.

A monument was erected where these heroes fell, to commemorate the battle bearing the inscription, Go, stranger, and to listening Spartans tell, That here, obedient to their laws, we fell.

When Xerxes arrived in northern Greece, the Greeks were about to celebrate a religious festival. Hence they sent only a small force to defend Thermopylae. They conceived that Leonidas, the Spartan king, with his 7,000 men could hold the Pass until their arrival with adequate force after the festival would be over.

Devastating with fire and sword the country, along their path, Xerxes and his Asiatic hordes advanced towards Athens. The news of their approach created great consternation at Athens,

The Athenians conveyed their women and children to the islands, for safety. Then they retired to their ships, in accordance with the admonition of the oracle, and prepared for a naval combat.

The Persians finding the city vacated plundered and left it in ashes.

A naval engagement took place in the bay of Salamis, near the desolated city.

The Grecian fleet (consisting of about 370 ships) was not quite one-third as large as the Persian armament. Yet the Greeks achieved a complete victory at Salamis.

This battle occurred October 480 B. C. That of Thermopylae occurring in August of the same year.

Frustrated in his nefarious and vindictive ambition Xerxes quitted Greece bearing a force of 300,000 men to continue the work of devastation. A Grecian army, variously represented at 70,000 to 110,000 met these Persians at Plataeu. The Greeks were again signally victorious, September 25, 479 B. C. A battle occurred on the same day between the last remnant of the Persian fleet and the Greeks at Mycale, Ephesus, Asia Minor, in which the invaders were vanquised. Eventually the Persians were entirely expelled from Europe, never since daring to invade Greece.

Such were the sacrifices and distinguished heroism by which Grecian liberty was secured. And the preservation of Grecian independence was the salvation of European civilization.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, July 10, 1891.

The administration is in a "peck of trouble", and telegrams have been flying thick and fast to and from Washington and the Presidential cottage at Cape May Point, but for the very good reason that had Mr. Blaine's advice been taken the administration would not have been in its present very unpleasant predicament, no telegrams have been sent to Bar Harbor. The cause of all this is the Chilian insurgent steamer Itata, which it has cost to bring into the harbor at San Diego, California, more than $100.000. It is now feared by Attorney General Miller and Secretary Tracy, upon whose opinions as lawyers Mr. Harrison was persuaded to sanction the orders which sent the Charleston in pursuit of the Itata, in spite of Mr. Blaine's opinion that this Government had no legal right to take possession of the steamer after she had gone outside of the three mile limit, that a mistake has been made.

If, as is now believed here, the court shall decide that the Itata has not violated our neutrality laws, the Chilian insurgents, whose agents and attorneys, now here, claim to represent the only constitutional government of Chili, will demand that the United States pay a heavy cash indemnity for having interfered with their success by refusing to allow the Itata to deliver the arms which she carried. There is some ugly talk here about bribery by the agents of the Balmaceda government, and maybe before the thing is finally settled somebody's reputation will get badly smirched.

This incident has again strongly shown that Mr. Blaine is the brains of the administration. Everything that he has opposed has turned out disastrously for his party. He opposed the outrageous usurpation of power by Speaker Reed, the force bill, and the McKinley bill, which by superhuman efforts he succeeded in having modified by tacking on as an amendment the good old democratic doctrine of trade reciprocity, although it was so restricted in the bill as enacted into a law that but little benefit, further than showing the benefits which would naturally follow a general extension of our trade with foreign countries, the trade of which is really worth having, and the wisdom of that opposition was unmistakably demonstrated by the cyclone of last November.

Secretary Foster has announced his intention of calling in the Government deposits in national banks, except about $15.000.000, which is, of course, to be left where it will be of the most benefit to the republican party. Nothing that he can do will, however, be surprising after his audacity in putting the $100.000.000 of the gold reserve redemption fund and the fractional silver on hand, which is by law only a legal tender in sums of ten dollars and under, on the Treasury statement as available cash to meet the current demands on the Treasury.

Hon. L. T. Neal, of Ohio, was in town this week, having been called here by the sad duty of attending the funeral of his sister. Under the circumstances he, of course, would not talk politics, although an attempt was made by an unfeeling newspaper man to interview him.

There is a law on the Statute books of the United States which provides a heavy penalty for any person or persons in the employ of the Government who gives, or subscribes money to purchase anything to be given to any other employe of the Government; but, like many other good and sensible laws, it is constantly violated and nobody ever suffers for it. The latest violation of this law was the presentation to Maj. Rathbone, who has just been promoted from Chief Inspector of the Postoffice department to be Fourth Assistant Posmaster General, an office, by the way, created solely for political purposes by the billion-dollar Congress, by the Postoffice Inspectors, who had been his subordinates, of a $550 gold watch and chain. It is claimed by the Inspectors that Maj. Rathbone's resignation as Chief Inspector, was accepted to take effect on the first of July, and that at the time of the presentation he had not been sworn in as fourth Assistant Postmaster General, and that the presentation was no violation of the law. These postoffice inspectors are adepts in quibbling, but it's dollars to burnt matches that when Maj. Rathbone draws his first month's salary the books of the disbursing officer will show that his pay in his new office began on the first of July; and if it did, somebody ought to take the trouble to see that the men who made the presentation are duly prosecuted; but "what'severybody's business is nobody's business", and it isn't at all probable that anything will be done.

The fact that Mr. Wanamaker proposes making a big cut in the amount allowed the southern railroads for the fast mail service between New York and Tampa, Florida, which was originated under the Cleveland administration, is exciting a good deal of very unfavorable comment.

A RECENT survey has established the number of glaciers in the Alps at 1,155, of which 249 have a length of more than 4¾ miles. The French Alps contain 144 glaciers; those of Italy, 78; Switzerland, 471, and Austria, 402.

NEW HAMPSHIRE has the oldest living college graduate in the person of Mr. A. A. Parker, of Fitzwilliam. He was graduated from the University of Vermont in 1814, and will be one hundred years of age on October 8. At last accounts he was in very good health.

MRS. MARY A. LIVERMORE considers the peril of this country from present immigration absolutely so dreadful that she wonders that American men who know about it can sleep while this awful dumping of the unworthy and the undesirable from the old world continues.

DR. LANELLONGUE, of Paris, has laid before the French academy the details of a new treatment for tuberculosis, in which chloride of zinc is the principal agent in changing the tissues. Dr. Lanellongue, who has used the treatment in his practice, asserts that he has effected many cures and met no failures.

FROM calculations recently made by the British board of admiralty, it is evident that the naval engagements of the future will be very expensive affairs. It was estimated that one vessel, carrying two 110-ton guns, would, in two ordinary engagements, use up guns and ammunition to the value of $650,000.

THREE generations of Indian men of the Chickasaw nation celebrated Independence day at Tishomingo, Tex., by getting divorces from their wives. Smith Paul, aged 80 years, released from his sixth wife; Sam Paul, his son, aged 45, from his third wife, and the latter's son, John Paul, aged 20, from his first wife. The women were all white. There appears to be no doubt that marriage in that family was a failure.

AN autograph letter of Abraham Lincoln to a friend is said to contain the following: "Do not worry. Eat three square meals a day. Say your prayers. Think of your wife. Be courteous to your creditors. Keep your digestion good. Steer clear of biliousness. Exercise. Go slow and go easy. Maybe there are other reasons that your especial case requires to make you happy, but, my friend, these, I reckon, will give you a good lift."

THE late Count von Moltke was once asked to name the books which had exercised the greatest influence upon his life. In reply he mentioned the following: The Bible, Homer's "Iliad," Littrou's "Wonders of the Heavens," Liebig's "Letter on Chemistry," and Clausewitz's "On War." The works of Schiller, Goethe, Shakespeare, Walter Scott, Ranke and Carlyle he gave as those which he never tired of reading. The "Iliad," in translation, he read when 9 years old.

THE deadly firecracker and the irrepressible small boy of America, acting in conjunction, have furnished the usual number of Fourth of July fires this year, put out the customary proportion of eyes and caused about as many runaways with fatal results as in ordinary celebrations of our glorious natal day. In doing his share of all this the irrepressible small boy has contributed his usual quota of fingers uncomplainingly, and will be ready next year to devote his remaining digits to the service of his country in the same way.

IT is believed in Philadelphia that the only one of the original continental flags in existence is in the possession of the City troop of that city. The old flag is spread between two large pieces of plate glass which keep the air away from it. The probabilities are that were it removed from this case it would fall to pieces. In design it is somewhat similar to the English jack. The design was made by a committee, of which Benjamin Franklin was a member, in 1776. A few years later the first American standard accepted by congress was submitted and adopted.

LIVERPOOL is excited over the report of the registrar general announcing that her population has decreased thirty-five thousand in the last ten years, and that she is the only great city in England showing no growth. The result of the census is a complete surprise. The trade of the port has been increasing steadily, shopkeepers and middlemen have prospered and the working classes have been well employed. Moreover, there is no apparent decrease in the voters' lists of the different wards. On all sides arises a protest that a mistake has been made, and the registrar general is roundly abused.

IN Warsaw the Jews number 40 per cent. of the population, and the average in all the other towns of Poland is 50 per cent., while in the villages it falls to 7 per cent. Consul Grant says the trades and industries in Warsaw are almost entirely in the hands of the Hebrew population. In the higher branches of commerce the ratio is 16 Jews to 3 Christians, and in the lower branches 19 Jews to 2 Christians, and in the agency and brokerage business 43 Jews to 1 Christian. Of the large industrial enterprises of the city 63 per cent. are in the hands of Jews and only 18 per cent. belong to native Christians.

LATER.

Killed by Robbers.

JOSHUA, Tex., July 14.—Early this morning two men went to the home of George Newberry, living two miles west of Joshua, and demanded admittance. Mr. Newberry being absent, his mother supposed that it was him returning and opened the door. The men forced their way in the house and demanded money that they supposed had been received by Mr. Newberry a few days previous. The old lady told them she had no money about the house. They then grabbed the old lady, who is sixty-five years old, took her to the yard gate and tied her with a rope to the post and then gashed her throat.

One man remained with the old lady on the outside while the other went into the house where three children were sleeping. The oldest, aged seven years was awakened, when the man asked where her papa's money was, the child told him she would tell her father of his trying to get his money. He then took her out of the house into the yard and cut her throat with a butcher knife. He then went back to the house and killed the other two children.

THE seventh annual convention of the National Editorial Association met at the Grand Opera House in St. Paul, on the 14th, and was called to order by the president, E. W. Stephens, of Columbia, Mo. Gov. Merriam, in the name of the state extended a cordial welcome to the quill drivers. Mayor Smith in a short speech extended the freedom of the city, and Senator C. K. Davis gave the formal address of welcome. President Stephens in an eloquent speech thanked all of the officials and the commonwealth for the hospitality and courtesies extended.

Beyond the announcement of a few committees no business was transacted. In the afternoon the visitors were given a ride about the city. In the evening the President delivered his annual address. Following this A. N. Seigfried, eastern manager of the Chicago News read a paper entitled "A Crititism of the Counting Room." An invitation to visit Minneapolis on Saturday, the 18th, was accepted without dissenting voice. There are about 650 delegates present representing every State in the Union. Nearly one-half are accompanied by their wives.

ON account of throwing a piece of mud in Cincinnati, O., on the 14th, William Busch stabbed and killed Wm. Elder. Both were under 18 years of age.

BLAINE'S HEALTH.

Although He Has Been Near Death's Door, the Secretary Is Now Rapidly Recovering—His Physician's Statement.

BOSTON, July 14.—The Globe publishes a statement of Dr. J. Madison Taylor, of Philadelphia, Mr. Blaine's attending physician, as to the secretary's condition. This statement is authorized by Emmons Blaine and the remainder of the family, and is declared to be the first authentic and reliable report of the secretary's illness and of the present condition of his health. The Globe's article is in the form of a dispatch from Bar Harbor, Me., and in substance is as follows:

"For weeks Secretary Blaine has been here and no one could tell whether he was on the brink of the grave or a man with the prospect of a long life before him. When Mr. Blaine first came here he was a dangerously sick man. His was a malady which defied the skill of the ordinary physician. He had sunk into a lethargy, into a torpor, from which nothing could arouse him. There were times when those nearest and dearest to the secretary would not have been surprised at his death at any moment, or if he had continued to live that he would live only as a hopeless mental wreck, because for hours at a time he remained motionless and inert. This state of things lasted until early last week. Mr. Blaine was as near death's door then as any man could be and recover. Since then it must be apparent to everyone that his improvement has been marked. Dr. J. Madison Taylor, of Philadelphia, is Mr. Blaine's physician, and it is owing to his skill and knowledge of the requisite treatment that the secretary owes his recovering health. Dr. Taylor, who has a cottage here, was professionally known to members of Mr. Blaine's family, and it was at their request that he was called in. Dr. Taylor came early to the conclusion that with Mr. Blaine it was simply a case of exaggerated nerves. Mr. Blaine had worked himself out, and his nerves had been at a state of tremendous tension. But the medical side of the case can best be told by Dr. Taylor himself, in his own words. The following interview, after being transcribed, was read by Emmons Blaine and the doctor, who made a few slight corrections. It can, therefore, be accepted as the first official statement coming from the family, and is printed with their full knowledge and consent. Dr. Taylor said:

"'I can safely say that Mr. Blaine is improving very rapidly; that he is very much better than he was when he first came here; that I am well satisfied with his progress, and that Mr. Blaine now is also satisfied with his own improved condition.'

"'What is the matter with Mr. Blaine?'

"'Mr. Blaine has simply broken down, partly from overwork and partly from not having taken proper care of himself. He is not a man who has abused himself in any way, but has been careless. He has been indifferent about his meals and irregular in his daily routine. He has worked too incessantly, in other words, the candle has been burned at both ends and the usual result has followed.'

"'Has Mr. Blaine any serious organic derangements or chronic disease?'

"'Most emphatically not. I assure you in all candor that every one of the vital organs is practically sound. There is no truth in the various statements that have gone out that Mr. Blaine is suffering from Bright's disease, or that his heart is especially weak.'

"'Then the statement that he is threatened with paralysis and that his legs are weak is probably an exaggeration.'

"'It is more than an exaggeration. It is an untruth. Mr. Blaine has been a sick man and a weak man, but he is in no peril of paralysis. He walks as well as you or I do, only he is not so strong as we are. Mr. Blaine is as sound mentally to-day as he ever was. He takes an interest in everything that goes on around him, and he keeps in touch with current affairs.'

"'What treatment is Mr. Blaine undergoing?'

"'He is taking no medicine and, with few exceptions, he is allowed to eat everything he may fancy. What Mr. Blaine needs now, in fact all that he needs, is rest, quiet, regularity in his diet, sleep, and to have his mind diverted so that he will not think of his condition. Mr. Blaine's trouble has not been mental, but nervous. His symptoms caused himself alarm and his weakness made him nervous. But he has now reached that stage when he voluntarily comments on the improvement he is making, and that is a very encouraging sign. His confidence in himself is returning. One illustration will prove that. Sunday he drove me a mile or more in his buggy. I complimented him on the way he handled the reins, and he said that it was not a fair test as, while he felt confidence enough in himself so long as I was at his elbow, he did know how it would be if I was away. I told him that he would do just as well, and that before long he would drive Mrs. Blaine or Mrs. Damrosch 5 miles. He said with great cheerfulness that he would do so at the first opportunity.

"'The unforeseen might, of course, be disastrous, but undue stress ought not to be laid upon that. Mr. Blaine is now at the pivotal age. He is not a young man any more, neither is he an old man. With ordinary care there is no reason why he should not live for many years to come. Of course, if he again overworks himself and does not pay proper attention to ordinary rules which any man ought to follow it is impossible to tell what may happen. But with his health fully restored and in good condition again he ought to be able to stand a good deal without danger.'

"'How long, in your opinion, before Mr. Blaine will be a well man?'

"'I couldn't say. It may be two, three or four months, but I do not care to give any opinion as to that. Considering everything, I see no reason why he should not be in a sound state of health by fall.'"

SPOILED HER FACE.

Mrs. Langtry Said to Have Been Disfigured for Life by a Brute.

LONDON, July 14.—Some time ago Mr. Baird bought York house, Regent's park, for Mrs. Langtry and also paid off her debts in connection with the Princess theater, of which she is at present the leaseholder. On a recent occasion Mr. Baird returned home unexpectedly and found a young gentleman dining with Mrs. Langtry. Without more ado he proceeded to throw him out, and then he kicked Mrs. Langtry in the face in such a way that it is said she is now disfigured for life. Mrs. Langtry had to be carried to bed and attended by a surgeon, who declares that it is probable she will never be able to act again. Mrs. Langtry began an action for assault against Mr. Baird, but when he sobered up he repented of what he had done and went to the house. Then, to prevent this action, he paid her £25,000.

SHOT HIS FRIEND DEAD.

While on the Way from Church an Old Man Kills Another and Himself.

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo., July 14.—Joseph Frank shot and killed Francis Bernielemans at Jefferson City and then put two bullets in his own brain. The two were walking arm in arm from church when Frank drew his revolver and fired at his companion. The latter cried: 'Oh! don't shoot me, friend," and the answer was another shot. Frank then shot himself dead. Both were about 60 years old and were prominent citizens of Jefferson City. No cause can be assigned for the tragedy.

Famine in Guatamala.

NEW YORK, July 14.—The news of a great scarcity of grain in the southern provinces of Guatemala, a scarcity so great as to threaten a famine, has reached the city by the last mail. Corn is at a very high price, and there is almost none to be had. The rainfall was but 3 inches during the last rainy season, although the normal rainfall there is about 77 inches. As a result shelled corn was worth $2 a bushel in the markets of Rival, Granada and Wanagna, against 30 to 35 cents in ordinary times, while hay sold at 5 cents a handful and cattle were dying of starvation in the woods.

BIG CHURCH COUNCIL.

Congregationalist Divines from All Parts of the World in Conference in London.

LONDON, July 14.—The international council of Congregational churches was convened Monday in Memorial hall in Farringdon street. This hall is the home of English Congregationalism and contains the offices, the library and the assembly rooms of the churches of England. The building was densely crowded when the council was called to order at 3 o'clock by Rev. R. W. Dale, D. D., of Birmingham, Eng. On the platform were Dr. Allon, who, with Dr. Dale, divides the honor of being the leader of the denomination in England; Dr. Mackennal, the secretary of the council; Dr. Joseph Parker, well known on both sides of the water; Dr. Bevan, of Australia; Principal Fairbairn, of Oxford; Dr. Goodwin, of Chicago, President Northrop, of Minnesota; Drs. Clark and Quint, of Boston, and numerous other Congregational leaders.

In the course of his address Dr. Hale announced that among the topics which would come before the body for consideration would be the following:

1. Congregationalism in its domestic sense, or its own internal working forces, such as Sunday schools, young people's societies, theological currents of thought, ecclesiastical councils and training of ministers. 2. Congregationalism in the nation, home missions, church and state, labor and capital, temperance, international federation for the promotion of peace and righteousness. 3. Congregationalism in the church catholic. 4. Congregationalism and the world and missions in their broadest scope and claims.

The council organized by electing Rev. Dr. Bean, of Melbourne, Australia, president, and Revs. Dr. Northrop, of Minnesota; Dr. A. H. Quint, of Boston, and Dr. J. Guinness Rogers, of London, vice presidents. There are 300 delegates in attendance at the council—100 from England, 100 from the United States and 100 from the rest of the world, and the last 100 includes representatives from Russia, Sweden, Austria, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, Jamaica, British Guiana, India, Japan, China, Madagascar, Samoa and the Sandwich islands.

A resolution of sympathy with Rev. Charles H. Spurgeon in his illness and expressing a hope for his recovery was unanimously adopted.

The great feature of the day was the reception given the delegates by the Congregational union of England and Wales. The address was delivered by Dr. John Brown, pastor of the famous Bunyan church in Belford. Dr. Brown is well known throughout England and America by his delightful biography of John Bunyan. His address was full of a most cordial and fraternal spirit.

The exercises of the day began with a breakfast given to the delegates at 9 o'clock in the morning by the Society for the Liberation of Religion from State Control. At the breakfast, which was given at the Holborn restaurant, Mr. Alfred Illingworth, member of parliament for West Bradford, presided. Mr. Illingworth, in welcoming the delegates, said that the liberals were pledged to disestablish the Welsh and Scotch churches, after which the English church would be attacked on all sides. The speaker declared that the aristocracy was the chief buttress of the established churches, not 5 per cent. of the wageworkers being communicants. Other speakers were Rev. A. H. Bradford, of New Jersey; Dr. Northrop, of Minnesota; Dr. Bevan and Dr. Noble, of Chicago.

Among the American delegates present are the following:

Rev. N. Boynton, Boston; Dr. A. H. Bradford, New Jersey; Dr. James Brand, Oberlin, O.; Dr. N. P. Clark, Boston; Dr. Richard Cardley, Lawrence, Kan.; Dr. A. E. Dunning, Boston; Prof. F. W. Fisk, Chicago; Dr. B. M. Fullerton, Waltham, Mass.; Dr. Washington Gladden, Columbus, O.; Dr. Arthur Little, Boston; Dr. J. K. McLean, Oakland, Cal.; Dr. William H. Moore, Hartford, Conn.; President Cyrus W. Northrop, Minneapolis; Prof. L. F. Stearns, Bangor, Me.; Dr. Henry A. Steinson, St. Louis; Dr. W. M. Travers, New York; Prof. William J. Tucker, Andover, Mass.; Dr. Edwin B. Webb, Wellesley, Mass.; Dr. Patterson, Hanover, N. H.; Rev. E. F. Williams, Chicago.

A GYMNAST KILLED.

One of the Famous Hanlon Brothers Breaks His Neck at Clinton, Ia.

CLINTON, Ia., July 14.—During the afternoon performance of Adam Forepaugh's show here the crane broke upon which William Hanlon, one of the Hanlon-Volters gymnasts, was performing. He missed the net and fell to the ground, striking upon his head and breaking his neck. He only lived a few minutes. Two doctors who attended him said that he probably never knew anything after he struck the earth. Great excitement was caused by the accident, but the performance was continued and quiet was soon restored.

William Hanlon was 31 years old. He was born in London, and has for twenty-four years been associated with the Hanlon-Volters. Last August he had a similar accident at the Acadamy of Music, New York, falling from the dome of the theater and breaking two of the seats in the theater. William Hanlon's work was upon the horizontal bars in the center, Robert and James Hanlon doing the flying trapeze. The remaining two Hanlons will remain with Forepaugh through the remainder of the season. William left a wife, who is now ill in New York, but had no children. Coroner Myers impaneled a jury, which returned a verdict of accidental death.

Found the Missing Dollar.

WASHINGTON, July 14.—The count of money and bullion in the vaults of the treasury consequent on the transfer of the office of treasurer from Mr. Huston to Mr. Nebeker has been concluded. It began April 17 and has involved the actual handling and counting piece by piece of $614,511,582.32, of which amount $26,048,000 is gold coin and $139,902,000 silver coin. Every cent called for by the books of the office has been accounted for, including the silver dollar missing from one of the bags examined several weeks since, which coin was subsequently found on the floor of the vault after the other bags had been removed.

Gone to His Reward.

PEORIA, Ill., July 14.—At an early hour Monday morning Rev. Jonathan Edwards, D. D., LL. D., died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Loughbridge, of the grip. He was a noted divine of the Presbyterian church, having served as pastor in different places for forty-seven years, and at the time of his death he was pastor at Meadville, Pa. He had been president of two female colleges. He was at one time president of the college at Honover which was removed to Chicago and is now the McCormick Theological seminary. He was also at one time professor of theology in the college at Danville, Ky.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS

SLEPT MANY YEARS.

Herman Harms, After Slumbering Sixteen Years, Finally Awakes.

Herman Harms, of Quincy, who has slept almost incessantly for the last sixteen years, awoke from his slumbers the other day. A little over sixteen years ago Harms was attacked by a severe fever and had intense pains shooting through his head. He was then in Illinois. His physician recommended that he move to Minnesota. Since he came to this state he has slept all the time except an interval of a year and a half beginning with 1881 and two months of 1889 and 1890. Harms was born in Germany in 1838. He was married to Miss Buzman in 1863. His faithful wife has zealously guarded him through all these years of torpidity.

Horrible Death of a Finn.

Oscar Carlson, a Finlander, working on Minnesota stock piles at Tower, met with a fatal accident while uncoupling two ore cars. He undertook to let them down a heavy grade, and was standing on the front end of the forward car when the rest of the train, coming down the grade behind, struck his car and threw him headlong in front of the moving train. The train passed over both legs and arms, and he died a few hours later.

First of the Season.

The first drowning of the season at Lake Minnetonka took place when Andrew Nelson, whose home was in Minneapolis, lost his life in the north arm. He had gone out rowing, and when some little distance from the shore stood up to remove his coat. In getting on his feet he tipped the boat, and losing his balance fell headlong into the lake.

Not Altogether a Sham.

Instead of the usual drills of the Second regiment at Camp Lakeview a sham battle was held with movements in minor tactics. In consequence of some wild shooting with blank cartridges Corporal Niman and Private Demetz of Company K, and Private Slater of Company I, were badly burned by powder.

Post Office Affairs.

Fred S. Thorgan has resigned as postmaster at Irving. It is proposed to establish a post office at Sime, 6 miles west of Grand Rapids, with Rufus H. Gale as postmaster. The establishment of a post office is also asked for at Meadones township, near the route between Rothsay and Manston.

After Twenty Years.

Mrs. Maggie McVickars was married at Rochester to one of the wealthiest merchants of that city, Mr. Arthur Morton. This marriage was the result of vows spoken twenty years ago, but which were interrupted by a misunderstanding occasioned by the loss of a letter in the mails.

Despoiled by Burglars.

At White Bear Lake burglars entered a number of cottages and took several thousand dollars' worth of valuables and money. The pugilist, Fitzsimmons, had his valuable diamond prize stolen, and his trainer, Jimmy Carroll, was also a victim.

The News Briefly Chronicled.

W. H. Benson has been appointed postmaster at Motley, Morrison county, vice J. C. McMillan, resigned.

The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul depot at Faribault station was entered and robbed, and attempts were also made at several houses.

Soule Bros., of Fergus Falls, carrying a general stock of merchandise, have assigned to George H. Partridge, of Minneapolis.

James E. Tod, who resided at Fergus Falls for a long time as manager of the Red River Milling Company, died at Great Falls, Mont.

William, the 13-year-old son of Charles McIlhargy, of Duluth, was stabbed in the left shoulder by one of several boys in whose company he was. The wound was a dangerous one.

Two children at Bird Island were dead and another would die from eating poisonous roots found in the woods.

The Minneapolis harvest machine makers claim that the crop is so heavy in the northwest that they cannot fill their orders.

A fire at Duluth destroyed $35,000 worth of property.

A petition is on file at Washington for the establishment of a post office in Kittson county to be called Nomeland, with E. S. Nomeland for postmaster.

Reports come from some parts of Rice county that chinch bugs were in the grain, otherwise the crops were all in a flourishing condition.

Freight trains on the Omaha road collided near Fort Snelling and thirty cars and an engine were burned. Loss, $50,000.

James Smith, a prosperous farmer living a mile west of Granite Falls, died suddenly of heart disease.

John Matheis, the oldest carpet dealer in St. Paul, made an assignment. The assets were placed at $100,000 and the liabilities at a small sum.

At Lake City the dwelling tenanted by John G. Woolley's family caught fire and was partially ruined. The contents were saved. The loss was covered by insurance.

The work of surveying the Red Lake reservation has been suspended until the 1st of September, on account of the mosquitoes and flies.

Delos Bardwell, of Spruce Hill, was thrown from his wagon while on his way home and fell on his neck, killing him instantly. Deceased was 52 years old and leaves a family.

Henry Carter, who had been doing business in Minneapolis under the name of Northwestern union detective agency, was arrested on a charge of swindling.

As the result of a long and thorough investigation, the charges that thousands of bushels of wheat had been stolen from the farmers by Minnesota elevators, and especially those at Duluth, have been proved to be entirely without foundation.

Frank Evans, of Winona, was arrested at Waukesha, Wis., on suspicion of murdering a Fond du Lac man.

J. L. Blake, agent at the Minneapolis & St. Louis station at Northfield, has been appointed traveling freight agent on the road.

Mrs. Mary J. Baxter, of Minnesota, has been promoted from a $1,400 to a $1,600 clerkship in the interior department.

In accordance with an act of the last legislature the state officials have about completed arrangements for refunding the 4½ per cent. railroad adjustment bonds at 3½ per cent.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—It is a curious little fact, and one worth remembering, that on the same day, April 26, 1616, that William Shakespeare died in England, Miguel Cervantes, the celebrated Spanish author of "Don Quixote," died in Spain.

—Mrs. James T. Field, of Boston, the widow of the publisher, is said to possess one of the largest private literary collections in the world. In the library are quantities of valuable original MSS. and autograph letters, and in the garden in the rear of the house grow trees that were planted by many famous authors and public men.

—James Whitcomb Riley and Ella Wheeler Wilcox were more than friends years ago, it is said. Both were poor, however, and neither had attained a national reputation at that time. Whether or not Mrs. Wilcox ever intended to marry the Hoosier poet, Riley himself was nearly heartbroken when their cordial relations were sundered.

—Edwin Booth was recently offered twenty-five thousand dollars by a leading New York publisher if he would write the story of his life and theatrical experiences. Mr. Booth refused in emphatic language. "Five times that sum would not induce me to write a line. I shall never write a book. I detest writing. Sometimes I think I don't even like to act."

—Wilder, the western humorist, says that in appreciating good jokes a crowd of newsboys is the quickest and most intelligent he ever met. No point, gesture or shade of inflection escapes these alert little nomads, while on the other hand many fashionable assemblages are chilly and unresponsive until you break the crust of reserve or indifference as if with a sledge hammer.

—Two of the German emperor's favorite dogs recently ran away from the stables at Potsdam without leave and without their muzzles, which is a necessary article of a dog's attire in Berlin and its neighborhood. "Fix" and "Schnurchen," after a day's enjoyment, were taken up by the police, but were eventually restored to the royal stables after payment of a fine of three marks for each by the emperor.

—Queen Wilhelmina of Holland made her first appearance in public life recently by going through a number of functions in Amersterdam, which, to a thirteen-year-old sovereign, must have been perfectly bewildering. In the simplest of white frocks, with a broad black sash, she moved about so composedly that one would have imagined she had been doing nothing else but take part in court ceremonials from her cradle.

—Queen Margaret's visits to the hospitals among the sufferers from the explosion are looked forward to with great delight, especially by the children. "And now tell me if there is anything you would like, and I will see if I can get it for you," she said, as she stooped over a little cot where two battered and bruised little victims were lying. "Signora," lisped the younger, "I should like a dolly." "You shall each have a doll, a perfect beauty," and before another day a magnificent doll lay in each little cot tenderly nursed by very pale-faced and bruised little mothers. —N. Y. Sun.

HUMOROUS.

—As Usual.—Wiggsy — "How are things, old man?" Blind Beggar—"Out of sight."—Brooklyn Eagle.

—"What's a good thing to put money into nowadays, Bronson?" asked the investor. "Beefsteak and pie," replied the broker.—Harper's Bazar.

—Bowing by Proxy.—Brown—"Say, Jones, you do not know Miss Armour; why did you raise your hat to her?" Jones—"I didn't. It's my brother's hat; he knows her."—King's Jester.

—Doctor—"So you are suffering from insomnia, are you?" Pat Rattigan (the patient)—"Thots not it, sorr. Sure the only thing thot troubles me is oi can't shlape the noight."—Harper's Bazar.

—"What ever became of that greyhound you had?" "Killed himself." "Really?" "Yes; tried to catch a fly on the small of his back and miscalculated. Bit himself in two."—Brooklyn Life.

—A Blundering Athlete.—"Jimmie is a very unfortunate boy," said Mrs. Simpson. "He joined an athlete club, and the first time he went there he broke one of the best records they had."—Exchange.

—"I saw Backus last night. He'd been drinking as usual. I can't see how Carrie came to marry such a man." "Well, I don't know. The last time I saw Backus I was convinced there was a good deal in him."—Boston Transcript.

—An Insuperable Objection.—Enterprising Sister—"See how pretty she looks against that olive curtain! Now's your chance, Frank; go in and speak to her, she is alone." Timid Brother—"Y-e-s; but if I go in there she won't be alone."—Smith, Gray & Co.'s Monthly.

—A Prescription Suggested.—Coupons—"You're not looking very well, Moneybags. What's the matter?" Moneybags—"Well, the fact is, my son's behavior has made me positively ill. I don't know what I ought to do about it.' Coupons—"Why not try a change of heir?"—Saturday Evening Herald.

—Help Wanted.—Mrs. Slimson—"Now, Tommy, I am going to put the candy on the step to cool, and you needn't think you can touch it, because I shall be watching you from the window all the time." Tommy (meekly)—"Yes'm. Can I ask the little Dingle boy over here?" Mrs. Simson—"What do you want him for?" Tommy—"I want him to help share my misery."—N. Y. Sun.

—One of our very swellest young men made a call on a young lady at her home in a suburban town recently. The girl who opened the door was green—very. Our exquisite proffered his card. "I wish to see Miss L——," he said. The girl caught him by the coat sleeve and dragged him in with a jerk. "Go right in!" she exclaimed. "We don't need no tickets. Go right in!"—Boston Record.

Shopkeeping in the Suburbs.

Suburban Customer - Eight cents a yard? Is that the best you can p?o

Suburban Merchant—It is, ma'am. Cost me seven and a half.

Suburban Customer—I won't pay it. I can get exactly the same thing in the city for seven cents.

[Goes away indignantly, spends twenty cents for car fare, sacrifices half a day, and saves fourteen cents in the purchase of a roll of calico.]—Chicago Tribune.

DEBT.

We pity a man who's in debt;
No pleasure in life does he gebt;
His head it will ache
From lying awache
At nights to worry and frebt.

He borrows from every friend
Until they refuse him to liend;
In time he becomes
To even his chomes
A nuisance despised to the liend.

He looks no one straight in the eye;
Without ready cash he must bye
On tick and take tough,
Unsalable stough,
And pay for it awfully hye.

He isn't a free man at all;
To those whom he owes he must crall
And cringe and obey
And hide from their wey
Disguised in a bonnet and shall.

Without any system of guard
His money melts quicker than luard,
And when it is gone
His watch he must pone;
For others he has to work huard.

When old not a comfort he knows;
"Dead broke" to the poorhouse he gows
And suffers, of course,
The keenest remourse
Till "Potter's Field" endeth his wows.

MORAL.

Down hill it is easy to roll
But once you get into the holl
Of debt you may climb,
Yet never in timb
Get out to save body or soll.

AMANDA'S BURDENS.

They All Vanished After She Discovered Her Riches.

HE was no longer little Mandy.

She had grown to be a large strong girl, with red cheeks and brown eyes that were full of good nature. Elderly people liked to look upon Amanda's dimpled face, and enjoy her blushes when strangers spoke to her. She had been accounted pretty and what was much better—a good girl. But now, since her thirteenth birthday, a sad change had come over her. A frown often settled upon her once smooth forehead, and she went about her daily tasks not with the old-time skips and songs and smiles, but in a listless, disconsolate way that did her no credit.

Amanda had recently discovered that her father was not the rich man she had all along thought him. "The flock of kids," as she sometimes called the little band of brothers and sisters younger than herself, took so much of her mother's time and care, and were, withal, such romps, that it was hard for Amanda to do her share of keeping the house in order.

Somehow, everything seemed at this time to disgust Amanda. For one thing she had become very sensitive about her "great, red hands." The remark of another schoolgirl had given her new thoughts about her hands, although they were not out of proportion to her rather large frame.

"I do wish we were rich!" she would often exclaim, looking positively homely in her discontentment. Then she would look out of the windows in a listless, droop-shouldered way, murmuring to herself in this wise: "The idea of living in a house with a rag carpet on the sitting-room floor, and coming back to its original rags at that!"

Again she sometimes would say to herself in strong disgust: "Amandy! Amandy Jinkum! What a name! If folks would only call me Amanda it might be borne. And Jinkum! Who ever heard such a name?"

"Amanda," said her mother, "we ought not to fret about a thing like a name. I long ago made up my mind to like our name, and I do."

"If ever I have any children," said Amanda, "I'll give them right-down sensible good names they needn't be ashamed of."

"I often wonder," said the mother, softly, "if Abraham Lincoln, when he was of your age, was ashamed of his name. I suppose we should live lives so good that everybody will approve of us, and then our names will sound good, wherever they are heard."

About this time our heroine was invited to spend a night with a girl of about her own age, the daughter of a merchant and an only child. A sight of the elegant dresses of the petted child, the costly furnishings of her pretty chamber, sent Amanda Jinkum home more than ever discontented, if not positively envious. For days she dawdled at her work; jerked and scolded little Willie while dressing him; found fault with her "big red hands," and referred to herself as a "monstrous ugly giant."

More frequently than ever this discontented girl would speak out fretfully: "Why can't we have things more stylish? Amy Prince does, and why can't we?"

One day being unusually unhappy she cried out: "What a mess these children do make! I don't see what's the use of so many children, anyway!"

"Which of them would you be glad to be rid of, Amanda?" asked her mother.

"All of them!" snapped the eldest daughter.

"My dear," said Mrs. Jinkum in a mild tone, "you know how sick Willie has been, and I have allowed the rest to play here to save disturbing him. The house generally looks much more orderly than it does to-day."

"I'd like to know when it ever looked any better," cried the girl savagely.

The cruelty of these words to the worn mother proved the last drop in her brimming cup of trial, and five minutes later Mr. Jinkum found his wife sobbing in her own room.

"Why, Lucy! what is the matter?" he asked. Presently she told him how the too frequent keen thrust from their eldest child had wounded her soul. After this the two talked over the unhappy change in their once contented daughter. "I had hoped that Amanda's discontentment would soon vanish," said her father, "but I must confess her mood seems to be settling into a confirmed habit of mind."

"It is because she has never yet learned how to count up her blessings," said her mother.

Some days after this, Mr. Jinkum invited Amanda to a public concert with him. They started early, for he had an errand or two to do. Amanda was very much pleased to go with her father to public entertainments, he treated her so much like an equal. They walked from the cozy farmhouse and into the village near by, talking pleasantly of the coming concert. Turning from the principal business street, Mr. Jinkum knocked at the door of a small house. It was opened by a pleasant-faced woman with a heavy baby on her left arm. "Oh, good evening, Mr. Jinkum," she said cheerily. "Come right in. I suppose this is your daughter. You are well. You look very well," she added politely to Amanda.

After the callers had taken some proffered chairs and there had been a few moments of general conversation, Mr. Jinkum made known his business which related to the doing of some of the family washing. The business dispatched, Mr. Jinkum asked:

"And how is your husband to-day?"

"Oh, I think he is a trifle stronger."

From this point, Mr. Jinkum, by his kindly manner, induced the washerwoman to talk somewhat freely of her household. She spoke of her thankfulness that she was able to earn a comfortable living at the tub for the family. Each succeeding week brought her more work. And then baby was the best baby in the world; there really never was such a baby! And then Johnny was improving in his studies every day!

"Come here, Johnny," she called, "and let Mr. Jinkum and Miss Amanda see how well you can write." Thus called a little sunny-haired fellow of seven years came forward and presented his slate from under his right arm, and for the first time Amanda saw that the boy had lost one arm above the elbow and the other at the wrist. Several sentences had been written on his slate in a beautiful round hand.

"Why, how could he do it!" Amanda exclaimed, excitedly.

"Show Miss Amanda how it is that you write," said the mother, fondly.

Johnny carried his slate to the table, and picking up his pencil with his lips, pushed it under the wrist band and wrote a line exceedingly well.

"By and by," said the mother, "I shall earn Johnny a pair of artificial arms. Dr. Hall says he can have them fitted beautifully. He knows a young man who was blown away from a cannon and lost both arms; but since he got his new ones he has become a telegraph operator. We are going to make an operator out of Johnny here."

Johnny nodded in a matter of fact way as if that business were already settled.

"O, yes; Johnny will make his mark in the world, if he hasn't any hands," said Mrs. Brown, in a calm, cheery tone, without an atom of emotion; and then she told how he played marbles and threw stones with his toes.

Once outside the house Amanda hastened to ask her father how Johnny Brown had met with his bad fortune.

Her father told her that the family had once lived close beside a railroad track. Johnny was but a creeping baby at the time of his accident. One day he managed to crawl unobserved in front of a passing locomotive, and the mischief was done.

"The father is a great invalid," Mr. Jinkum continued, "and the eldest boy a cripple; yet the mother never repines, but gladly supports them all by taking in washing. I doubt if there is a happier woman in town than she."

In the same block father and daughter made another call, and were asked into a very pretty sitting-room. Mrs. Arnold, a tall and rather stately woman, was not unknown to both the callers. She greeted them with smiling grace. Mr. Jinkum had called to leave a parcel of sewing. No sooner had they entered the room than a tall slender girl, fully as tall as Amanda, came slowly and tremulously forward, and laying her emaciated arm over Amanda's shoulder, said in uncertain, lisping tones, like a child of three or four years of age: "Why—didn't—you—be—tall—as—me?"

In health she must have been a girl of rare promise and beauty. The hair clustered about her forehead in masses of dark curls. But the muscles of her face were constantly twitching, her gait was uneven and unsteady, and it could be easily seen that the poor young creature was a mere wreck of life and health. At the door Mrs. Arnold remarked that Georgiana was growing steadily worse.

"You saw the tall fender about the stove?" she continued.

Amanda nodded.

"She has fallen on the stove once, and so we got the fender."

"Oh, I can tell you," she continued, "there are some things harder to bear than death. She had six of those dreadful spasms yesterday." All this was said with a gentle, tearless smile or with firm lips closed, as if the concealment of anguish had become a fixed habit.

Mr. Jinkum drew his daughter's arm within his own and the two walked on in silence.

Life at the farm soon took on a somber hue. Little Willie grew worse. The thoughts of the household were centered upon him. Amanda gave up her school. It seemed as if the mother never left the bedside of her sick boy.

Amanda had, along with the dull pain at thought of losing the little darling of the household, the intolerable sting of conscience. She had said she would like to lose all the children—and how dreadful the prospect of losing even one! The wickedness of her speech oppressed her. How earnestly she prayed, as she looked down on the pale face drawn with suffering, that the baby's life might be spared. She saw now how imaginary had been most of her troubles.

A letter lay on the table, received the night before by her father from her Uncle George. Mrs. Jinkum handed it to her and she read it wonderingly:

"DEAR BROTHER: Your and Lucy's letters reached us last night together with your draft for one hundred dollars. We had been a good deal discouraged, having failed to get money where we felt we had a right to expect it, but from you, with your large family and sickness, we had expected nothing, and lo! such a gift. The cyclone that left us without a home in a moment did not wring a tear from our eyes, since our little ones were safe and unhurt. But your letters so touched our hearts that we both sat down and cried for joy. We couldn't help it. We will accept the money as a loan but not as a gift, and only hope you have not too much cramped yourself in sending it.

"You are the same dear fellow you were when we owned our first jackknife and pocketbook in company, and I can't tell you how much we bless you. With lots of love to you and yours, I am your ever affectionate brother,

"GEORGE."

Amanda stood by the table realizing. She had never thought of her plainly-dressed farmer father as a hero. Now she understood why the purchase of a new carpet had been deferred. Now she could guess the meaning of the hints Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Arnold had given of her mother's helpfulness.

AMANDA COUNTS UP HER BLESSINGS.

Another week passed. The strain upon the family was now almost greater than they could bear.

Amanda had gone up to her chamber but was unable to sleep. Her mother softly entered her room.

"Mother?" Amanda whispered.

"Yes, dear."

"How is Willie?"

"Better—a good deal, we think."

"Oh, I am so glad!" and she threw her arms about her mother's neck, and sobbed with joy.

When she was calmer she said, as her mother sat by her side: "I have been a wicked girl. So discontented and unhappy about such little, little things! And here I have such a good home, and father and mother and brothers and sisters; and Willie is going to get well—don't you think so, mother?"

"Yes, dear. I think so."

"And then, mother, I've been counting up my blessings. I used to feel so about my big red hands, and there's poor Johnny Brown with no hands at all! What a great thing it is to be sound and strong and well, every one of us, but Willie. I wonder I never thought of it before! None of us are lame or deformed or blind—just think of poor Georgiana Arnold. And, mother, I know now why we couldn't have a new carpet; but we can do without or patch the old one, can't we?"

"Certainly, dear."

"And something else, mother?"

"Yes, daughter."

"I want to tell you how rich I feel! I've got a hero for a father, and a—a—saint for a mother."—O. Howard, in Wide Awake.

PAPER COLLARS.

A Novel Invention Which Has Gone Into Disuse.

No one ever inquires in a Broadway furnishing store any more for paper collars or paper cuffs, and yet less than ten years ago a big trade was done in these articles. They have, it would seem, gone quietly out of vogue; their retirement curiously contrasting with the hard fight which accompanied their introduction about the year 1851-2. Who was the inventor of them? Necessity in the form of a starving poet of whose productions, excellent though they were, the only one remembered to-day is a passage, quoted by Fielding in the introduction to the seventh book of "Tom Jones:"

"From Thee all human actions take their spring
The rise of empires and the fall of kings.
See the vast theater of time displayed,
While o'er the scene succeeding heroes tread
With pomp and shining images succeed,
What leaders triumph and what monarchs bleed;
Perform the parts Thy providence designed,
Their pride, their passions to Thy ends inclined.
Awhile they glitter in the face of day,
Then at Thy nod the phantoms pass away;
No traces left of all the busy scene,
But that remembrance says—the things have been."

The last line seems peculiarly appropriate to the subject in hand. But to return. The author was Samuel Boyse, born in Dublin, 1698, son of a minister, brilliant, poor and improvident, as most men of his class were at the time. Cibber in his "Lives of the Poets" says of him: "Whenever his distresses so pressed on him as to induce him to dispose of his shirt he fell upon an artificial method of supplying one. He cut some white paper in slips which he tied round his wrists and in the same manner supplied his neck. In this plight he frequently appeared abroad."

Poets in those days could not set the fashion else poor Boyse might have anticipated the Count D'Orsay by wearing no collar at all.

Another article not now inquired for is the dickey. This consisted of a shirt bosom and collar combined. They were much called for by the dandies of the Tittlebat Titmouse genus, so finely hit off in Warren's "Ten Thousand a Year."—Brooklyn Eagle.

—Weary Watkins—"What's become o' Miserable Johnson? He oughter been along here a week ago." Hungry Higgins—"He's in jail. He was tryin' to follow the new sowvenecr spoon fashion an' the boss of the beanery ketched him in the act."—Indianapolis Journal.

Evening Up.—"Do you use tobacco and drink?" asked Sarah, anxiously, just after the engagement had been decided upon. "Sometimes," replied Henry. "That's all right," she replied, as a glad light shone in her face. "It's a stand-off, then; I chew gum."—St. Paul Globe.

SCHOOL AND CHURCH.

—The Jesuit order has a total membership of 12,300, divided into 27 provinces.

—Yale college has become residuary legatee of one-fourth of the large estate of Mrs. Miriam A. Osborne.

—The assets of the Baptist university of Chicago, founded by the society with $1,200,000, now amount to $2,250,000.

—Five Turkish students, whose expenses will be defrayed by the Sultan, have arrived at the university of Berlin.

—Michigan university, at Ann Arbor, proposes to have women professors and lecturers, and the legislature seems quite willing that it should be so.

—Rev. A. J. Diaz, the "apostle of Cuba," reports 7 churches with 1,917 members; baptized the past year, 210; Sunday-schools, 7; scholars have averaged attendance of 679 every Sunday. There are 3 church buildings.

—Arthur Latham Perry, the veteran political economist, has resigned from his professorship at Williams college, where he was an instructor for thirty-eight years. Generations of Williams students have a kindly regard for the old professor, whose quaint class-room methods are cherished among the reminiscences of Berkshire college life.

—Foreign missionaries resident in Japan are now granted passports to reside outside of foreign concessions, on the ground that they are "employed in church work"—a concession which has hitherto been given only to teachers. Coming at this time it indicates a special appreciation on the part of the Japanese government of the beneficial influence of the missionaries.

—An amendment has been introduced in the school board of New York city which provides giving a vacation of one year to teachers who have served ten years, their salary to be the same, less one dollar and a half per day, which will be used to pay the substitutes. The absentee must agree to spend at least thirty days of the vacation in visiting schools in this or foreign coutries.

—The report for the year of the Connecticut Bible society states that some fifteen or more towns have been visited, and many families destitute of the Bible supplied. Some of the feeble churches have been helped by being spiritually revived and increased in membership, many in some places giving good evidence of having entered on a Christian life. Outside of legacies the society has received $4,357, more than from the same source the preceding year.

—It is an interesting fact that of the 345 colleges and universities reporting to the bureau of education at Washington 204 are co-educational. The same may be said of thirty-eight out of forty-eight schools of science endowed by national land grants. Women at present constitute fifty-five per cent. of the undergraduates in this country. Wellesley college has an endowment of $2,500,000, Bryn Mawr of $1,000,000, Vassar of $1,200,000 and Smith of $400,000.—University Magazine.

—Harvard college will open a school of pedagogy next year. Fifteen distinct courses will be open to students who comply with the requirements for admission. A newly-appointed professor, Paul H. Hanus, will have charge of the school. Prof. William James will lecture on the psychological problems involved. Harvard has just opened its Semitic museum, which is probably the first distinctly Semitic museum in the world. It represents the liberality of a wealthy Hebrew of New York, Mr. Jacob Schiff.

—A young Mussulman girl was brought into a missionary home in Hamadan, Persia, as seamstress, and, becoming interested in seeing other girls read, applied herself for admission to the school. Her family and friends hearing of it forced her to leave, but not until the Bible had become familiar to her. A young man, who had remained unmarried because he could not find a Christian wife, heard of her, and through friends, according to Persian custom, a marriage was arranged. The ceremony was first performed in Persian style, but afterward the couple came to the missionary's home and were married in Christian form.

BOTH WERE BAD.

But the Proprietor Wasn't Quite Bad Enough.

Two very loud men came into a neat little restaurant on the west side and sat down at the counter. They had a good deal to say and they were very loud about saying it. They made the waiter mad, and then they scared him into submission. They swore roundly and wadded the bill of fare up into a roll because it had no "strawberry m'rang" printed upon it. They made disparaging remarks about the lady cashier, and completed their offense by audibly cursing the proprietor who would keep such a place.

That was a drop too much. The man who ran the restaurant had been a very bad man in his day, and age had by no means shortened his arm, nor had his right hand lost its cunning. He walked up to the two men without a shade of trepidation and told them they would have to be still. He well remembered the days when he had lammed the starch out of fellows like that, and when he had a little rather tackle two or three of them at a time than one. But they didn't know anything about that.

"Well, what about it if we don't keep still?" asked the hardest-looking of the men.

"Then I will simply have to break your necks and throw you out," said the proprietor, kindly.

The waiter had laid a patty of butter down before them and the hardest looking man tossed it into the face of the formerly giant crusher. That was enough. The proprietor moistened the thumb and forefinger of his right hand and laid it on the collar of the offender. The next instant the proprietor described a circle in the air and camo down behind the cigar case. When he got up the hardest-looking man poured some acid vinegar down his back and rubbed a little celery salt into his collar. Then each visitor helped himself to a tooth-pick and wandered out into the night.

Spooney Affairs, Not Cuts, Remembered.

Smart Customer—You fellers are makin' a heap o' souv'nir spoons, ain't ye? Why don't yer git up souv'nir knives?

Mr. Hedaik (in auction-room)—And haven't you really got a silent partner?

Auctioneer—No; why?

Mr. Hedaik—Because I thought you made noise enough for two!—Puck.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—A damp cloth dipped in salt will remove egg stains from silver or tea stains from china.

—Even the broken tack are helpful in this utilitarian age; they are excellent for cleaning bottles.

—French Fried Potatoes: Peel and cut lengthwise good-sized potatoes, let stand in cold salt water two hours, and fry in hot lard as you do doughnuts.—Housekeeper.

—If a teacupful of cold water is added to a well-beaten egg, and enough of the mixture used to moisten the ground coffee before it is made, it will be quite a saving of eggs over the old method.

—Corn Cake: One-quarter cupful of sugar, one-half cupful of flour, two-thirds of a cupful of Indian meal, one-half teaspoonful of baking powder, a little salt and melted butter. Mix with hot milk. Bake in sheet.—Good Housekeeping.

—To Boil Broad Beans: Shell one peck of beans, put them into a saucepan of boiling water and salt, boil them quickly for fifteen minutes or longer, should they require it; when done drain them in a colander, and serve with parsley and butter sauce.—Boston Herald.

—To take coal-oil out of a carpet saturate with benzine and then rub dry with a clean white cloth. If the first application does not take it out go through the same process until it is out. As benzine is very explosive be careful and not have a light in the room nor a hot stove.

—Coffee: Tie four tablespoons of coffee in a piece of coarse cheesecloth. Put it in a coffee-pot with one pint of cold water. After it has boiled five minutes add one pint of boiling water and keep it hot ten minutes. Keep the spout closed with a cork or paper, if there be no tin cover.—Boston Budget.

—Aurora Sauce: Make a pint of white sauce with a cup of hot lobster stock, one cupful of cream, two tablespoonfuls of butter, two tablespoonful of flour, one-half teaspoonful of salt, and one-eighth salt-spoonful of cayenne. Color with lobster coral rubbed to a paste with an equal quantity of butter and rubbed through a sieve.—N. Y. Observer.

—Conserve of Roses: Take fresh rose-petals, dip them in rose-water; mash, and boil the juice with an equal quantity of crystalized sugar; color the sirup with a few drops of cochineal; and, just before taking it from the fire, drop into it, one by one, large, fresh rose-petals. When the sirup has all been used in this way sift fine sugar over the candied petals and put in jars.—Ladies' Home Journal.

—Mrs. W.'s Puff Paste: One pound of flour, one pound butter. Divide the butter into four parts, rub one part into the flour, mix with cold water to soft dough. Roll it out to a thin sheet, dot it thickly with bits of butter, using one part, sprinkle with flour; roll it together with the hands. Roll it out again, rolling from you (not backward and forward as usual), dot with butter, sprinkle with flour and roll out as before. Do this thrice, being careful to roll from you always.—Detroit Free Press.

—When it is necessary to do up at home large cretonne draperies, such as curtains and furniture covers, they may be washed thus: Cut up some soap in small pieces into a basin and fill up with boiling water. Leave this until it is in a jelly. When ready to wash the cretonne, put this jelly in a tub with plenty of boiling water and let it become lukewarm. Then wash the article thoroughly. When the dirt is out, rinse the cretonne in a tub of clean water with a little blueing and some salt. If very much soiled it may be necessary to pass through two tubs of soap and water. Roll the cretonne in an old blanket and squeeze out the water; pull the stuff into shape and hang it up to dry.—N. Y. World.

PILLOW COVERS.

Pretty Floral Designs in Antique Embroidery.

While many sofa pillows are still covered with flowered China silk, outlined in gold or silver if a more elaborate effect is desired, the pillow of the latest style is the flower pillow. A pretty one, seen on a Turkish couch, represented a great purple pansy. The pillow itself was made in the shape of the flower. The petals of purple satin were sewed on to the pillow; the shading was done in embroidery silk. Large yellow buttercups and any flower that is simple in its structure may be used in this way. One almost feels as if in a flower garden when four or five of these pillows are clustered in a room. The black satin pillow in the shape of a huge heart with golden arrows and tiny gold hearts outlined with gold thread upon it fits nicely into some corners. An exchange says that a pretty and practical pillow cover is made of fine twilled linen. The fabric is first covered with a waved pattern worked in back stitch, preferably in yellow silk. A bold pattern is then embroidered over this in conventional style, when the despised linen material will be found good enough for any pillow in any room. The stitched background has all the effect of fine quilting, and it is a pity that work is not more frequently done in this style. Some of the most beautiful of antique embroideries for the fronts of dresses, waistcoats, etc., were worked thus upon a quilted material, and it is wonderful how very flat a plain background looks after studying one of these quilted pieces. Running, chain, or even outline stitch may be used, if preferred to the back stitch.—N. Y. World.

Lace for Wraps.

Lace is the material par excellence for wraps, which are made in an infinite variety of form and are often ornamented with jet. A lace cape that is much the vogue is of wide flouncing, either gathered to a frill about the neck or attached to a pointed yoke of jetted lace finished at the neck with a Medici collar of same material. This cape is a fitting accompaniment to a dress with a garniture of lace or is equally effective over a plain costume of gray, tan or mauve.—Chicago Post.

A Funereal Subject.

"Made you an undertaker, has he? That's quite an appropriate word to use in connection with your humor."—Life.

"German Syrup"

Here is something from Mr. Frank A. Hale, proprietor of the De Witt House, Lewiston, and the Tontine Hotel, Brunswick, Me. Hotel men meet the world as it comes and goes, and are not slow in sizing people and things up for what they are worth. He says that he has lost a father and several brothers and sisters from Pulmonary Consumption, and is himself frequently troubled with colds, and he often coughs enough to make him sick at his stomach. Whenever he has taken a cold of this kind he uses Boschee's German Syrup, and it cures him every time. Here is a man who knows the full danger of lung troubles, and would therefore be most particular as to the medicine he used. What is his opinion? Listen! "I use nothing but Boschee's German Syrup, and have advised, I presume, more than a hundred different persons to take it. They agree with me that it is the best cough syrup in the market." ①

—O. L. Billings informs us that two more of his cliants viz W. D. Freeman and Hiram Harrington have been allowed a pension under the new law.

—Presiding Elder, John Stafford will preach on Tuesday evening July 28, at 7:30 P. M. at the M. E. Church in Delano. Come and hear him. Quarterly conference on the same day at 2:30 P. M.

—John O'Leary has purchased a new team and intends going to the prairies to aid in threshing the bountiful harvets and gathering in the golden eagles.

—Farmer's desiring Binding Twine are requested to call an examine the huge pile on hand at Farmer John Coolen's. See his notice in another column.

—M. A. O'Hair's watering trough makes a fine bathing place for the juvenile population in that part of the village. It is in use a greater portion of the time these hot days, and the little folks consider Mr. O'Hair a great public benefactor.

—C. J. Buckley was agreeably surprised on last Saturday, his birth-day by the presentation, by his wife, of a beautiful picture of their little daughter Queene, handsomely framed and mounted on an easel. The picture is a good likeness and helps adorn their snug little home.

—Last Saturday's Fair was a good big one. People and produce in abundance. The usual games in attendance, where the unwary invested their loose change much to the satisfaction of the little smooth old gentlemen that turned the arrows and raked in the piles. Boys if you have a nickle don't try to double it by betting. Work, and get another.

—Don't forget the school meeting on Saturday evening. Every TAX PAYER in the district should be in attendance and take part in the election of trustees.—Eagle.

We capitalize tax payer, simply to show the bent of mind of the editor, and for fear some young men recently arrived at their majority and not yet on the tax list may refrain from voting we would say that this is not made the qualification. Every voter at any election has a right to vote at a school meeting. Even the ladies. Come out and exercise your right. If you want a good school vote for men interested in EDUCATION at least as much as in TAXES.

—The beautiful wooded park in shape of a flatiron lying between River street and 3d street, near L. M. Maxfield's residence, contains about 5 acres of level ground, which, when mowed over a time or two and the trees trimmed up a little, would be nicer than most of the artificial parks in larger places than this, belongs to P. H. Sims and is for sale. The village council should not allow this chance to pass unimproved the purchase of this can be no loosing investment as the land is not likely to be worth less than at present, and when it is thought best to dispose of it the money can be returned to the village treasury. Let's have a park.

—Two of our thrifty neighboring farmers had considerable of a fright on Sunday morning last and were put out to think that they could have no cream for their coffee nor milk to drink for a while. On vsiting the pasture no cows were in sight and as it was the day between Delano and Watertown fair days the conclusion was at once arrived at that some one had taken the cows, between dark and daylight, to market. The boys report was that the fence was in tact and the animals must have been taken out at the gate. Messengers were started toward town who met cattle owner no two who went no further, but, in a business like manner repaired to telegraph headquarters prepared to send over the lines, even if it was Sunday, a message to Minneapolis, to be on the look out for cattle thieves, and if any were caught to hold them, just, until proof could be brought, but concluded to wait as milk hungry no 3 had thought best to investigate a little closer and find out if possible which direction they had traveled, on his arrival at the pasture he was surprised to behold the herds were fattening on the tender grass as usual, having been taking a Sunday mornings nooze in the high weeds in the enclosure.

—Turn out to the Annual School meeting on Saturday evening July 18, and hear the reports of the school officers, as to the number of scholars in attendance the branches taught, and progress made; these should, if they are not, be a part of the reports. Patrons of the common school have a right to know something about the school. Also about the condition of the house, heating and ventilating apparatus, etc. As for our school the financial report appears to be the main, if not the only thing discussed. We admit that the district is badly in debt. Funding and re-funding the school indebtedness seems to be the principal study of some of the financiers. Our Independent District Board of Education when full consists of six men. On Saturday evening four of the places will be vacant and four good men should be selected to fill the vacancies. The two who remain on the board J. A. Brazie and C. W. Ingerson whose terms are not expired, and neither of whom have anyone to send to school, are enough of that kind. Let those to be elected on Saturday evening be chosen from among our citizens that are interested in some other way than through their pocket books to help run the school. People who have children in attendance are usually, more inclined to know what is going on and what is needed to make a good school and more apt to attend to school matters.

—A school officer should be a man who has never been known to sit at the polls with yellow tickets and white tickets and try to oblige votes to be cast as he desired. He should be a man who was never known to straighten himself up in public while running for an office and exclaim "I wish there was a saloon open and I would take a drink law or no law." He should be a man who while acting as a member of the board won't sell school books in violation of the law. He should be a man who tries to be law abiding, and who will take a lively interest in the welfare of the children, as well as to try to save the funds accumulated by taxes for school purposes and make the most judicious use of them. Be careful in your selection. And be on hand to-morrow night to help make the selection.

—Mr. and Mrs. Christian Smith have our thanks for a fine variety and large allowance of good wedding cake. Below are the numerous tokens of appreciation from friends, received by the newly wedded couple, on Tuesday:

Mrs. Roehl, 1 bedspread, pair towels; Mrs. Beckers and daughter, tablespread and napkins; Mr. and Mrs. August, Bonefacius, bedspread; Mr. and Mrs. Brenner, bedspread; Master Carl Hitz and Miss Mamie Hitz, 1 handsome bundle pea cock feathers; Miss Carrie Brenner, cakestand; Mr. Bernard Blatz, 5.00; Mr. Flex Logelin, 5.00; Bride's Parents, handsome purse-money; Miss Fannie Steffes, Minneapolis, 1 silver butter dish; Mr. and Mrs. Dyer and Mr. and Mrs. Probst, 1 china gilt edged teaset; Mr. and Mrs. Hitz, 1 Bohemian glass waterset and tidy; Mr. and Mrs. Chas. County Cullings.

The editor of the Buffalo JOURNAL wants to know how much tax WE pay under the tariff system? Ans. An average of 47½ per cent, or 47 cents and 5 mills for every dollar's worth of imported goods used under the new tariff bill.

The Wright County Agricultural Society has let the job of printing the Fair literature to the BUFFALO JOURNAL. Brother Eaton, will, of course get up something nice.

Wright County's Fair is to be a good one, this year. Minneapolis, St. Paul, Chicago and other big places appear to be having conventions of Christians, politicians and one thing and another, Sioux city is to have a Grand Corn Palace and it will not do for a county like ours to be behind anybody, our villages are not so large but our county contains the wherewith to get up as fine a county fair as there can be anywhere. Everybody save your pumpkins, apples, corn, potatoes onions any thing to help make this a good display and let this be a grand effort.

A Wright County Orator.

The Warren SHEAF gives a glowing account of the celebration of the 4th in Marshall county. In speaking of one of the orators it has this to say about a man most of you will remember to have heard deliver a fine Memorial oration a year ago last May, in the city hall at this place:

"Hon. C. M. King, the silver tongued orator of Annandale, Wright Co., was introduced. He is a most finished speaker, and his oration, which was delivered without preparation, was a most happy effort—pure in diction, patriotic in sentiment and eloquent in delivery. In beautiful words he portrayed the growth and advancement of civilization from the Dark Continent to the shores of the Mediterranean, to England and finally to the Western Continent. We wish we could publish the speech in full."

Now comes Prof. Wiggins with a new weather theory, submitting that telephone wires and wire fences are the cause of drought. They get in the way of rain clouds and break them all up. It would seem to the common mind that any rain cloud that got so low down as a barb-wire fence ought to be able to sink a few feet lower and go under. May be Prof. Wiggins has not reflected that wire fences over half a mile high are very unusual.—The Times and Register.

The Principles of Jefferson.

Although in his time not called "a Democrat," yet the leader of what was then known as the Republican party, contending against Federal or strong government party, Thomas Jefferson was perhaps one of the best expounders of those principles now held by the Democratic party among all of those Revolutionary sages.

In his writings and official messages as President we find the most frequent allusions to and rigid application of them in the administration of public affairs, so that he has been called "the father of the Democratic party." It was peculiarly appropriate that he should do so, because, though early in the history of our Government yet, anti-democratic principles were already slowly creeping into the Administration of the elder Adams, so that it required vigorous opposition and determined application to bring the Government back once more to be administered in accordance with those pure principles of a representative democratic government.

In his inaugural address delivered to Congress on March 4th, 1801, the commencement as well of a new century as of a new era in our government, President Jefferson announced the following fundamental doctrines of democracy, which, he said, he deemed essential principles of our Government, which should guide him in its administration. He compressed them within the smallest possible compass, stating only the general principles, but not all their limitations:—

FIRST. Equal and exact justice to all men of whatever State or persuasion, religious or political.

SECOND. Peace, commerce, and honest friendship with all nations; entangling alliance with none.

THIRD. The support of the State governments in all their rights as the most competent administrators of our domestic concerns and the surest bulwarks against anti-republican tendencies.

FOURTH. The preservation of the General Government in its whole constitutional vigor as the sheet anchor of our peace at home and safety abroad.

FIFTH. A jealous care of the right of election by the people, a mild and safe corrective of abuses, which are lopped by the sword of revolution where peacable means are unprovided.

SIXTH. Absolute acquiescence in the decisions of the majority, the vital principles of republics, from which is no appeal but to force the vital principle and immediate parent of despotism.

SEVENTH. A well-disciplined militia, our best reliance in peace, and for the first moments of war, till regulars may relieve them.

EIGHTH. The supremacy of the civil over the military authority.

NINTH. Economy in the public expenses, that labor may be lightly burdened.

TENTH. The honest payment of our debts and the sacred preservation of the public faith.

ELEVENTH. Encouragement of agriculture, and of commerce as its handmaid.

TWELFTH. The diffusion of information and arraignment of all abuses at the bar of public reason.

THIRTEENTH. Freedom of religion.

FOURTEENTH. Freedom of the Press.

FIFTEENTH. Freedom of the person under the protection of the habeas corpus.

SIXTEENTH. Trial by juries impartially selected.

"These principles," said Jefferson, "form the bright constellation which has gone before us and guided our steps through the age of revolution and reformation. The wisdom of our sages and the blood of our heroes have been devoted to their attainment. They should be the creed of our political faith, the text of civic instruction, the touchstone by which to try the services of those we trust; and should we wander from them in moments of error or alarm, let us hasten to retrace our steps and to regain the road which alone leads to peace, liberty and safety."

It is because Democrats believe every one of those fundamental principles to be true that they are Democrats.

MARRIED.

SMITH, CRAMER, At the St. Peter's Church, in Delano on Tuesday, July 14, Mr. Christian Smith of Minneapolis and Mrs. Louisa A. Cramer of Delano.

BORN.

BUCKLEY, In Delano, on Thursday July 16, to Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Buckley, a son.

Uncle Sam's Bread.

The state department reports, as to the French crops, confirm the statements as to a shortage of from 80,000,000 to 100,000,000 bushels of wheat and a probably larger deficiency throughout Europe than the gram men there are ready to admit.

Europe is not quick to proclaim crop deficiencies, because buyers of breadstuffs wish to make the best bargains they can before prices go up. Already a large amount of wheat has been bought in this country for France and the probability is that the aggregate European demand will take all our surplus, whatever that may be. The wheat crop is estimated at from 500,000,000 to 550,000,000 bushels and the surplus will probably not exceed 160,000,000 bushels. Bradstreet's generally reliable estimates show the visible and invisible stocks of wheat in this country on July 1 to have been 33,025,000 bushels, or 23,000,000 bushels less than the quantity a year ago, and half the aggregate two years ago. The indications are that we have the smallest reserve stocks in a period of nine years, so that the old wheat carried over into the new crop year, will not be a formidable quantity, and higher prices cannot but be the result after the new crop begins to move and the aggregate of the world's crop is definitely accertained.

It is true Europe has been preparing for her shortage, for her stocks available on July 1 were 9,000,000 bushels larger than on January 1, 1891, which is a direct reversal of the conditions a year ago. The best European authorities assert that, although Europe has been importing more wheat than usual, France having engaged 30,000,000 bushels, to be delivered this fall, they will still have to buy the excess, many millions of quarters more than were wanted last season.

Russia is not in a condition to meet much of this demand. India cannot begin to supply it, and the Australian available stocks are not above the average, while the Argentine is not likely to figure as a factor of supply this year.

The fact is, Australia, or rather, Australasia, does not loom up at all as a dangerous competitor of this country as yet. Only South Australia, Victoria and New Zealand have so far been able to produce wheat enough for home consumption, while New South Wales, Queensland, Western Australia and Tasmania have been large importers of wheat and flour. Victoria and New Zealand have exported some wheat. The entire wheat product of Australasia is about 43,000,000 bushels, and the largest average has been 10.98 bushels per acre. The countries included in Australasia cannot figure very conspicuously as factors of supply for the present European deficiency

The main dependence of Europe is on this country. And in September and October that dependence will make itself felt.—Minneapolis Journal.

The annual school meetings in the districts of the state will be held next Saturday. Reports of officers will be read, officers will be elected by ballot and ways and means for increasing local school funds will be considered. It should be remembered that the last legislature amended the school law so that districts will be aided by the state fund only in proportion to the measure of self-help determined upon. This is a good arrangement as it is likely to prove a stimulus to local exertion. There ought not to be in any school district in this state poor school accommodations and half-starved teachers wrestling with low salaries. Parsimony in school matters is little short of criminal.—Minneapolis Journal.

THE COW-BELL.

(A CUT BOY'S CONCLUSION.)

Beneath the breezy bough
The cow
Is now a happy rover
Adown the sloping dell
A bell
She's ringing in the clover.

It truly puzzles me
To see
Just why she should be swinging
That bell that ever keeps
The deeps
Of daisy-land a-ringing.

It goes the whole day long
Ding-dong,
And makes my nerves unsteady;
I think she rings that bell
To tell
Her calf that dinner's ready.

War on the Alliance.

TOPEKA, Kan., July 13.—The Democratic editors who have been holding a meeting here have decided to prepare an address to the people of Kansas, and also warn the Democrats of the nation against the Farmers' Alliance. A committee was appointed to draft an address, and another meeting provided for July 27, at which time the committee will report. In the meanwhile the Democratic editors will begin a systematic and determined warfare on the Alliance.—Globe.

BRILLIANTS.

FROM THE TOLEDO BLADE.

What torment's equal to the grief of mind
And pining anguish hid in gentle heart,
That only feeds itself with thought unkind,
And nourishes its own consuming smart,
—[Spenser.

Let blushes dwell i' the country—
* * * Strike thou my forehead into dauntless marble,
Mine eyes to steady sapphire. Turn my visage;
And if I must needs glow, let me blush inwards.
[Cyril Tourneur, "Revenger's Tragedy."

The boast of heraldry, the pomp of power
And all that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave,
Await alike the inevitable hour;
The paths of glory lead but to the grave.
—[Thomas Gray.

Faithfulness in the humblest part
Is better at least than proud success;
And patience and love in a chastened heart
Are pearls more precious than happiness;
And in the morning when we shall wake
To the spring-time freshness of youth again,
All troubles will seem but a flying flake,
And lifelong sorrow a breath on the pane.

I shot an arrow in the air:
It fell to earth, I knew not where;
For, so swiftly it flew, the sight
Could not follow it in its flight.

I breathed a song into the air;
It fell to earth, I knew not where;
For who has sight so keen and strong
That it can follow the flight of song?

Long, long afterwards, in an oak,
I found the arrow still unbroke;
And the song, from beginning to end,
I found again in the heart of a friend.
—[Longfellow.

Oh, wondrous moment; when Success
To ardent effort yields her bride,
And joyous from the altar's side,
They pass to perfect happiness.

The midnight anguish is forgot;
The vigil hour, the weary year,
Dismissed from memory's atmosphere,
Depart, and are remembered not.

They walk to meet the golden west;
Across they pass the purple hills;
And where eternal Summer spills
Her urns of sunshine, dwell at rest.
—[W. H. Perkins.

OF THE SONG OF THE SEA

The endless circle of the shores of years,
O singing sea, dost thou fill with this song
Whose score is written on thy smallest shell,
On the wide land and on the distant wood,
And on the men and women of the town,
And on me, while I sit down at thy feet,
And comment on the changing of thy face
With question of its secret, which is mine
And all the world's eluding all and thee,
Forever and forever evermore,
The while thy song keeps evermore this strain.
—[Frank Young.

TO MY SON.

Night to the burning desert,
Rain to the withering earth,
Land to the helpless drowning,
Sight to the blind from birth,—

So to me proves thy presence,
So thy love, thy kiss;
Sorrow and darkness vanish,
Dawns life's fairest bliss!

Roses bloom in the desert,
Rivers replenished earth;
God's love saves the despairing—
Love is God's latest birth!
—[May Whitney Emerson.

A Day With the Nation's Editors.

Last week the National Editorial Association met at St. Paul, and held their Seventh Annual meeting. On Wednesday, the 15th inst. it was our fortune to be present. The meeting was called to order by President Stevens of Missouri, a very able presiding officer. The opera house in which the meetings were held was nicely arranged for the occasion. Flowers, flags, mottoes and pictures helped make the room look cheerful. The one thing striking us most forcibly on entering the room, was the names of the different States and Territories of this our great country, plainly printed on cards and tacked up where they were very conspiucous giving notice to all that, Here we are. Here we can be found; representatives of our particular part of this great Union. Labels were up for all, from Maine to California, and from Washington to Florida. From Rhode Island to Texas. From the oldest to the youngest. The representatives came from the great dailies of our largest cities and from the weekly of the country towns from all the branches of the business. Politics, religions, business every thing was represented. To think that one is in the room with such people, the thinkers and writers of the nation. The makers of President, the destroyers of many men's hopes and chances in life is certainly awe inspiring. After calling the meeting to order the President introduced Mr. J. Scott, of the Chicago Herald, who gave us the inside workings and the outside too, for that matter of "Metropoliton Dailies." Mr. Scott is a very able talker and knows just what to tell a lot of editors on such an occasion that will be of use to them when they go to their homes and their own offices. After him came Mr. Ochs of the Chattanooga Times who told us how to run a small daily in a small town, and how he had brought the Chattanooga Times up from chaos to its present formidable place among the smaller Dailies of the country. After these and several other speeches among them one from the President of the Canadian Editorial Society who was a good talker, and gave his views on annexation of Canada to the United States as not likely to happen. Taking the grounds that in the near future Canada would sever the golden cord that bound her to the mother country when he hoped this greatest and grandest nation in many respects on the earth would welcome Canada, the free and independent, among the nations of the earth. An adjournment for dinner was taken when all hied themselves to the Union depot and got aboard the train on the St. P. M. C. R'y. for Fort Snelling making a short stop at Mendota the old historic spot, where early settlers lived. Arriving at Fort Snelling the train load of editors and their ladies from all over the United States climbed the wooden stairs which were much easilier climbed than they on first sight looked to be. The grounds and buildings were closely investigated and many climbed to the roof of the highest building on the ground and took a look at the surrounding country for miles. Some of the older parts of this old fort where many of Minnesota's noblest sons first doned their blue and fell into line and come to a shouider arms, is being removed. After the fort was thoroughly examined the crowd retraced its steps to the train and soon arrived at that spot made famous by Longfellow's Hiawatha, and as the crowd gathered below the falls exclamations of every kind could be heard from the witty editors some wanted to know "is that all" some thought "that was grand," some "that" "up the mill creek they could find as good" some that "when the poet wrote there must have been water" that "that the poet must have had something stronger than water when he wrote" "that he had never been there" but on the whole these remarks seemed to be in a jocular strain and it was conceded that the scenery was sufficient to warrant one of America's first poets a subject. At Minneha we left the excursion train and proceeded by electric motor to the Saw dust city where we took the train for home, fully satisfied that we had put in the day to our enjoyment and instruction.
